This article from the N. Y. Times is typical of the amazing stories, now being printed all over America, telling of what's happening at M-G-M's Miracle Studios.

IN THE METRO-GOLDWYN STUDIOS

EIGHTEEN pictures are currently in various stages of production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, with twelve more now being prepared for the cameras. These figures represent a new high for production activity at this company's picture plant over the course of the past three and a half years.

Among the photoplays now nearing completion on the Culver City lot are "Dinner at Eight," in which Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, John and Lionel Barrymore, Jean Harlow, Lee Tracy, Billie Burke and Edmund Lowe have leading rôles, and "Night Flight," with a cast headed by Clark Gable, Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery and the same two Barrymore brothers. At the present time most of the players in both of these productions have been set free to work in other stories, and practically all of them have gone on with new rôles without even a temporary breathing spell. Lionel Barrymore, for example, set off with the King Vidor troupe doing "Stranger's Return" on location in Eastern California two hours after he had made his final sequence for "Night Flight," while Helen Hayes and Robert Montgomery traveled back and forth from the sets of "Night Flight" and "Another Language" for several days in order that the screen adaptation of Rose Franken's Broadway play might be put in production on schedule.

"Tugboat Annie."

"Tugboat Annie" is now being made on location in and around Seattle to conform with the original locales described in the magazine stories on which the film is based. Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery, who played together in "Min and Bill," have leading rôles in this photoplay.

"Eskimo" is nearing completion after twelve months of camera work in the Arctic and at the home studios. W. S. Van Dyke, who made "White Shadows in the South Seas" and "Trader Horn," is director of this film, with a cast made up almost entirely of natives.

Still another current location picture is being made in the Louisiana bayou country, where Tod Browning, who directed the majority of the late Lon Chaney's films, is doing an original adventure story.

"Viva Villa" is a new film adapted from Edgcumb Pynchon's biographical narrative of the noted Mexican bandit, while "Hold Your Man" is a new vehicle for Clark Gable and Jean Harlow. "Tarzan and his Mate" is a Johnny Weissmuller sequel to the earlier "Tarzan the Ape Man," and "Bombshell" is a new Lee Tracy production with a press agent angle.

"Strange Rhapsody" is based on Alexander Hunyardi's Hungarian play, with Nils Asther and Kay Francis. Greta Garbo is back at the Coast studios after an absence of nearly a year, and has been busy with final details of her new production, which will have a Swedish background.

Although Ramon Novarro and Jeanette MacDonald have not yet returned from their present European trips to assume the leading rôles, "The Cat and the Fiddle" has been placed in production at the Coast, with atmospheric scenes already under way. Another musical now being made at Culver City is "The Hollywood Revue of 1933," which has a varied roster of prominent names and music by Rodgers and Hart, Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed.

Two more musical films will follow in the near future. These are "The Big Liar," in which Jack Pearl, Jimmy Durante and Stuart Erwin will be seen, and an untitled story in which Ed Wynn will have the principal role.

The line-up of productions soon to be launched at the studios includes the Pulitzer Prize novel, "Laughing Boy"; Charles Morgan's novel, "The Fountain"; Robert E. Sherwood's play, "The Road to Rome," and the S. N. Behrman comedy, "Biography." These properties are supplemented by "Soviet," a story with a Russian background; "The Late Christopher Bean," which will present Marie Dressler and Lionel Barrymore; "La Tendresse," in which Norma Shearer will be featured, and a musical version of "The Garden of Allah." Two stories with somewhat similar titles but of widely different character are "The Education of a Princess," based on the autobiographical story of the Grand Duchess Marie, and "The Bogus Prince," an adaptation of Alva Johnston's New Yorker stories dealing with the spurious "Prince Michael Romanoff" and his adventures.

Let's be Simple

AS various lines of information, official and unofficial, become available it is made clear that the motion picture industry, just now agog with the formulation of a code of practise and operation under the Industrial Recovery Act, is still going to have to run itself. For a few days the chatter and the speculations seemed to anticipate that the government, or the Administration, was suspected of having a notion of taking over this, and all other industries.

It is plain enough now that the endeavors of the movement now being administered by General Hugh Johnson are aimed chiefly at getting some work for the unemployed to do, to insure that these workers will be paid a living wage, and that industries in general be, on the one hand, prevented from such hysterias as under cost selling, and on the other hand permitted and empowered to take reasonable steps for effectual operation, even if in some instances those steps do not precisely square with older codes of anti-trust statutes.

The hot breath of "nationalization a la Soviet" is not on the back of American industry or the motion picture. The Administration is obviously trying to make good with the voters, but with no shortsighted notion of crippling the bird of industry which lays the golden eggs of payroll and profit.

In some quarters the code-makers of the movies have betrayed slight attacks of the jitters, not thereby reflecting any too much credit on themselves or glory in the inferences which are to be drawn from the sense of guilt betrayed by the confessions of their provisos for future good conduct.

It would be very easy indeed to formulate a code of eminent practicality in about five minutes. It would read something like this: "We will produce, distribute and exhibit motion pictures, of average American decency, at costs and subsequent selling prices consistent with the requirements of reasonable salaries in all departments and reasonable profits on the investments involved. We will be on the level with each other all the time and with the public as much as practical." Of course a code like that would presume a realization that it is smart to be simple, and it would give the lawyers and industry politicians very little to do.

All the rules, laws and codes in the world cannot be a substitute for an honest intent.

It would seem to be possible, when the code builders get around to it, to devote their attentions to basic elements of practise, with perhaps a little less emphasis on the presumptions of misconduct, and arrive at the commonsense of a cooperative attitude and cooperative methods between all the parties at interest in the industry. The motion picture cannot make money out of itself any longer. It will be necessary to depend entirely on the box office. Excellent opportunity is now presented to formulate lines of procedure by which the industry will have the backing, the power and the authority of the government in the elimination of many abuses. But the beneficiaries of those abuses cannot at this time be expected to vote for the plan at the expense of any portion of their gains.

To be sure, no one in this industry is so naïve as to expect that any of the participants in the code drafting activities will here suddenly cease to be the special representatives of the special interests with which they have been identified, but it is not unreasonable to expect and demand that for once producer, distributor, exhibitor, artist and artisan admit the rights of the others while contending for their own.

It may be emphatically stated that the whole of and all factions and factors of the industry will be heard and will have their influence upon the code under which the industry will be asked to operate itself. It may be set down now that any endeavors to dictate elements of the code for special interest cannot long prevail.

The voices will all be heard—either within the industry's current councils—or in Washington. A sensible course would be to let all the talking be done in the industry.

Talking in Washington has a disagreeable way of getting far out of hand and contributing nothing at all to the general public esteem of this industry, which needs that same general public esteem today just a little more than it has ever needed it before.

Fullest expression and the most complete airing of all that anybody in the industry has to say about a code of practice will conduce to a wholesome final result. Conspiracies of silence and endeavors at dictation without representation will further no proper cause, and in fact will ultimately further no improper cause either. The opportunity to "put something over" is not a part of the Administration's program for any industry. There is the opportunity to square off in an effort to get the public dollar back to the box office and distribute it to those who earn it.

"VISITORS" TO PARIS

Shivers, chills have lately coursed up and down the spines of French film players, as they take sharp note of the unusual numbers of American lesser luminaries of Hollywood, "visiting" Paris. In jeopardy French performers see their places, claiming the Americans "designing job hunters." Point to the fear comes from Paris-Soir, Paris newspaper, recalling recent remarks of MGM's Irving Thalberg, en passant through the capital: "Once and for all Hollywood is finished with paying fantastic salaries. Production managers . . . realize they can supply the popular demand for finished acting . . . at much smaller costs and justifiable economy . . ." Two reasons impel French cinema stars to sleepless nights: French audiences prefer the Hollywood brand of performance; "dubbing" of French dialogue in American films has reached near to perfection's peak vocally, no mechanical difficulties preventing the use of American players in French pictures. Perhaps uncalled for, the fright is nonetheless real in the mind of the French player. . . .

ACADEMY REVAMPED

Aimed at freedom from the (to some) malodorous taint of producer-subsidization is that feature of the new constitution and by-laws of the motion picture's far-reaching Academy of Arts and Sciences which provides that members' fees are to be held in a special research fund, divorced from operating revenue. More democratic rule also characterizes the new governing principles, already run the gantlet of legal investigation, now set for the yes or no of the Academy's sundry branches. . . .

ANCIENT ORDINANCE

Deep into history delved the city fathers of Hollywood, there unearthed an ancient ordinance this week, enforced it through the board of billing and safety, requiring theatre owners to remove all signs above or below the essential marquee. Already to 120 business men have gone orders to remove signs. To arms are springing local independent theatre owners, Fox West Coast, poster companies whose field is thus curtailed, planning a fight to eradicate the ancient edict. . . .

SEEING STARS

Long popular with the hoi-polloi of cinema-attendants of Greater New York has been the star rating system employed by the New York Daily News in evaluating motion pictures for its avid readers. Not disturbed to any extent were home office advertising-publicity chieftains by the system—until recently, when they arose, demanded its elimination as pre-prejudicial, in that the reader governed his film-going by stars, not reviews. Once advertising concocters agreed not to use the News star valuations in selling—until someone drew maximum (four stars). The smart News polled its readers, found overwhelming demand for continuation, despite repetitious balloting. Planned retaliation, advertisements in which concocters give themselves stars, innumerable stars, applying to the News system the devastating "reductio ad absurdum," thus laughing it out of existence. . . .

SCREEN - BLACKBOARD

To the host of testimony, pro and con, which in recent years has been compiled via arduous study relative to the yes or no of the value of the screen in the classroom, last week was added that of Dr. Varney C. Arnspiger, of Columbia University's Teacher's College. Wide was his field, taking into his test tubes 2,500 pupils in 64 different classrooms in schools of Schenectady, Camden, Elizabeth, Baltimore, in three states. Checked were pupils taught with the aid of films against those under ordinary instruction, in music and natural science. "Distinct contributions to learning," was Dr. Arnspiger's conclusion, noting the extent of superiority for all cities combined as ranging from 20 to 60 per cent. Into the controversial ledger goes one more score for the film as a teacher's first assistant. . . .

PROUD CACKLE

Much in the fashion of the barnyard inhabitant who has just produced an unusual egg, did RKO's Radio City theatres (Music Hall, Roxy) find voice in a publicity cackle of pride and joy last week as, on Thursday last, a girl stepped to the box office, there purchased what is recorded as the 4,000,000th admission to Radio City, the 4,000,000 having reference to both houses. Roundly boastful was the organization, noting the theatres open less than six months, crediting the Music Hall with 2,994,331, the Roxy with 1,005,369. Comparisons were drawn with New York's Museums of Art, Natural History, with the Aquarium, with the Bronx Zoo. . . .

SAD RECEIVERS

Completely saddened, sharply struck in the pocketbook last week were receivers Samuel I. Rosenman, George W. Alger, Philip J. Dunn, of New York's tumultuous projectionists' union, Local 306. From the appellate division of New York's supreme court came emphatic decision that, since that receivership was declared illegal, the receivers are entitled to no fees, nor are their attorneys. Not enough was the loss of an expected $7,500 allowance and $3,000 counsel fees, but adding insult to injury, the gentlemen discovered the $909 spent during their brief receivership must come from their own collective pocket. To William C. Elliott, international union president, through whom the receivership was voided, the three luckless receivers may give thanks for their bad bargain. . . .

QUIET CONCLAVE

Whispered from Hollywood is word of a secret meeting, en masse, the conclave to gather in the Beverly-Wilshire Hotel, taking the form of a direct, sharp reaction to Warner president Harry M. Warner's recent crackling denunciation of high salaries, says the whisper. Calling the clan is a group representative of various studio branches, under the leadership of Frank Woods and Al Cohn. . . .

WITHOUT ESCORT

Groping in darkened theatres, searching for unoccupied seats, the Canadian picture-going public will have no protection of the civil law of the land should they stumble, fall, incur injuries, alleged or otherwise. Thus indicated Judge E. J. Daly in Ottawa Civil Court last week, ruling in a damage suit that theatres were in no way legally obliged to supply ushers. Disappointed was Miss Rose St. Amant, suing the Francais theatre. So firmly convinced was Judge Daly of his contention that when the jury brought in a $100 verdict he refused it, threw out the case. . . .

NEW SEASON OPENS WITH INCREASE IN PRODUCT FROM FIVE COMPANIES

Plans of MGM, Paramount, Radio, Universal and Fox-Educational Call for 13 More Features and 29 Additional Shorts

The distribution branch of the motion picture industry is looking up. Half of the large companies this week officially launched their 1933-34 campaigns for merchandising, determined to obtain wider representation on the screens of the nation. Developments were:

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Radio, Universal and Fox-Educational announced 1933-34 product to salesmen in the field.

First five announcements listed 257 features, 591 shorts, an increase of 13 features and 29 shorts over 1932-33; thus refuting reports of curtailment.

Distributors were determined to expand sales activities; some already have decided upon enlarged sales forces in order to cover the decentralized theatre movement.

Star names and important novels, books and plays will be large factors in new releases.

Westerns and serials are practically eliminated, Universal being virtually the only distributor to engage in such production.

Forty per cent of all feature schedules to be withheld from announcement in order to allow for selection of timely subjects later.

Distributors awaiting completion of distribution code before finally determining policies.

The new sales season, postponed two months because of the banking situation early in the spring, officially started Monday morning, when Paramount, MGM and Radio opened annual conventions to outline to salesmen complete details of the product. Subsequently, Fox-Educational and Universal started their conferences, signaling one of the keenest sales competitions ever engaged, due to two factors: the breakdown of mass film buying in New York, in favor of local buying by new factors who have developed out of the decentralized theatre movement, and, secondly, a feeling of confidence that the autumn will bring a general trade revival. The distributors are prepared to act accordingly.

Product announced this week by the five companies which were in convention, and a comparison with 1932-33 releases, follow:

	1932-33					1933-34

a All Educational releases.
b 88 Educationals, 36 Fox.
c 66 Educationals, 26 Fox.

The increase in production schedules of both short subjects and features is of double significance, indicating confidence in the upward swing, and the decision to present a wider diversity to the hundreds of new film buyers.

When Columbia, United Artists and Warner Brothers make known their feature schedules, within a week, the total releases for 1933-34 from the eight large distributors will approximate 400. Columbia, United Artists and Warners probably will announce 48, 26 and 60 features, respectively.

Universal's Expansion Greatest

An increase of 16 in feature releases places Universal atop the list of those expanding schedules. Fox will have about two additional, Paramount five, Metro has a total identical with the current season, while Radio lowered its figure by ten, eliminating westerns.

Universal will be the only large company marketing serials.

There is an increase of 29 in the total number of short subjects set for 1933-34. Two-reelers drop from 261 to 238, but single reels rise from 301 to 353.

Further indications of the new spirit in distribution was the announcement this week by United Artists, appearing as an advertisement, which said in part: "Congratulations to every company, preparing for the good times that are bound to come. . . . "All of them sincerely working toward the recovery of the motion picture business and our share of national prosperity. United Artists is working with them." . . .

Star Names a Factor

That distributors will concentrate considerably on star values was indicated. Every company, too, has lined up widely read books and novels and popularized plays. Hollywood was at work this week filming some 60 features, 10 per cent more than at this time in previous seasons. Practically all companies plan at least one outstanding musical. Drama and novelty themes predominate.

Practically every company has purposely withheld a number of feature selections in order to select the most timely subjects. Forty per cent of all pictures scheduled by Metro, Paramount, Radio and Universal have not been determined. This departure is expected to reduce substitution difficulties. The compilation which follows indicates the extent of the new policy:

	Features Scheduled	Definitely Selected	No. Not Selected
MGM	48	29	19
Para.	65	51	14
Radio	52	23	29
Universal	52*	23	19
Totals	207	126	81

(*) Includes six westerns.

While distribution executives were outlining product, the executive branches were advancing the formulation of a code of distribution to conform with the National Industrial Recovery Act. Until such a code is adopted, determination of many sales policies must be held in abeyance. Exhibitors, too, are drafting a code.

Metro Policy Unchanged

The MGM feature program of 48 pictures, outlined this week by Felix F. Feist, general sales manager, indicated the company will continue to concentrate heavily on starring personalities in popularized novels and plays.

Salesmen heard Mr. Feist outline the details of 29 of them at the two sales conventions in Detroit Monday and Tuesday, and Kansas City Wednesday and Thursday. The company has decided on six specials, and two road shows, "Dinner at Eight" and "Eskimo." The specials are "Hollywood Party," "Dark to Dawn," "Soviet," "Tarzan and His Mate," an untitled Dressler feature, and "Two Thieves," to star Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery. Plans also call for 56 two-reelers and 49 one-reel.

Universal Alone Continues with Westerns and Serials; 40 Per Cent of Subjects Left Open for Timely Selection Later

Three new short series will be released next season and Hal Roach again will contribute the bulk of one and two-reel product.

In Chicago, en route from Detroit to Kansas City, Mr. Feist made clear that MGM will augment its sales force and will re-employ salesmen necessarily dropped during the depression.

Mr. Feist also indicated recognition of the highly important problem of selling product to theatre booking combinations, which he characterized as "entirely unnecessary," and "not constructive."

Metro Schedule Increased

While the company's feature program is numerically identical with 1932-33, the short subject lineup will be greater by 10 two-reelers and 6 one-reelers.

It is understood that Metro has decided to curtail its percentage playing activities, releasing only eight on percentage next season, as compared with 14. The eight will probably include the six specials and two roadshows. At the home office it was said no definite policy for the two roadshow attractions had been determined. They may be marketed on special contracts.

Mr. Feist said at Detroit that the production budget would represent some $20,000,000. He said general business conditions are better.

Paramount Widens Marketing Activities

The management at Paramount is confident the autumn will bring a general trade revival. The first step, made known at the first of three regional sales conventions, embraces an enlarged production schedule and the second includes plans to get to market quickly with bulk feature material. The convention, held at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, will be followed by others in Chicago and Los Angeles.

With 60 features this season, the company will have 65 in 1933-34. The short subject total will be nearly identical, but instead of 101 two-reel and 30 one-reel subjects, there will be 101 one-reelers and only 24 in two-reels. Mack Sennett made most of this season's two-reel series. This contract was not renewed. Paramount News will continue to distribute 104 issues, twice weekly.

George J. Schaefer, general manager in charge of distribution, on Tuesday, outlined nearly two-thirds of the entire 1933-34 feature schedule and indicated 19 productions will be ready for the first quarter, pointing to an immediate campaign.

Box office stars like Chevalier, Dietrich, the Marx Brothers, Sylvia Sidney, W. C. Fields, Fredric March, Jack Oakie, George Raft, Mae West and others are to be headlined in the new product. In most releases, however, the company will concentrate on all-star support.

The second convention opens Thursday at Chicago, and the third in Los Angeles next Wednesday.

22 from Rogers, Schulberg, DeMille

The first tangible results of Paramount's decentralized production idea will come forth with a minimum of 22 productions from independent producers. Charles R. Rogers will make ten in the new season; B. P. Schulberg is set for eight, Cecil B. DeMille, four.

Emerging from a maze of corporate difficulties which crystallized into complete decentralization of its theatre system. Paramount is prepared for the first time to proceed without the necessity of bank loans to finance new studio activities. It will pay for filming out of current earnings. Mr. Schaefer said the business position of the corporation is stronger, and morale at its highest point in several seasons.

He pointed out that a survey of 20 industries, made by Fred LeRoy, industrial statistician, revealed that Paramount's paid-up deliveries for the quarter ending June 1 ranked the company first with a 95 per cent rating.

Newsreel bookings were at a high point, said Mr. Schaefer, with their grosses exceeding those of any competitors.

Regarding Percentage Bookings

It was learned that Paramount was considering a flexible selling policy. Both percentages and flat rentals will be acceptable, it was said. Individual district and branch managers will be entrusted with determining policy more than ever before. However, the company was said to favor flat rentals in order to obtain wider gross representation, and to obtain quick cash for merchandising expenses.

Another departure was the decision to book its specials into key city first-run theatres before any are shown in small towns.

Mr. Schaefer sounded the death-knell of the one-man, one-idea home office method of exploitation. Under the supervision of John C. Flinn, in charge of Paramount exploitation, the Paramount campaigns will be started at the time the script is completed, carried down through production and will be actively functioning at the time the picture is released.

Paramount Week is set for September 3 to 9.

Recording Charges To Continue

There will be no change in recording charges, he advised the group. He pointed out that music on film had resulted in a tremendous saving of overhead to the theatre owner.

Details on sales policies and on quotas were given Tuesday to branch and district managers by J. J. Unger. Knox Haddow discussed the different forms of contracts and booking details with the booking managers. Sam Dembow, Publix executive, said next season looks like a "buyers' market."

Radio's 52 Features and 106 Shorts

Elimination of western features and a flexible production lineup were the important decisions made known by Radio in New York Monday, at the first of three regional sales conventions. The others will be in Chicago and San Francisco. The 52 features and 106 shorts will be headed by a group of nine special productions.

To allow for timely subjects later, only 23 features have been definitely set. In these will be starred, among others, John and Lionel Barrymore, Katharine Hepburn, Constance and Joan Bennett, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Dolores Del Rio, Richard Dix, Irene Dunne, Leslie Howard, Walter Huston, Francis Lederer, Zasu Pitts, Ginger Rogers, Wheeler and Woolsey.

Lou Brock and Van Beuren Corporation will again produce most of Radio's shorts. There will be as many shorts released next season as in 1932-33, but features have been reduced by ten. Culbertson's series heads the shorts group.

The specials are: a Whitney-Vanderbilt technicolor production; "Ann Vickers"; a Frank Buck sequel to "Bring 'em Back Alive"; "Flying Down to Rio"; Somerset Maugham's "Of Human Bondage"; "Son of Kong," a "King Kong" sequel; "Long Lost Father"; "Green Mansions."

Frank O'Heron promised the conventioners "consistent product that will reflect popular name appeal and story values enhanced through economies effected in other branches of production." In line with this, the company will build a veritable city of permanent exterior sets on the 40 acres of the Pathe studio in Culver City.

Universal Increases Schedule

One of the most notable increases, proportionately, in feature and short subject product will be made by Universal, which at the first of two regional conventions, in Chicago on Thursday, will announce 42 features, 111 shorts, and a newsreel. Among the features, ten more than this season, are two road shows, "Blossom Time" and "Only Yesterday." There will be six westerns and about an equal number of special. Shorts are divided into 52 two-reelers and 59 singles.

Features will be produced by John M. Stahl, Edward Sedgwick, Bryan Foy and others. Carl Laemmle was reported this week to be negotiating with Edward H. Griffith to make two of the specials.

Announcing the program, Carl Laemmle said, "I am deliberately omitting 13 pictures, (exclusive of the six western, "U" will announce titles of 23 out of 36), simply because I am convinced this business has become more than ever a matter of timeliness." This elasticity is entirely to the benefit of exhibitors, he said.

"I see plenty of fair weather and prosperity ahead for this country and this industry," he added.

Universal is virtually the only large company which will continue to release western features. The company's officials said it "has never lost its faith in western pictures."

Fifty on Fox Schedule

Sidney R. Kent and other officials of Fox Film will start the company's new selling season Thursday at Atlantic City, where some 225 from home office and field will assemble at the Ambassador hotel for three days. John D. Clark, general manager of distribution, will outline details of approximately 50 features. In addition, Fox will distribute the usual 104 issues of Fox Movietone News and 26 one-reel Movietone Magic Carpet subjects.

Following discussion of the Fox product, E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, which distributes through Fox, will detail the material in the 52 two-reel and 66 single reels coming from his company. Last year, Fox released 48 features and 36 Magic Carpets; Educational had 46 two-reelers and 88 singles.

The program for Thursday includes talks by Clayton Sheehan, general foreign manager; E W. Hammons; Truman H. Talley, vice-president of Fox Movietone News, and W. J. Kupper, western divisional sales manager. In the afternoon, Mr. Clark will announce the new pictures.

Charles E. McCarthy, director of advertising and publicity, will speak Friday, followed by E. C. Grainger, eastern division manager, and Herman Wobber, Pacific coast representative.

At the concluding sessions Saturday, Sidney R. Kent, president, will discuss Fox purposes and plans for the new season, followed by W. C. Michel, executive vice-president, and Spyros Skouras, who operates Fox theatres.

136 Salesmen on Hand

Besides those already mentioned, home office executives in attendance will include Sydney Towell, D. A. Doran, Felix Jenkins, Percy Heiliger, George Skouras and E. L. Alperson. In addition to Mr. McCarthy, advertising and publicity representatives will be Gabe S. Yorke, Earl W. Wingart, Arch Reeve, Lee Balsly, Carl Moss, Joel Swenson, C. N. Odell, Leonard Gaynor, A. O. Dillenbeck, P. J. Baietti, W. H. Schneider, C. A. Hill and Elliott McManus.

Messrs. Clark, Grainger and Kupper will head a home office sales delegation which includes William Sussman, Jack Sichelman, N. B. Finkler, E. H. Collins, Roger Ferri, Clinton S. Dow, Jack Bloom, Irving Lincer and Deon DeTitte.

The foreign department, besides Clayton Sheehan, will be represented by Irving Maas and M. L. Ahern.

From Educational Pictures, 12 New York representatives will attend, headed by Mr. Hammons, and including: J. H. Skirball, S. R. Edwards, Harvey Day, J. J. Scully, David Dubin, G. C. Blumenthal, Joseph Kaliski, Gordon White, H. R. Skirboll, J. A. Bachman, Harlan Starr.

One hundred and thirty-six salesmen and headbookers arrived at Atlantic City Wednesday.

Studio executives at Movietone City meantime were completing "Shangahi Madness," which winds up the 1932-33 group. Educational likewise finished the last current release.

Only Three To Go

Fox had not announced details of its 1933-34 product up to press time. With Fox, M-G-M, Paramount, Radio and Universal definitely launched on campaigns, only Columbia, United Artists and Warner Brothers remain to complete an industrywide schedule for 1933-34 of all large distributors.

Columbia will hold two regionals: Atlantic City, July 3, 4, 5 and 6; Los Angeles, July 12, 13 and 14. Jack Cohn will preside. Tentatively, 48 features have been set for 1933-34.

United Artists starts its season at its annual meeting in Chicago July 17, where Al Lichtman will outline policies and probably reveal about 26 feature releases for the new season.

Warner Brothers, with about 60 features tentatively scheduled, will not make any convention plans for another ten days. Gradwell Sears and A. W. Smith, sales executives, in a joint statement Wednesday, made clear that the company "is not going to rush into any new selling season," and that for the present they were concentrating on marketing "Gold Diggers" and others of the current program. "We realize our responsibility to the exhibitor until the last picture on the current schedule has been released and played," they said. Warners have enlarged their writing staff to 48.

Schenck Denies Star "Raiding"

Twentieth Century Productions, headed by Joseph M. Schenck and Darryl Zanuck, is not engaged in a program of star "raiding," Mr. Schenck declared at a gathering of newspapermen in Hollywood Tuesday. The company has, however, the right to negotiate with any player whose contract has only one or two months to run, he said.

"All this talk about Twentieth Century raiding and being financed by Louis B. Mayer and Nicholas M. Schenck has been inspired by a company which is acting the part of a martyr," Mr. Schenck said in repudiation of gossip concerning alleged financing by the MGM executives.

'GRAND MATERIAL FOR THE SCREEN'

Says De Casseres of "Nine Pine Street" in Commenting on Film Possibilities of Current Stage

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

NINE PINE STREET

John Colton and Carlton Miles have built up a play in "Nine Pine Street" on the celebrated Borden murder mystery of over forty years ago, and they have put over one of the most absorbing and psychologically thrilling plays of the season.

As entertainment it is superior to O'Neill's "Mourning Becomes Electra." It ends implacably on the note of Murder Triumphant. That is, Effie Holden, who murdered both her father and step-mother with a flatiron and hatchet, gets away with it, and lives and dies blessed with all the good things of this world.

For Effie is a New England type of the old breed, and what went on in those persons' innards was just nobody's business.

As portrayed by Lillian Gish this is a character revelation of astounding vitality and suggestiveness. It is also a revelation of the growth of Lillian Gish, for it is the greatest thing she has ever done.

From any angle it is grand material for the screen: menace, suspense, murder, romance, humor, a murder trial (not seen on the stage but which will be a wow on the screen), characters out of the gay and bloody nineties, and a soft-pedal ending twenty years after, where, thank God—at last!) the murderess seems to be saying to the world, "Well, I did it. I got away with it, and what are you going to do about it? Anyhow, wasn't I justified in bumping off such a father and such a step-mother?"

And every audience will say, "Yes, Effie—if we must have murder, they are the kind of people to get rid of." Not "moral," but true to our secret reactions.

There is a cast of sixteen, and each one can be made a perfect character study on the screen. The play is worked up slowly but inexorably to the climax of the murders. The dialigue is almost ready-made.

Lillian Gish should do this on the screen. If she does, it will, with an intelligent director, be the b.o. smash of the year or else I'm no guzzler of 3.2.

FOUR O'CLOCK

"Four o'Clock," by Nan O'Reilly and Rupert Darrell, is a melodrama founded on the murder of Vivian Gordon, whose body was found in Central Park after some palookas had taken her for a ride. It is hot crime screen stuff.

There is a fellow up to the ears in love with Donna Mason, known later as Donna Madison. He lifted 25 grand from the bank where he was employed and gave it to Donna.

A tab. prints Donna's picture and that of her daughter (whom Donna loves, of course). The daughter kills herself (following the Gordon case), and then Donna lives to get even.

She centers on Webster, the tab's publisher. She necks him in Florida with the aid of a girl confed. Now Donna has powerful connections in ye underworld. So the game of blackmail (hey, hey, George Raft!) begins.

Now there is gunplay. Donna is going to kill Webster, but someone drops Donna. A murder mystery looms. There is a court scene, and things are finally cleared up.

It is exciting and has a picture angle in almost every minute of the play.

THE COMIC ARTIST

Now that sex is coming back again, it strikes me that Susan Glaspell's story of the Grand Pash, if laid in Paris and among the necking arty colony at Cape Cod, would just about assuage a lot of complexes on the Great Libido Belt and all points south.

It is called "The Comic Artist," although it is a pretty serious drama if you take the Grand Pash seriously. As a play it left me as flat and as unexcited as twelve bottles of 3.2. But when some good scenarist and director give it twelve shots in the arm and several in the ear, "The Comic Artist" will, I think, come out a first rate b.o. investment.

Steve Rolf, a portrait painter; his wife Eleanor and their child in their Cape Cod home. All is hunky-dory.

Blows in brother Karl, a successful comic strip "artist" from New York, with his young wife Nina and her mother, a divorcee of the smarty type.

Now Steve and Nina had been on the loose together in Paris before Nina married Steve's brother. The latter is ignorant of this.

Nina tries to make Steve again. Steve can't stand up under her Storm Troop tactics.

Wife and brother discover the truth. Wife forces showdown with Steve. Nina threatens suicide—almost succeeds.

There's a patch-up in the end.

There is, as you see, gentlemen, the groundwork of a grand old buck-and-wing sex drama. With a competent picture cast "The Comic Artist" can show the fans how a superior picture can be made out of a mediocre play.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Of course this beautiful little comedy-drama, "One Sunday Afternoon," by Leo Peters and Leslie J. Spiller, was bound to be snapped up by the picture people. And I'll be a-waiting to see how it is going to be done.

Here are sentiment, romance, comedy, satire and character work so skillfully and harmoniously blended that it ought to make what is called a "perfect picture."

The story of the small-town dentist whose wife objects to his drinking cronies, the flash-back twenty years in the lives of four people, the quaint old atmosphere of the beer-garden nineties and the comic ending of what might have been a murder—well, it's simply got to go over.

"One Sunday Afternoon" is not a "Cavalcade" or a "Rasputin," but it is going to be a picture that will, I believe, be shown at every picture house in the country. Why? Because it is the quintessence of that universal want: entertainment.

AMERICAN DREAM

The Theatre Guild productions have made some sock screen hits, notably "Strange Interlude," "The Guardsman" and "Reunion in Vienna." But I have my doubts about its latest play, "American Dream," a "trilogy" by George O'Neil, creating any great excitement in Hollywood, although there are in this new imitation of "Cavalcade" some scraps and angles for an imaginative writer to build therefrom a real American epic running from 1650 to 1933.

What ails the saga of the Pingree family is its stringiness and unconnected episodal qualities. The whole play is laid in the Pingree (New England family) homestead. We see the decadence, socalled, of this family for three hundred years; but what wouldn't shrink, shrivel, get rotten or otherwise wash out in three hundred years?

In this ineffective play there parade before us everybody you ever heard of from the original cigar store Indian to the latest negro poet, Jim Tully hoboes and lesbos.

THREE-CORNERED MOON

Gertrude Tonkonogy, with the aid of Ruth Gordon and Cecelia Loftus, batted out a hit in "Three-Cornered Moon," a whimsical, semi-nutty comedy of the cock-eyed doings of the Rimplegar family.

It is not the sort of thing that is done easily on the screen or knocks off records at the b. o.; but something like this is worth trying once in a while as a foil to Stick 'em up! and to lions that breakfast on Christians.

The Brooklyn Rimplegars consist of four scatterbrains, with good old Mother Rimplegar feeding the kids, totally oblivious of the moon. She has unadvisedly lost a fortune on margins.

Doc. Stevens, who is the only sane friend of the family, has to take over the affairs of this daft family. And he angles in on the girl and beats out the novelist. The love-angle is of the comic brand.

There are a lot of funny antics in this show. It kept the audience hoop-laing all evening. It has a swift, whip-saw dialogue ready-made.

INDUSTRY BRANCHES ADVANCE CODE WORK AS BUSINESS ADDS TO GAINS

Wider Use of Arbitration Wins Favor at Conferences; Independents Invited to Submit Proposals; NAMPI Has Code

[Text of code drafted by representatives of seven organizations of motion picture employees in Hollywood appears on opposite page.]

With general business reports from various sections of the country adding further confirmation of definite improvement and with 1,629,000 new jobs created in the last two months, the motion picture industry maintained its progressive course this week in drawing up plans for final codes in accordance with President Roosevelt's Industrial Recovery Act. Coordinators, composed of committees of exhibitors and distributors, are still hard at work polishing up suggestions and recommendations for both. Already tentative codes for these two branches have been drawn up in New York, and a second distribution code, containing many of the recommendations made by independent producers and distributors.

Independent representatives were invited to attend a meeting last Friday with sales and distribution executives of the larger companies at the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Meetings between exhibitor-distributor coordinators, temporarily concluded last Saturday, were to be resumed later this week. The chief reason for the postponement were the sales conventions, several of which opened this week.

More Arbitration Favored

Wider use of arbitration was tentatively accepted by distributor and exhibitor interests at one of the final meetings last week. Ed. Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, who presided, disclosed that acceptance of the principle of arbitration had been reached.

"Naturally, good taste and morals of the pictures shown, as well as business arrangements, will be a concern of the industry," he said. "The motion picture business never was and never will be a religious organization. We must depict life as it is and of course that cannot ignore themes in which sex figures. We hope to combat not only stupidity, but extravagance. For the industry to survive there must be decisive adjustment of salaries. That does not mean indiscriminate wage reductions. There is no doubt that there must be cuts in some of the higher salary brackets and boosts in some of the lower."

Standard Contract Favored

Mr. Kuykendall also said that the discussions have viewed with favor the adoption of the standard exhibition contract for inclusion in the final codes.

Agreements between exhibitor and distributor representatives on code proposals which are at variance may be reached late this week, an MPPDA official said last Saturday.

Highlights of actual progress made during the week by interested parties include:

Approval, by 15 regional units of the MPTOA, of the efforts of the association's executive committee in New York in working on exhibition code proposals.

Joint meetings of independent and major producers and distributors to outline final codes satisfactory to both.

The drawing up of a tentative code for production, exhibition and distribution by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, an independent association.

Appointment by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences of a committee to study the Industrial Recovery Law.

Citation, by P. S. Harrison of the NAMPI, of 38 industry trade practices as being "unfair methods of competition," all of which are contained in the tentative code.

Departure of Will H. Hays for the Coast to assist in the writing of a production code with Academy representatives cooperating.

Announcement, from Washington, that state administrators of the Industrial Recovery Act probably will be appointed upon the President's return to Washington.

On the whole there is said to be a far better spirit of cooperation and understanding between the independent and other companies in the matter of a code. While no action has been taken as yet on proposals contained in the first draft of a distribution code submitted to them last week for study, the independents are reported to be less inclined to regard the MPPDA policy on code conferences as being arbitrary in nature. The independents were invited to submit proposals for new clauses as well as changes, the final code to be submitted to all distributors simultaneously. Independents attending Friday's session were Edward Golden, Monogram; Harry Thomas and Al Friedlander, First Division; Phil Meyer, Helber Pictures; Herman Gluckman, Majestic; Arthur Greenblatt, Invincible, and George Batcheller, Chesterfield.

The NAMPI Provisions

The NAMPI tentative code includes discussions of such practices as protection, or clearance, zoning and exclusive runs; integration of production or distribution with exhibition, an alleged monopolistic practice; unfair discrimination in favor of large buyers; withholding product from exhibitors; block and blind booking; franchises; mergers and consolidations; threats to buy or build theatres for purposes of coercion; concerted action to fix, maintain or reduce film rentals; common use of exchanges; admission prices; overbuying; duplication of sound royalties; requiring exhibitors to take product of another distributor; buying combines; ownership or control of more than two theatres in the same city, town or competitive zone; substitutions; double featuring and changes of program; hold-over of prints; bicycling; allocating product; reporting percentages; commercial "bribery"; standard exhibition contract; arbitration; credit regulations; inducements to breach contract; obscenity in pictures and advertising; restrictions on exchange of stars or use of studios and facilities; limitations on recording licenses; unfair allocations to independent producers; commercial advertising; non-profit casting bureau; employment of minors; unfair competition from radio broadcasters, and concerted action by employers to restrain or prevent employment, or free and open bargaining by employees or labor.

Hays on Coast Conferring with Academy; 15 MPTOA Units Approve Committee's Work; Allied Organizations Meet

While exhibitor and distributor interests in New York were attempting to outline codes for both, regional meetings of many Allied units got under way to discuss whether or not theatres are subject to the Industrial Recovery Act. In a "plea for sanity," Abram F. Myers, national president, last week in a bulletin virtually accused the MPPDA and the MPTOA of putting independent theatres in a minority position "so that they will be helpless to defend themselves against an unfair set-up." Said Mr. Myers: "It is possible that the producers, represented by Mr. Hays, and the affiliated chains, represented by Mr. Kuykendall, might constitute a majority of the total capital invested in the motion picture business, taken as a whole. However, they would not represent a numerical majority of the theatre owners affected, hence there is no justification for the assumption that the independent exhibitor will be placed in a minority situation."

An MPPDA official said Allied does not represent a majority of business income and that it is upon the majority of business that the Government will base its decisions.

New Jersey Allied Code

Allied of New Jersey is being urged by its president, Sidney Samuelson, to study carefully everything printed about the industry at the present time, "because big things are happening." The New Jersey unit is reported to be drawing up its own code of fair competition. Allied of Iowa and Nebraska, and Allied of Illinois have both held meetings within the past week, and Allied of Maryland will meet late this week in Baltimore.

Fifteen MPTOA regional units have written to national headquarters in New York expressing approval of the executive committee's work on exhibition code proposals, and a number of state organizations have indicated approval of the draft of the tentative code.

"Both sides must give ground in many instances," Mr. Kuykendall said. "Many constructive proposals and recommendations for changes in the tentative drafts are pouring in."

The Eastern Pennsylvania, St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois units of MPTOA already have held meetings. The The Philadelphia meeting Tuesday gave formal approval of the code.

Ten key cities out of 14 reporting box-office grosses last week showed marked gains.

In Milwaukee this week every member of the MPTO of Wisconsin was advised to avail himself of the standard license agreement and to insert in contracts a clause to the effect that terms shall be subject to such a code as may be adopted under the National Recovery Act.

Hays on Coast

With daily progress being shown on the tentative exhibition and distribution codes, Will H. Hays left for the Coast last week to draw up a production code with studio heads and Academy representatives. In March, 1930, the MPPDA adopted a voluntary code drawn by the Association of Motion Picture Producers and it is expected that this will serve as

STUDIO WORKERS DRAFT NEW CODE TO PREVENT UNFAIR COMPETITION

Seven Organizations Represented on Committee Headed by Frank Woods in Move to Crystalize Employee Interests

Representative studio workers' associations of Hollywood, banded together as the Motion Picture Employees' Code Conference, have completed the draft of a code "to bring together all employee organizations and groups in the industry to crystalize the employee interests in the matter of a code for the industry under the new Federal Industrial Recovery Act."

The code as prepared by a committee, headed by Frank E. Woods, was accepted at a meeting which took place at the Writers' Club in Hollywood Thursday, and was attended by representatives of seven organizations, including the Screen Writers Guild, Cameramen's Union, Sound Men's Union, Laboratory and Film Workers' Union, Electricians, Projectionists and Costumers' Unions. Academy branches of the employee classes were asked to participate.

A report was received by Mr. Woods from the code committee containing recommendations for the first draft of a production code. It appeared to be well received and was referred to the various organizations represented. It was then decided to concentrate immediately on employment subjects and to invite all other groups and organizations to participate. Another meeting was scheduled for Wednesday.

The basic proposition of the proposed code specifically calls for the elimination of "unfair competition," the promotion of "the fullest possible utilization of the production capacity of industries, to avoid the undue restriction of production," the prohibition of codes "designed to promote monopolies or to eliminate or oppress small enterprises or to discriminate against them," and finally, it declares "that such code or codes shall not permit monopolies or monopolistic practices."

Highlights of the proposal include: First, the immediate re-employment of as many workers as possible, to be accomplished by spreading employment throughout the studios, distributing agencies and theatres over a larger number of employees by shorter hours, and to increase employment by unrestricted numbers of pictures to be made; creation of a permanently sound foundation for the corporate structure of the industry, divorcing exhibition and distribution completely from production; a substantial increase in the number of pictures produced and exhibited as being essential to the healthy development of the industry in respect to both art and employment; the right production system, which calls for elimination of excessive and unnecessary salaries for unproductive executives, prevention of interference by non-creative executives in creative work and story writing, limitation on over-bidding for talent, standard compensation for skilled labor, encouragement of the royalty system, temporary abolition of the importation of foreign talent, enforcement, by the Government if necessary, of "decency in pictures, and encouragement of the rental of studio space to independents."

COMPLETE TEXT OF CODE DRAFTED BY MOTION PICTURE EMPLOYEES ON COAST

Objectives

The first immediate objective of control over the motion picture industry under the Industrial Recovery Act, as outlined by the President of the United States, will be to put more people to work in all the several elements of the business, production, distribution and exhibition, at living compensations, and to equalize excessive salaries and maintain the standards of pay for skilled employees.

The second objective should be to establish regulations and practices that will set the industry on a permanently sound foundation, provide the widest possible spread of employment for qualified personnel, insure equitable return for capital invested, eliminate waste and inequitable salaries, prevent unjust discrimination, graft and other abuses in production, distribution and exhibition, and at the same time result in better and still better motion picture quality.

(1) More People at Work Quickly

Obviously, the first objective cannot be attained by restricting the number of pictures to be made, as has been proposed. Nor should the public be taxed by wholesale raises of admission prices. Our objective can be attained, however, as follows:

(a) By spreading such employment as is possible in studios, distributing agencies and theatres over a larger number of employees by shorter hours, as in other industries, maintaining, however, existing standards of pay for skilled labor.

(b) By eliminating overhead waste in production, distribution and exhibition, thereby permitting a greater number of pictures to be made and exhibited without increase of gross expenditures, and enabling a greater number of theatres to operate by reason of reduced rentals.

(c) By encouraging the investment of new capital in independent picture production, thereby further increasing the number of productions and the consequent opportunities of employment. To make this possible, distribution and exhibition must be freed, by whatever drastic methods are necessary, from all acts of discrimination and restraint of trade, so that new production can be insured an open market and closed theatres can reopen with an adequate supply of pictures.

(2) Permanently Sound Foundation

All the abuses, blunders, faults and the present disgraceful economic plight of the screen as an institution can be traced to one fundamental cause, namely, the existing system, by which the three elements of the structure, production, distribution and key-theatre exhibition, are combined under single corporate controls.

Under this system the industry has collected from the American public alone, in the past twelve years, upwards of eighteen billion dollars in cash, of which not to exceed six per cent has gone into legitimate costs of production, excluding fictitious overheads. All this huge sum has disappeared and the industry is notoriously bankrupt with debts amounting to another billion. How many of those vanished billions can be honestly and legitimately accounted for and how many may be charged to huge salaries and bonuses to favored executives, bad investments, unsound business methods, manipulation of bookkeeping or worse, will never be known without a searching investigation.

It is certain, however, that such results could never have happened except for the system of corporate control over production, distribution and exhibition.

Further, we may, with justice, charge against the corporate system (1) prohibitive discrimination against independent theatres and independent producers, whereby many theatre owners have been forced out of business and the free flow of creative genius has been dammed up at its source; (2) the establishment of factory methods by which non-creative executives have wasted untold millions and prevented the free development of creative talent, and (3) the intercompetitive practice of rival corporations to outbid each other for the services of supposed exceptional talent, resulting often in outrageously inordinate salaries.

The system being at fault and in restraint of both trade and art should be abolished as the first step in fixing the industry on a sound foundation.

Exhibition should be confined to exhibiting. Distribution should be physical in its functions and centralized without discrimination. Production should be open to all.

Make More Pictures

A substantial increase in the number of pictures produced and exhibited is essential to the healthy development of the structure in respect to both art and employment. There can never be over-production in quantity, as in commodity productions, because economic laws do not apply to the two in the same way.

The stage, the press and the screen deal in the spread of thought, art and genius. We would never think of restricting the number of stage shows or the number of published books so that favored producers and publishers might reap inordinate profits. Nor would we limit the number of inventions to be patented and marketed. For the same reasons the number of pictures produced should never be restricted.

The more picture productions there are made and distributed, the greater will be the opportunities for remunerative employment and for the free development of the creative arts.

Good and better motion pictures do not depend on lavish, extravagant and wasteful expenditures on a limited number of artificially promoted and protected productions. The new, unique and different departures in story ideas, so necessary for a revival of public appeal, are often those economically produced. By increasing the gross number we automatically increase the number of possible box office successes, with which to attract the public back to the empty theatres.

The Right Production System

The screen, like the stage and press, should be governed by similar unwritten laws and practices. There should be a sharp line between the business and mechanical functions on the one side and the creative functions on the other. Therefore:

(a) Prevent in whatever manner possible in large studios the interference of non-creative executives in story writing and creative work, except so far as economy warrants. Once a story is fully approved, go ahead and make it. Costly tinkering by a multitude of minds will be more apt to ruin than help. Two possibly good pictures can be made at the present cost of one, which too often turns out bad.

(b) Eliminate excessive and unnecessary salaries for unproductive executives.

(c) Limit to a reasonable extent over-bidding for talent.

(d) Establish standard compensations for skilled labor and craftsmen without lowering existing scales.

(e) Encourage the royalty system, whereby author, star and director shall receive a percentage of the actual profits, thus minimizing the excessive salary evil.

(f) Abolish, for a time at least, the importation of foreign talent, which, at best, is experimental.

(g) Adopt and enforce, with government aid if necessary, a code of decency to govern the production of pictures for the primary purpose of bringing back to the picture theatre the millions of former patrons who have been alienated by the trend towards what has been designated as "ultra-sophistication."

(h) Encourage the rental of studio space and service for independent productions, especially with new and untried ideas.

In carrying out the last of these policies, it will be essential that the major provision of this industrial control plan shall be effectively enforced, namely, the complete separation of corporate control over combined production, distribution and exhibition.

Under the present system any individual or group with a great picture idea or story, with or without capital, or even with a production already completed, must seek a distribution release, and there is no place he can go for first-class theatre exhibition except to one of the major corporations, controlling both distribution and theatres. The inevitable result is that the project is headed off or the idea appropriated or if the picture is made and released, it will be under such conditions of block booking and excessive charges that there will be only negligible returns, if any. Thus it is that much possibly valuable product is lost to the industry and work is denied to the unemployed.

The practice of preventing new production is clearly based on the false theory of forcing the corporation's own productions, good and bad, on an unwilling public, without regard to merit. The public must pay for inferior entertainment or stay away from the theatres, which they have been doing to an alarming extent.

Therefore, in the interest of the public, for the spread of employment and for the healthy growth of the screen as an art and industry, these reforms are recommended.

FRANK WOODS, Chairman.

SPOOR 'NATURAL VISION' SYSTEM AT WORLD FAIR

Reaffirms Faith in Pictures of Depth at 1,000-Seat "Spectaculum" at Chicago's Century of Progress Exposition

At the Chicago World's Fair, among the carnivals of its Midway, George K. Spoor, one of the first men to have faith in any kind of motion picture, is repeating his faith in a motion picture of depth as well as of height and breadth, taking his "natural vision pictures directly to the general public in a 1,000-seat theatre imaginatively dubbed the "Spoor Spectaculum."

The actual production offered is "Niagara Falls," the scenic which, with "Danger Lights," a natural vision dramatic feature, was briefly displayed in Chicago and on Broadway in 1930. In those showings, Mr. Spoor was associated with the Radio-Keith-Orpheum interests, which produced "Danger Lights," in the "natural vision" technique. At the Chicago exposition the indomitable Spoor is "going it alone," where many thousands from many places, knowing nothing of motion picture precedents, will gather between now and next fall.

To those who pay the 15 or 25 cents charged for admission, a brochure insists, moreover, that this "Spectaculum" thing is not to be the end of it. To quote:

"With this new system the production job is to move any theatrical production into the studio, properly prepared with the necessary stage sets, and present the performance before the apparatus for photography and recording of sound, thereby obtaining a permanent record of the performance as done on the stage in a remarkably short time. . . . These productions will be presented to the public in the theatres of the legitimate stage, on a screen which receives the play in its normal, full-stage size."

Millions Spent in Experiment

Presumably the revenue from admissions and the sale of the brochures at ten cents a copy at the fair is intended to carry on these subsequent production and theatrical enterprises, for the Spoor faith in quasi-three-dimensional motion pictures, maintained over a period of many years, has been expensive. Up to 1930 this dream, which has tormented many, had taken five million dollars out of that fortune amazingly created by historic Essanay, in a little studio on Chicago's Argyle street, with one and two-reelers, exploiting the strange arts of Broncho Billy Anderson, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Charles Spencer Chaplin. These successes had come but little after the period in which "The Great Train Robbery" was demonstrating pictures-that-move to the public, in black tents at a thousand county fairs. Because George K. Spoor was of that period, too, it is interesting to observe that except for a hokum exhibition of Hollywood movie-making, the most serious demonstration of the motion picture at this 1933 exposition, dedicated to modern technology, is dauntless George Spoor's "Spectaculum" on the Midway.

The "natural vision" demonstration at the Chicago fair also introduces to the public sound carried on the film in the form of indentations cut in the edge of the film. Called the Spoor-Lindbergh method, it is another result of the goings-on these more recent years at the old Essanay plant on Argyle street. Essanay itself is to be succeeded, it seems, by yet another company, Natural Vision Pictures Corporation. States the brochure:

"Natural Vision Pictures Corporation will produce an entirely new type of picture entertainment by means of the equipment licensed to it by the Natural Vision Patents Company, the Spoor-Lindbergh corporation, and the Spoor-Thompson Corporation, at its plant here in Chicago or at such other studios that lend to economy in the particular production undertaken. The Natural Vision Pictures system combined with Spoor-Lindbergh sound recording method and Spoor-Thompson processing system make it possible to offer to the public accurate replicas of stage productions as one sees them on the legitimate stage. This type of picture production is entirely new and can only be done with the equipment of the Natural Vision System, as no other method exists."

Augmenting these remarks personally, Mr. Spoor divulges that he is preparing to purchase two plays of distinction which will be produced by the "natural vision" method, and that upon completion of these, five theatres in five key cities will be opened, "beginning a chain of theatres to introduce natural vision pictures throughout the country."

The present Spoor film is 63 mm., instead of 70 mm., while the screen of the "Spectaculum" measures 63x38 feet.

a basis for the new code in accordance with the Administration's program. This code, practically in its entirety, deals with the moral aspect of motion pictures.

The Academy appointed a committee this week to study the Industrial Recovery Law in its relation to the production and creative branch. This committee has commenced a preliminary survey.

Jobs and Higher Pay Factors

Although General Hugh S. Johnson, federal administrator of the National Industrial Recovery Administration, said last week that only such parts of the film industry's code as will affect hours of labor, wages and increased purchasing power should be submitted, the work of forming definite rules for the more complicated phases of the three branches will continue. The primary objective of all the codes is the re-employment of labor and with it, an increase in buying power.

The legitimate theatre in New York, under the leadership of Frank Gillmore, president of the Actors' Equity Association, has started laying plans for the drawing up of a code of fair practice and competition. Most of the theatres' present troubles are with the labor unions and with unemployment of its own actors.

The Industrial Recovery Administration may attempt to limit the profits of private business in order to curb any tendency to skyrocket prices, it was learned last week. General Johnson on Friday launched a general move to ease anti-trust laws in many states.

Film Boards' Duties

Under the provisions of the tentative distributors' code drawn up last week the Film Boards of Trade would continue their present functions with a few new jobs designated for them and one or two previously abandoned ones restored. One of their new duties would be the checking of percentage engagements for distributors. This would not immediately affect such checking services as Ross Federal, most of whose contracts still have a year or longer to run. One service proposed for restoration is the creation and operation of credit committees, with provisions for individual and collective action for distributors. The Film Boards also would continue to collect theatre statistics, represent distributors before legislative bodies in industry affairs and maintain amicable relations between distributors and the public.

Evidences of higher levels of production and trade in all industries are increasing rapidly and leave no doubt that a swift business revival is under way, states the Guaranty Trust Company in the current issue of "The Guaranty Survey." The index of business activity for Guaranty Trust for May rose from 54.8 to 61.9, the sharpest monthly gain of the period of the depression. Early summer orders pouring into factories are bringing new life, putting thousands of men back at work and gradually restoring wages, an Associated Press survey showed this week.

Industrial production in May scored a 16 per cent increase over March. The Federal Reserve Board announced Saturday that the volume of industrial production, as measured by the seasonally adjusted index, increased from 67 per cent of the 1923-25 average in April to 76 per cent in May. The March increase was 60 per cent.

Tax Payments Rise

Theatre business in April showed a substantial improvement over the preceding month, it was indicated last week by the Treasury Department, covering internal revenue collections in May. Receipts from the admission tax during May totaled $1,131,293, compared with $958,500 in April.

Exhibitors in beach towns on the Coast are making a concentrated effort to raise admission prices, taking advantage of the increase in business during the summer, and the Cleveland Exhibitors Association is considering admission price boosts.

Wheat, cotton, steel and many other commodity prices have shown marked increase during the past week and with the Government's $3,300,000,000 public works program about to go into effect thousands of men and women will be called back to work within the next two months. Already more than a million and a half new jobs have been created since March and with the increase in employment expected to rise proportionately during the summer, the theatre man will benefit accordingly.

John Grey, Lloyd Comedy Writer, Dies in Hollywood

John Grey, gag-writer for Harold Lloyd comedies, died at his home in West Hollywood this week. He was 60 years old.

A lawyer by education but an actor and writer by inclination, Mr. Grey drifted into film work from the legitimate stage and during the past 10 years has written consistently for the Lloyd pictures. His first production under the Lloyd banner was "Hot Water," and he also worked on the scenarios of "The Freshman," "Welcome Danger," "Feet First" and "Movie Crazy."

Asks Better Films Units Be Merged

Declaring that art has suffered in the business crisis, B. V. Sturtivant, head of the Fox West Coast theatre interests in the San Diego territory, proposed to the Better Films Conference, there, on June 19, a national consulting body, designed to bring the industry closer together with the public, thereby eliminating ill-advised censorship.

"No other business, art or profession, is subject to so much ill-advised, unintelligent, unwise and politically controlled censorship as is the motion picture industry," he said. "The film industry as a whole is entitled to an exceedingly clean bill of health when the output of our studios is compared with contemporary works of fiction and stage presentations of the past few years.

"The motion picture industry is an art as well as a business, and its products are viewed by a third of our population every week. In the business crisis which has faced the industry, art has suffered. It has led to practices which have brought the wrath of many such bodies as the Better Films Conference upon the heads of the producers. It has aroused censor boards and now, under the new Roosevelt recovery bill, the industry faces the possibility of a governmental dictatorship over the cinema."

Mr. Sturdivant's proposal for a national consulting body calls for a uniting of all "well-meaning" film organizations and committees of women's clubs which, he said, lack effectiveness, into one national body, with divisional headquarters in key cities. Four times a year delegates from each division would meet with several representatives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and other producing companies.

"Thus," Mr. Sturdivant said, "the producers would learn first hand just exactly what the public wants or takes exception to."

STOCKHOLDERS TO ACT UPON NEW FOX PLAN

Meetings Called for Saturday and Monday; 53 Weeks' Report Shows Fox Loss at $9,215,431; Wesco, $7,749,067

With a strong recommendation from Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corporation, that the new financial reorganization plan for the company be adopted, stockholders will act Saturday and Monday on the proposals.

Owners of Fox shares have before them the report for the 53 weeks ended Dec. 31, 1932, showing a combined deficit of $16,964,498, comparing with a reported net loss of $5,560,304 after taxes and all charges for the 52 weeks that ended Dec. 26, 1931.

At the meeting Saturday, stockholders will be asked to eliminate five-sixths of the total "A" and "B" shares, now evaluated on the company's books at $5 a share. This would reduce the "A" shares outstanding from 2,425,660 to 404,276 2/3 and the "B" shares from 99,900 to 16,650.

New Issues Proposed

At the Monday session it will be proposed that stockholders authorize new issues, to be offered to shareholders of record on June 23, at $18.90 a share in the ratio of five shares of the new stock for each share of the old extant after the first meeting. Options on the new shares would expire 20 days after the mailing of the warrants. Approval of the new issues would make the total of "A" shares 2,800,000. That part of the new shares not taken up by present stockholders would be underwritten by the holders of $26,000,000 in bank loans and debentures, including interest due.

Mr. Kent pointed out that the company is faced with debts approximating $42,000,000, of which $12,000,000 is currently payable, $30,000,000 in debentures, $8,115,486.11 in bank loans, $1,630,914.03 in unpaid interest, and the remainder current obligations totaling approximately $1,750,000. The company hopes, by issuing the new stock at $18.90, to pay the $30,000,000 debentures and bank loans and interest totaling $39,746,400.14. Debentures not joining in the underwriting plan will not be paid at this time, as they are not due until April 1, 1934, but the holders will have an opportunity to take part in the underwriting.

The plan would have the effect of relieving the company of heavy interest charges and overdue obligations by substitution of stock for the indebtedness without increase of capitalization.

Principal Problems Solved

"The management believes," Mr. Kent informed the stockholders, "that the principal internal problems of the corporation have been solved and that a point has now been reached where reorganization of the stock and debt structure of the corporation is imperative. Through the cooperation of the holders of over $26,500,000 of debentures of the corporation, who agreed not to press for immediate payment of interest on the coupons due April 1, 1933, and the cooperation of the corporation's other creditors, the corporation was enabled to avoid the usual consequences of a default in the interest payment due on that date, but such forbearance was only obtained upon the assurance of the management that before the next interest date a plan of reorganization would be presented. Such a plan is outlined to you in this letter and is strongly recommended to you by your president."

Reduction of the outstanding stock would result in a credit of $10,523,166.67 to paid-in surplus.

The corporation also aims to reduce the book value of investments by charges of $37,247,386.22 to reserve for revaluation of investments, and of $22,693,743.99 to paid-in surplus. In detail, these reductions would reduce the book value of Film Securities Corp., which was formed to take over the Loew stock, from $46,173,713.50 to $1.00, and to decrease the book value of Wesco Corp. holding company of all the corporation's theatre properties from $9,421,643.12 to $1.00. Valuation of the Fox Realty Corp. of California would be cut from $7,524,136.70 to $3,762,654.11 and that of Fox Film Realty Corp. would be cut from $3,184,540.67 to $2,600,297.67.

Seek Exchange Listing

Application has been made to the New York Stock Exchange for listing of 2,508,910 shares of Class "A" common without par value, this being the proposed new stock and subject to the action of the stockholders Monday.

The consolidated earned surplus and profit and loss report for the 53 weeks showed a net operating loss of $7,749,067.04 for Wesco and subsidiaries. Exclusive of Wesco and subsidiaries, the Fox group reported a loss of $9,215,431.29 after taxes, amortization of production costs, interest, depreciation, provision for unrealized losses on exchange, settlement of contracts entered into in previous years, and other charges.

Wesco and subsidiaries income and expenses were listed separately in the report because of the bankruptcies of Westco's chief subsidiaries and the default of Wesco's two-year notes. The Wesco group in 1931 showed $3,308,142 total loss.

For the date of Dec. 31, 1932, the consolidated balance sheet of the Fox companies, exclusive of the Wesco group, showed current assets of $13,276,253 and current liabilities of $11,772,105, total assets amounting to $119,162,248.

Consolidated income account of Fox and wholly-owned subsidiary, controlled and affiliated companies for the 53 weeks was: Gross income from sales and rentals of films and literature, $29,712,415; other income, $1,366,247, and total income, $31,078,662.

News Cameraman Comes Into Own In Thriller Short

by FRED AYER

The intrepid newsreel cameraman at last is going to "get a break" on motion picture screens. Allyn Butterfield, editor of Universal newsreel, has assembled a two-reel production titled "The World's Greatest Thrills," which portrays outstanding daring feats and exploits of cameramen in all parts of the world. The public, probably for the first time, will be given the opportunity to witness the actual hazards which at times confront the news cameraman.

"No risk too great, no 'shot' too difficult," at some time or other almost every news cameraman of all the staffs has made a "catch" which has been worth the danger and effort.

It was with this thought in mind that Mr. Butterfield and Major Henry C. Bate, his assistant, assembled a series of unusual incidents in covering timely newsreel events.

There are spectacular fires and rescues, hurricanes, auto and motorcycle races ending in disaster, a head-on locomotive wreck, air feats and some of the most spectacular plane crashes ever seen on the screen. These all flash by in quick succession as the cameramen are shown grinding away in peril from falling walls, in the path of wildly careening automobiles, in the air, under shot and shell.

Also are scenes dating back as far as the World War and, more recently, the guerrilla warfare in the Far East. One scene shows the torpedoing of an Austrian battleship, the keeling over of the ship and the cries of the sailors struggling with the waves. A man is shown leaping from a blazing apartment building into the waiting net of the firemen, and the next flash portrays the fate of the three sailors who lost their lives by dropping from the guide lines of the ill-fated Akron a year ago. Motor fatalities and the deaths of "Speed" Holman and Lowell Bales as their planes crashed to the ground in flames are among the sequences, and through it all the cameraman is shown as he records the scenes for the public eye.

There are 26 separate sequences and, according to Mr. Butterfield, there is no question of exploitation for Universal or its newsreel.

"The picture is primarily exciting entertainment and is intended as a trubute to the newsreel cameramen of all countries and companies," he said. "Wherever one finds a man risking his life in some sort of stunt, or wherever human beings face danger, there one will find a cameraman, frequently staking his life, too, in order to get pictures of the event."

The greater part of the picture is in sound, recorded on "the scene of battle." Graham McNamee, radio announcer and Universal's "Talking Reporter," provides the narrative.

Academy Board Elects

Courtney Terrett and Carey Wilson were elected to the board of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences this week. They replace Al Cohn and Benjamin Glazer.

"Tim" Roberts Is Dead in Ohio

Harry W. "Tim" Roberts, popular veteran of Midwest exhibition, and manager of the Madison theatre at Mansfield, Ohio, is dead. A sudden heart attack ended his long showman career at the age of 56.

A veteran exhibitor, he started his career in theatre business 24 years ago in Mansfield with the Old White Way theatre, one of the first nickelodeons in the city. In 1919 he opened the Park theatre and in 1924 built the Ritz and took over its operation until the Skirboll interests leased the Mansfield Opera House, re-named it the Madison, and asked "Tim" Roberts to manage it. This he did until it was destroyed by fire in 1929, and from that time until the theatre was rebuilt early in 1932, he managed Skirboll theatres in Toledo and Massillon. When the Madison was reopened Mr. Roberts returned to manage it, and was active up to the time of his death, on May 30 at his Mansfield home.

"Tim," as he was always known, had been prominently identified with other phases of Mansfield life beside the theatre. He ran for mayor at one time on the Republican ticket, and on election night when returns were announced to crowds outside the newspaper offices, "Tim" was always on the speaking end of the megaphone. One of his favorite hobbies was announcing at sports events.

Mr. Roberts is survived by his wife, two sons and his mother. He was a member of several Masonic orders, among them the Baku Grotto of Mansfield, of which he was Past Monarch.

Sol Clark of MGM Dead

Sol N. Clark, purchasing agent for MGM on the Coast, died of heart failure in Hollywood last week.

Kahn Testifies; Order Inquiry in Paramount Deal

At an inquiry before the United States Senate's banking committee in Washington Tuesday, Otto H. Kahn, senior partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Company, testified that his organization did practically all of its business with railroads and large corporations, including Balaban & Katz, Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation and Paramount-Publix. Assets of Kuhn, Loeb & Company dropped from $120,402,103 in 1929 to $85,155,752 in 1930, he said. In the same period deposits dropped from $88,549,766 to $57,032,847.

An investigation into transactions between Paramount-Publix and the Atlas and Prudence investment companies last summer was ordered this week in New York for an early creditors' meeting before Referee Henry K. Davis. Adolph Zukor, John Hertz and Frank Bailey may be placed on the stand for questioning by attorneys for the trustees in connection with the investigation, it was learned.

Examination of Walter B. Cokell, assistant treasurer of Paramount, was held Tuesday by counsel for the trustees in connection with the creation of four new Paramount subsidiary corporations in 1932, and the later transaction of Film Productions Corporation with 12 banks. These banks recently were made defendants in an action brought by Paramount trustees to have the credit transaction set aside. Examination of Ralph Kohn, Paramount treasurer, is scheduled for the next creditors' meeting, July 5.

Meanwhile in Hartford, Conn., Tuesday, Simon H. Fabian, an exhibitor, declared that the Fox New England Theatres, formerly owned by S. Z. Poli, should bring between $2,300,000 and $2,400,000 at sale. Mr. Fabian had been called as a witness on a foreclosure motion pending before Federal Judge Edwin S. Thomas. It is understood Poli will bid on the properties if the foreclosure is ordered.

Reorganization of Publix-Salt Lake, Inc., which controls 12 theatres in Utah and Idaho, will take place in the near future, according to Louis Marcus, who assumed control of the organization 10 days ago through purchase of a half interest in the capital stock of the theatre circuit. Two of the new officers under the reorganization will probably be New York men, Mr. Marcus said this week.

Film rental adjustments ordered by Herbert V. Jones, receiver for Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain, are currently the subject of conferences in New York between Elmer C. Rhoden, vice president of the circuit, and Warner and MGM sales executives. It is understood the receiver's orders are for immediate adjustments, under penalty of refusal to approve existing contracts.

Legion Benefit at Old Roxy

The American Legion Welfare Committee of New York County will hold a benefit week at the original Roxy in New York from June 30 to July 7.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

It's Great to be Alive

(Fox)

Romantic Comedy

The first half of this picture is a made-to-pattern romantic comedy with girls and tinges of music. For practical showmanship purposes, it can be entirely discounted, as it serves merely as an irrelevant forerunner to a novelly funny idea. So surprised was the preview audience that it hardly knew what to make of it. Ultra-modern in presentation, it is a picturization of what happens when there's only one man left alive in a world of women. It's this part of the show that packs all the real entertainment, the part audiences will talk about after they have forgotten the beginning. Handled properly, it contains possibilities that will permit smart showmen to make a real box office feature out of what might ordinarily be a regular programmer.

Carlos, a pretty hot number, counts his loves by the score. Pestered by the arduous Toots, he's in wrong with his fiance Dorothy. Preceded by a funny drunk scene with Brooks and a farcical bedroom sequence with Toots, Carlos takes off on a trans-Pacific flight and is lost.

As the years roll by, "Masculitis," a rare disease, wipes out all the men and the world is left to women alone. Dr. Prodwell tries in vain to create a synthetic man. News that a man has been discovered on a lonely Pacific isle starts the fun. It's Carlos, and in true Capone gangster fashion, Al Moran's mob hijacks him from the combined forces of the world. A bootleg auction finds the battleaxes running the bids for the rare creature up to half a million. The feds raid the joint. Carlos is declared state property. An international conference is called. Carlos, the great lover, is terrified, and with Dorothy makes his escape in a plane.

Creating an interest stimulating campaign on this one should be a cinch. Starting with the title, all kinds of intriguing catchlines are easy. Add to that the old expression, "I wouldn't marry you if you were the last man alive," and you've got an idea that should win the women, old and young, to the conviction they should see the show.

Story idea is the thing on which to concentrate. Cast names, though adequate, are not of special strength. Supplement straight newspaper advertising and publicity with personal contacts along the advance whispering campaign plan in which the line, "It's great to be alive in order to see this picture when we play it," figures prominently. Also use the telephone for a teaser.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Storm at Daybreak

(MGM)

Dramatic Romance

They didn't need many bricks to build this dramatic romance, yet by taking full advantage of the material, they turned out a show that held the interest of the preview audience. It's a war story, but the war atmosphere is subordinate. The old standby triangle provides the motivating theme, detailed against Hungarian-Serbian racial animosity, which probably only a few people in this country know about, and care less. Yet intriguing color has been imparted to the yarn. European and American directorial technique are nicely balanced. The musical scoring is of more than usual importance.

In a Serbian settlement on Hungarian territory, coinciding with the outbreak of the World War, Dushan, the mayor, urges his countrymen to hold themselves ready. His wife, Irina, is aflame to serve the Fatherland. Comes Geza, a Hungarian officer, and romance is born for him and Irina. Geza comes back wounded, but in the almost carnival treatment war atmosphere is forgotten. Dushan comes to understand the attraction between his wife and old friend Geza. Determined to break it up, he is interrupted by the return of Panto, Geza's mortal foe as commandant of the village. Working a ruse that Geza and his wife have fled, he tricks Panto into a wild storm-swept ride over the mountains, ending as they both plunge to destruction from a caved-in bridge and Irina and Geza are left to find their own happiness.

This show should be sold on a straight love-story premise without going into too much detail. Go lightly on the war background. Major in selling the human interest romance. The established characters of the principals should make this a comparatively simple task. Huston is the friendly Dushan. Romantic Nils Asther and Kay Francis are the lovers. Practically all the action centers about them, with the comedy contrast provided by Louise Closser Hale and Eugene Pallette.

Make a particular drive to intrigue feminine curiosity. Use heart interest, color and romance as well as hints of the musical values. Concentrate on the tense drama to interest the men folk.

Exploitation is limited because of the danger of running into too much war suggestion, but the title should provide plenty of opportunity for ordinary lobby and foyer art. It is a suitable feature for all but the youngest children. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Rebel

Drama and Romance

Here's a "foreign" picture that no smart showman need be afraid of, despite the fact that it is in costume, that it is timed in 1809 when the Napoleonic armies were sweeping over Europe. It is dramatic, carries an appealing romance, uses suspense effectively and is anti-climaxed by a spectacle. Filmed entirely in the Tyrol Mountains, the scenery permits of some thrilling action shots. Although only two names are familiar to American audience, Varconi and Vilma Banky, there is much in this class picture that can be sold to stimulate the curiosity of the masses.

Severin, after falling in love with Erika, returns home to find the French armies have destroyed his native village and killed his mother and sister. He becomes the leader of the Tyrolese and a sharp thorn in the side of the invaders. After he kills two officers, a price is placed on his head and as a renegade tells Captain LeRoy of his mountain hideout, several hundred feet are devoted to chases up over the snow-ice covered mountains. Escaping, Severin visits Erika and brazenly attends a military ball where he learns that the French are sending another army into the Tyrol.

As the foe is trapped in the mountain pass, the frenzied Tyrolians let loose avalanches on the troops. Trick shots show them being swept to destruction. The French finally win, however, and Severin and two associates are shot as rebels. The fadeout shows the Tyrol's spirit unconquered as the slain heroes march by.

There is plenty to sell in "The Rebel" and there are many effective ways of selling it all. There is an air of novelty about the entire work. Always there is a deep vein of human interest. Create the impression in advance that your patrons are going to see something entirely aside from ordinary screen fare; a picture that has a definite atmosphere of bigness. Build on the line that it's the saga of an indomitable people that contains more than enough real entertainment elements.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Melodrama

A railroad yarn in which old line mass-stimulating melodrama predominates. With a particular eye toward the youngsters, "Dangerous Crossroads" runs the gamut of excitement, suspense, mystery. crowding many different elements into its quick running time, the show moves with speed and punch. Certain colorful incongruities may fail to register with the super-critical, yet it is the type of entertainment which has proved pleasing to the masses. Novel features add to the basic interest, and while never pretentious, the picture bears ample evidence of much entertainment value.

The Cascade Lines are being continually looted of valuable freight shipments, apparently an inside job, and the chief detective is stumped. Jimmy, his son, stops a runaway boxcar and saves Jackie and a lot of children just before it crashes into the limited. Lois admires the handsome stranger, despite her affection for Hinton.

When Jimmy is double-crossed by Curtis, an official of the railroad and leader of the crooks, Rufe enters at psychological moment to be the hero. Freeing Jimmy, they mount his old locomotive, Minnie, to race the robbers across the country, finally trapping them in one of those last ditch stands which is interrupted at the right time by the arrival of Hinton and reinforcements. The show affords many opportunities for interest creating exploitation. With the idea that you have a show with more than usual interest for the youngsters and at the same time one that has plenty of old-fashioned mass appeal, adaptation of railroad jargon in advertising should prove novelly effective. Chic Sale leading, the cast offers several good names, and the continual references to Minnie should suggest some snappy ideas for teaser purposes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Emergency Call

(RKO Radio)

Drama

The fast-moving life of the ambulance surgeon and his driver, forming the central theme of the picture, imparts to "Emergency Call" much of drama, much of pulsing action which serves to make it good, lively entertainment with a considerable amount of general appeal. It should find a good market as a straight-forward piece of motion picture entertainment.

For the marquee there are Bill Boyd, Wynne Gibson, the dependable William Gargan and George E. Stone as a member of the supporting cast. There is good selling material in the title, offering opportuniy for active exploitation and attention-attracting lobby display material.

Boyd, a young surgeon on the ambulance, has Gargan as his driver. Miss Gibson, nurse, is Gargan's fiancee and the two contribute a measure of amusement in the early part of the film. Gargan renders an especially engaging performance. Boyd runs into several examples of an ambulance chasing racket which is infesting the hospital and discovers that the racketeers have access to hospital records. Further, he learns that Reginald Mason, head of the hospital, is under the thumb of Edwin Maxwell, racketeer, who practically runs the town, and that poisoned ether is being sold to the hospital.

Called late one night on an emergency, Boyd and Gargan run into an ambush, and Gargan is knifed. He dies under Boyd's hand on the operating table as a result of the faulty ether. As Boyd taxes Mason with the fact, Maxwell steps in, fractures Boyd's skull, holds Mason prisoner at the point of a gun. Boyd, on the operating table, is saved by Mason at the cost of his life, and Maxwell, seeking to escape, is killed by Miss Gibson. Acquitted, the closing scene finds her and Boyd unveiling a monument to Gargan for service to the city.

Graft and corruption in the city administration, used as a selling angle in the film, should attract attention. Newspapers might be enticed into editorial reference to the picture and its implications. The romance of Gargan and Miss Gibson, ended by death, may be worth stressing, while at all times there is action to sell; action of the racing ambulance, the gangster complications and the romance and drama that goes on within the walls of the hospital.

The picture is lively, salable entertainment, with satisfactory performances contributing to the effectiveness of the whole. There is no reason why youngsters should not find the picture enjoyable.—Aaronson, New York.

What Price Innocence?

(Columbia)

Drama

The rather prolific and versatile Mr. Willard Mack, playwright, author and stage actor, here becomes all at once, author, director and leading player, the picture in this case "selling" him as a better actor than a director and in turn a better director than author.

"What Price Innocence" goes to an extent beyond the pale, discoursing of things physiological, psychological and pathological, with reference to sex, but with restraint. The exhibitor will find nothing of vulgarity or cheapness; instead, a straightforward manner which is at once disarming and convincing.

Mr. Mack scores the thoughtless maternal parent, ignorant in her wisdom, who fails through a mistaken sense of duty to tell her daughter what she should know of sex. The child finds out herself, when the family physician fails in his frantic efforts to bring the mother to the point of enlightening the child. When the accident happens, the parent gives the girl not sympathy, encouragement, but abuse, and a definite feeling of complete culpability for the disgrace which, in the mother's eyes, has been brought upon the household. Driven utterly to desperation, the girl, following a visit from her parents at the sanitarium, commits suicide by drowning. Then to the mother comes a realization of what she had done.

The exhibitor has for sale in the picture a Mr. Mack playing, in splendid fashion, the family doctor; Bryant Washburn, the father, who tries hard to understand, and Ben Alexander the boy to whose will the young girl succumbs. In the role of the mother is Minna Gombell, rendering an unusual performance in a highly unsympathetic part. As for the young girl, she is attractive Jean Parker, just graduated from a California high school, and here offering a performance of great appeal, and worth building up for future appearances.

The picture is said by Columbia to have received the endorsement of various women's clubs the country over, and that fact should be valuable in selling the picture. There is, of course, wide open to the exhibitor, the opportunity for "sexy" advertising, degraded selling. The error of that type of selling cannot be too strongly emphasized. The picture is definitely clean merchandise, and must be sold as such if the exhibitor is to retain the respect of the people of his community. Women's groups should very definitely be interested. The picture, not because of its manner, but by reason of the subject involved, should not be seen by young children. A clear-cut explanation of the picture, its implications and purpose in advertising appears to be the most intelligent method of selling.—Aaronson, New York.

The Song of Songs

(Paramount-Mamoulian)

Romantic Drama

For practical purposes the name Marlene Dietrich is the outstanding showmanship value. Locale in a small German town, its time set at several generations ago, the dramatically tinged love story gives its star opportunity to turn in one of her best performances, not as colorful or glamorous as some previous successes, yet alluring enough to click with the Dietrich fans. Slow in tempo, much detail accompanying the dramatic development, contrasting comedy being held to a minimum, the production seldom stirred the preview audience to any great enthusiasm, this reaction indicating that "The Song of Songs" will have a class rather than mass appeal. Still there are values, from the standpoints of personalities and idea novelty, that, under stimulus of good showmanship, can be made the basis for a strong interest-creating campaign. Because of its theme and manner of presentation, the show is adult entertainment; being too deep and impressive for juvenile minds. There is much in it that will interest the women, developments that will direct their sympathies towards the girl, likewise plenty that can be brought out to excite the men's curiosity.

"The Song of Songs" is not a musical, a fact that should be stressed in advance. Miss Dietrich sings a couple of numbers but they are only incidental to the theme. The story in all its ramifications centers about a statue. Therein is the feature that justifies novelty. Audience interest is continually directed toward the statue and its influence over the lives of the three leads.

Despite its length, "The Song of Songs" relates a formula triangle romance. Lilly, a peasant, comes to live with her aunt, Mrs. Rasmussen, rum-tippling book shop proprietor. Waldow, a sculptor, beseeches her to pose for his statue. As the work goes on artist and model fall in love, and the aunt, not understanding, considers her a libertine. Lilly, bewildered, is drawn closer to Waldow, when into the set comes the baron to be charmed in turn by the statue and the model. Waldow, tragically fading into the background, is solaced only by his statue as Lilly weds the baron, but the baron is crude in his love-making and Lilly becomes infatuated with Walter, a servant. Lilly is love-nesting in a cottage as it catches fire. Saved by her lover, but disgraced in the eyes of her husband as well as the entire household retinue, Lilly returns to Waldow's studio to wield a sledge-hammer on the statue.

Miss Dietrich's appeal should serve as a foundation for exploitation. Much that is different can be done with the statue idea. Yet it does not seem logical to go into the Biblical atmosphere that suggested it and prompted the title.

Brian Aherne is a new screen actor. Well known as a stage actor, his name can be used wherever patrons are familiar with him. But in most spots it will not be as appealing to picture audiences as Lionel Atwill, Alison Skipworth or Hardie Albright.

It might be advisable to remember that this is the picture about which Dietrich and Paramount argued so much. With Mamoulian directing, it is her first American appearance sans the guidance of Josef von Sternberg. Judiciously used, this information may be of value in writing publicity stories to excite the interest of those who like to indulge in comparisons.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Rouben Mamoulian. Screen play by Leo Birinski and Samuel Hoffenstein. From the novel by Hermann Sudermann and the play by Edward Sheldon. Photographed by Victor Milner. Running time, 92 minutes. Release date, to be determined.

Strange People

(Chesterfield)

Mystery

A rather well-sustained mystery element is actually the chief entertainment factor of this picture. The usual tricks of mystery atmosphere, including the lonely house with its underground passages, the lashing rain storm, the hanging form outside a window, the screams and the mysterious deaths, all have their place.

There is comparatively little in the cast listing to simplify the exhibitor's problem to any extent in selling the picture. The leading roles are taken by John Darrow and Gloria Shea, who actually have little to do with the unraveling of the mystery of the strange murders. Hale Hamilton, who is the central figure in the action, is moderately well known, and the rest of the performers are almost wholly unfamiliar to the regular run motion picture public.

Into the lonely house, in a howling storm, are called 12 persons, in various occupations, who a year previously had served on the jury which convicted a man of first degree murder. It develops that Hamilton, attorney for the convicted man, staged the party to convince the jury of the dangers of circumstantial evidence, and to obtain from them signatures to a petition to the governor to pardon the allegedly guilty man.

His assistant, participating in the "game," is mysteriously killed, and one of two men, thought to have had a grudge against the original murdered man, in whose home the film is set, is also murdered. No shot is heard, the explanation coming with the discovery of a gun equipped with a silencer.

With the suspense sustained fairly well throughout, and the action maintained at a reasonably rapid pace, the picture becomes acceptable entertainment of its type. Selling along more or less conventional mystery film lines should cause the picture to draw fairly well. Promise a real mystery, and challenge the audience to guess the culprit before the conclusion. The idea of the jury called together, without understanding the reason, at the home of the supposed victim of the man they had convicted a year before presents an angle which should make for intriguing selling copy.—Aaronson, New York.

Corruption

(Imperial)

The machine-made politics of the big city, wherein the mechanism dictates the governmental functioning, and the young mayor who has his own ideas about the duties and obligations of an executive, constitute the combined objective of this independent production. The picture has a substantial and satisfactory cast, headed by Evalyn Knapp, Preston Foster, Charles Delaney and Tully Marshall, with Mischa Auer, long and long-faced, radical-appearing type, playing a conspicuous role.

The young mayor, Foster, emerges victorious, of course, after generally expected complications with the strong arm squad of the local political boss. Foster is the mayor, put into office by virtue of promises and the efforts of the machine, nominally headed by Tully Marshall, actually run by Warner Richmond. But when Foster reaches office, he makes things difficult for the grafters by making a bold attempt to adhere to the principles laid down in those promises, thereby incurring the enmity of Richmond, and placing himself in something of a "spot."

His secretary is engagingly played by young and attractive Miss Knapp, who brings to the part a neat touch of lightness, and where necessary, fairly convincing drama. Delaney, newspaper reporter and friend of Foster, comes to the rescue when Foster is framed twice, first when he is found in the apartment of a notorious woman, brought there through a ruse, next when he is arrested on a charge of first degree murder.

Foster rides into all sorts of complications, the first "frame-up" resulting in his dismissal from office, the second putting him in grave danger of a conviction for a murder he did not commit. The victim, and several others immediately following, are all killed the same way, by a gun which makes little noise, leaves no bullet hole. It develops, as Delaney and Miss Knapp ferret out the truth, that the radical and half-insane Auer had invented the gun, planned to wipe out all crooks, all grafters draining the public pocketbook at the expense of anyone who stood in the way. Auer confesses at the district attorney's office, then kills the crooked official, commits suicide.

The picture is fair program material, lacking a mystery element with reference to the killings, since that is perfectly obvious from the start, but maintaining a reasonably rapid pace. Characterized by good performances, the picture may be sold as an exposure of political machinery, building on the story of the young mayor who tries to do the right thing, and finally succeeds in clearing the city. The average audience should find it moderate entertainment, but it is not material for the juvenile.—Aaronson, New York.

Desert Demons

Interesting

Of intense and unusual interest is this subject, picturing in carefully photographed close-up for the most part the manner in which the battle for life goes on among the crawling things of the desert during the comparative cool of the evening, when the sun has relented slightly. Seen are the giant lizards, the marvelous instinctive mechanical genius of the spider, spinning his web, catching a butterfly. The closing sequence is a remarkable picture of a great king snake in battle with a tarantula. The deadly venomous tarantula vanquishes his foe with his poisoned fangs. An excellent subject, of unusual interest.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Divorce Courtship

(RKO)

Good Comedy

Elderly appearing Joseph Cawthorn, as the divorce court judge with the slightly foreign accent, is the chief reason why this is a good comedy, though Harry Gribbon and Mae Busch have more than a little to do with it. Cawthorn brings a reunited couple home to dinner to learn how happy he is. Gribbon is the young husband, Mae Busch the judge's wife. He accidentally becomes entangled with the little southern girl across the hall, and Miss Busch goes up in smoke. When the couple arrives, he introduces the girl as his wife and the fun begins. It is fast, active and amusing and stands as a comedy rather above the average in its production of laughs.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Fresh Ham

(RKO)

Amusing

Amusing in not too unusual animated fashion is the yarn of Cubby Bear and his vaudeville agency. His chief difficulty is in the form of a persistent and ancient duck-Shakespearean actor, while other "acts" come in to stir things up. In the animated style, it is an amusing number.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Popeye, the Sailor

(Paramount)

Amusing

Light, lively and somewhat new is the introduction of Popeye, the powerful sailor of comic strip fame, in an animated cartoon by Max Fleisher. Popeye's fist demolishes anything that happens to be in front of him, and when a mammoth sailor takes his girl, he has a grand scrap. The train is coming down upon the girl, tied to the track, when Popeye crumbles it with one blow. Bill the short for the youngsters. They should get a great kick out of it.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Hot Hoofs

(Educational-Fox)

Fair Comedy

For those who like the Two Black Crows, Moran and Mack, this will probably be a reasonably enjoyable comedy. It concerns the race track and the manner in which the two gentlemen of color are played for a good thing by the owner of a lame horse, then turn the tables on him by painting his white horse black and winning a race with it as their own. The dialogue has a laugh or two and the comedy as a whole should be found rather appealing. The Black Crows are sometimes difficult to understand, but they are fairly amusing.—Running time, 18 minutes.

The Mellerdrammer

(United Artists)

Good

This time Mickey, the inimitable, stages an "Uncle Tom meller," with assorted animated mishaps in the accepted, and approved, Mickey fashion, while the antics of the animated audience contribute not a few of the laughs. It is good cartoon material, and the youngsters, old and young, should enjoy it.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Attending both conventions were the distribution executives of the home office, headed by Felix Feist, and including: Howard Dietz, Fred C. Quimby, Jay A. Gove, Allan F. Cummings, John S. MacLeod, William R. Ferguson, Si Seadler and Charles Deesen.

William F. Rodgers, of the home office sales executive staff, was on hand at Detroit. Also present at the Kansas City meeting were Edward M. Saunders, Thomas J. Connors, Harold Postman, Joel Bezahler, Selvyn J. Levinson.

Eighty-eight salesmen attended one or the other of the two conventions. Special convention luncheons, screenings and a banquet were held both at Detroit and Kansas City.

PARAMOUNT LIST INCREASED TO 65

As Paramount's selling legions foregathered at New York's Waldorf-Astoria Hotel for the Eastern sales convention. Important among those present were: J. J. Unger, who opened the session; George J. Schaefer, Neil Agnew, John Hammell, Stanley Waite, John C. Flinn, Milt Kusel, Ed Ruff, Sam Dembow, Jr., Henry Randall, Harvey Seigel, Myron Sattler and a host of others.

Confident that the new selling season will usher in a pronounced trade revival, Paramount-Publix announced this week its decision to release 65 features, 125 shorts and 104 newsreel issues in 1933-34. Although the number of new short subjects planned nearly equals the total of current releases, there will be five additional features marketed in the coming season.

Announcement of the company's plans, which signaled the start of new selling activities, was made on Monday in New York at the first of three regional sales conventions. This meeting, held at the Waldorf-Astoria Monday and Tuesday, and attended by home office executives and field workers from New York, New England and the Atlantic states, will be followed by a meeting of southern and midwestern sales staffs, opening Thursday morning at Chicago. The western forces will assemble at Los Angeles on July 5 and 6. Plans for a southern session, to be held at New Orleans, were cancelled over the weekend.

Paramount's Decentralized Production

Executives of the company hope that during 1933-34 box-offices will react favorably to its new system of decentralized production, whereby outside independent producers will contribute substantially to the feature schedule. Heretofore Paramount depended exclusively on centralized mass production at the studios. In this connection, the company announced a minimum of 22 features for 1933-34 to be produced by individual units, as follows: Charles R. Rogers Productions, ten; B. P. Schulberg Productions, eight; Cecil B. DeMille, four.

Paramount will offer for star billing next season a new team composed of Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland. They will appear in at least two. Other teams will be: Fields-Skipworth, Fields-Ruggles-Boland, Sidney-Raft.

Richard Arlen will appear in three: Brian Aherne is scheduled for one: Lionel Atwill, Baby Le Roy and Kathleen Burke will each appear in one; Burns and Allen, two; Maurice Chevalier, one; Claudett Colbert, seven; Gary Cooper, four; Ricardo Cortez, four; Bing Crosby and Marlene Dietrich, three each; Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., one; W. C. Fields, two; Frances Fuller, three; Skeets Gallagher and Wynne Gibson, one each; Cary Grant, three; Jack Hale and Neil Hamilton, one each; Miriam Hopkins, three; Edward Everett Horton, two; Charles Laughton, three; Carole Lombard, two; Fredric March, four; Herbert Marshall and the Four Marx Brothers, one each; Jack Oakie, five; George Raft, five; Charlie Ruggles, four; Randolph Scott, one; Sylvia Sidney and Alison Skipworth, four each; Lilyan Tashman, Helen Twelvetrees, one each; Mae West, two; Dorothea Wieck, three, and Fay Wray, one.

Few Individual Starring Vehicles

In comparison, there are few individual starring productions on the schedule, practically all features calling for featured or co-starring casts. Brian Aherne and Marlene Dietrich will share honors in one picture, also the teams already mentioned. Jack Hale and Jack Oakie will co-star in one, likewise Maurice Chevalier and Sylvia Sydney.

Individual starring features will have Maurice Chevalier in one; Marlene Dietrich, three; Four Marx Brothers and Sylvia Sidney, one each. Mae West will star in two.

Charles R. Rogers will produce his ten features on the Paramount lot, thus answering reports he would move to another studio for the coming season. Mr. Rogers has signed Harry Joe Brown as associate producer. Returning from Europe shortly, Mr. Brown will also direct two of the ten.

The Marx film, "Duck Soup," will be sold separately. There is no mention on the schedule of Harold Lloyd, who has been distributing through Paramount for many years. Mr. Lloyd recently announced that he would make "Catspaw" next season, although distribution channels were not mentioned.

Wehrenberg Sees Recovery Act Aiding All Exhibitors

The National Recovery Act will remove many of the objectionable conditions now obtaining in the exhibition phase of the industry, in the opinion of Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, expressed on his return to St. Louis from a New York meeting of the executive board of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

In New York Mr. Wehrenberg also conferred with Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner theatres, relative to solving the double-bill and cut-rate admission problem in St. Louis. Warner took the position, Mr. Wehrenberg indicated, that it can do nothing in the St. Louis situation until the receivership actions against the St. Louis Amusement Company and Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., are finally terminated. Warner nominally controls these companies.

Universal Contest Prize Is Screen Test at World's Fair

A. H. McLaughlin, handling the Hollywood-Universal contest at the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago, has taken additional offices in Chicago's Film Row, at 831 South Wabash avenue, while retaining his headquarters on the studio lot at the Fair.

The contest, sponsored by Universal Pictures, will bring girl winners of local personality contests, conducted by theatres over the country, to Chicago's Fair, the visit serving as a prize. At the Fair, under the direction of Mr. McLaughlin, the girls will be given screen tests. Additional divisional managers to supervise the local contests have been appointed by Mr. McLaughlin in various key cities.

Joe Friedman, European foreign manager, is in England opening exchanges to handle the Columbia product previously distributed by United Artists.

Great Southern Offices Opened by Andy Wall

Great Southern Pictures Company, headed by Andrew (Andy) Wall, who was one of the organizers of Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, opened general offices in New Orleans last week, handling independent features and short product in eleven southern states. Among the first subjects being released are "Two Gun Caballero," "Woman in Bondage" and "Footsteps in the Night." Robert C. Kelley, formerly with Enterprise and with Warner Bros., will have an executive position.

Monogram's Vote To Join MPPDA Is Up This Week

Final decision of Monogram Pictures Corporation to join the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America will be made this week in all probability, according to W. Ray Johnston, president and chairman of Monogram's executive committee. Such a move has been under serious consideration for some months, Mr. Johnston said last week, but this fact was not brought to light until after the annual sales convention in Atlantic City late in April. At that time Monogram had been invited to join the recently organized Progressive Producers and Distributors Association, sponsored by Tobias A. Keppler, attorney. Monogram declined the invitation and it was then that Mr. Johnston announced the company's intention of becoming affiliated with the MPPDA.

All members of the executive committee are in favor of joining the Hays organization, Mr. Johnston said. The only drawback is the labor situation on the Coast. Under Monogram's present set-up as an independent producer, more liberal terms than those tendered the larger companies have been arranged with the studio unions. If Monogram joins, on expiration of present contracts salaries will have to be increased proportionately with the company's new position, it was pointed out. Coast officials of the company sent word last week to the New York home office that it would be advisable to withhold final decision until the exact stand of the unions could be determined.

Monogram announced in April that negative costs for the 1933-34 season would be stepped up to an average approximating that of one or two of the major companies. A budget of over $2,000,000 was set for the company's 20 or more feature pictures for the new season. It was decided to eliminate production of westerns, a field in which Monogram had specialized for two seasons. Class "A" pictures, with special attention to story values and timeliness, was the watchword set for 1933-34. A definite drive for first-run playdates was launched and Mr. Johnston said last week that the company now has about 20 first-run key city outlets for its product. This is partly a result of the general decentralization movement and partly because of the company's campaign for these localities, he said.

The executive committee is composed of W. Ray Johnston, Harry Thomas, president of First Division, Herman Rifkin, president of Hollywood Films Corp., Boston, Irving Mandel, president, Security Pictures, Inc., Chicago, and J. V. Ritchey, president, Ritchey Export Corp., and vice-president of Monogram.

To the Editor:

I have been sitting on the sidelines profiting from the reports sent in by the other exhibitors and decided to get on the Band Wagon and try to do some helping myself. I want to congratulate you on turning out such a wonderful magazine as the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. It is full of ideas and suggestions which mean dollars in the box office. Personally, I would hate to try to do without it.

At the present, showmanship is needed greatly, but all of the showmanship in the world will not make a picture click in a small community, if the picture will not deliver the goods. The big fellows may be able to lie to their patrons and get away with it. But in a small city where we are all friends and on speaking terms, we cannot afford to lie in our advertising and stay in business.

I believe that the producers would give us small fellows more confidence if they would quit lying to us. I have never met a film salesman or an exchange manager in my life who was man enough to admit that they had a poor picture. If the picture flops it is due to lack of showmanship and advertising.

Why don't the producers turn their sights on Main Street for awhile. I think the picture that is a success on Main Street would meet with equal success on Broadway. Let them forget about society and crooks and sophistication for awhile, come down to earth, make pictures full of human interest appealing to the masses and we would all be one, big, happy family.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD is helping by bringing these things to the producer's attention. Keep up the good work.

—R. L. NEDRY, Lyric theatre, Little Falls, Minn.

FIND HORSE-CABS "GONE HOLLYWOOD"

The answer to the New Yorker's perennial question as to where the once familiar, ancient horse-drawn cabs have gone has been interestingly answered by the New York Morning Telegraph, which reports, in a survey, that most of them have "gone Hollywood," there to become imprinted in indestructible celluloid. It is even true that a few carriage factories in the South and West still turn out landaus, broughams and sulkies. To be sure, many of the old standbys go to car-less Bermuda, and a few to South America and Africa, but the majority go to the motion picture.

ONTARIO WOMEN ASK GOVERNMENT SUBSIDY

If the Provincial Council of Women, of Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, has its collective way, the Ontario government will go into the motion picture business. The suggestion is that the government subsidize one theatre in each town of 10,000 population, for the presentation of one performance weekly suitable for the juvenile. Proportionately, says the Council, the government should aid additional theatres in larger centers on the basis of one house for each 5,000 inhabitants. Not specific in method, the Council believes the government might pay the film rental for the juvenile performance. Exhibitors are somewhat less than burning with enthusiasm, it is indicated.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Sioux Falls, S. D.

DEAR HERALD:

It won't be necessary for Secretary Wallace and the Department of Agriculture to take steps to curtail the production of farm products; the Lord is looking after that matter. We have been traveling with Sherm Fitch, manager for RKO, for the past week and we have covered pretty much all of South Dakota and there won't be enough wheat, oats and rye grown to feed the grasshoppers.

But speaking of Sherm Fitch. That bird hasn't any more regard for a man's feelings than a bull pup. He has a radio in his car and every time we would doze off to try and forget the heat he'd turn the damthing on and get a jazz orchestra. We threatened to shoot him several times and we wish now we had. His wife is sorry we didn't, too.

The heat must have gone to Sherm's gourd, for he wanted to bet us a case of "Prosperity" on everything he could think of. When we'd see a bird sitting on a telephone wire he'd stop the car and offer to bet us a case that it would fly west or east and let us take our choice.

He offered to bet us a case that it was 130 in the shade and before we'd gone a mile he offered to bet that it was 20 below zero, but every time he'd offer to bet he would start that jazz orchestra. We wished a thousand times that we had brought our gun. If ever we travel with that guy again it will be during the open season on district managers.

There, what did we tell you last week? We told you that if Charlie Ruggles was in RKO's "MELODY CRUISE" it would be a good one. We saw a screening of the picture today and Charlie is in it, and how. That boy Charlie draws four stars with us any time. When Charlie is in on the screen if we are not there you'd better call up the hospital and make inquiry about our condition.

We went into a cafe at Aberdeen and Sherm ordered a T-bone steak and the girl brought him pork chops. He looked at the girl and said: "Whadja mean bringing me pork chops; I ordered a T-bone steak." The girl begged his pardon and took the chops back, and we said to him, "Sherm, you shouldn't treat our little Nell that way," and Sherm replied, "Little Nell nothing; I wouldn't eat pork chops if it would keep my grandmother from having twins." There's no darn sense in a man talking that way.

We found two very delightful people operating the Majestic theatre at Aberdeen, Mrs. Elfrieda Mass and husband. It had been about four years since we called on them, and, even after they learned who we were, they invited us into their office. When we left we didn't take a thing with us except a pleasant memory and Mrs. Mass' check for a renewal of their subscription to the HERALD. The industry should have more like them.

A. S. Mannes operates the Ritz theatre at Aberdeen. This is another independent house, and we judge from all appearances that they are getting their share of the business regardless of the Publix opposition. We find that somehow this kind of opposition isn't cutting as much alfalfa as it used to. People seem to be having a more kindly feeling toward local operation.

J. P. Hartman operates the Astor theatre, another independently owned house. J. P. doesn't care what Publix is doing; all he's interested in is letting the public know that J. P. has at the Astor, and from the looks of his lobby and front the public don't have to ask.

We found John Hawkins of the Waubay theatre at Waubay nursing a sore jaw when we called. He had just come from the dentist office, where he had had every tooth in his head yanked out, and did he have our sympathy? We went through that ordeal back in the days when they used a canthook to yank.

We worked on Paul Anderson of the Strand theatre at Bryant trying to sell him the HERALD until we got up a sweat and we gave it up and went out and sat in the car. Sherm stayed with him for about an hour to sell him some RKO service and then came out and handed us four bucks and we asked what that was for and he said it was for Paul's subscription. We said, "Why Paul said he didn't want it," and Sherm replied, "Yes, but he did, but he said he didn't like the looks of you and he wouldn't trust you because he thought you'd steal it." Then we went into Paul's cafe.

The last time we saw Jack Shearer of the State theatre at Huron he was running a theatre at Park Rapids, Minn. That was about six years ago. Since then he operated a show at Rapid City, S. D.

Jack says opposition don't mean a thing to him; all he is interested in now is whether it is going to rain or not. Jack has got a young baby; that is, it must be young, for he says it is only three weeks old, and he thinks the sun, moon and stars and the most of South Dakota revolves around that kid. Whenever a man talks that way about his baby you may know that he's a real chap, and we've got Jack pegged in that class. Jack wanted to celebrate, and Sherm suggested that we help him do it. There's one thing we will bet our dough on, and that is that Jack's opposition knows that Jack is in town. Another thing that helps Jack out is that he's a HERALD fan.

At Chamberlain we met Mr. Beck, of the firm of Beck & Sorensen, who operate the State theatre. We found Mr. Beck a delightful gentleman, and the State theatre to be one of South Dakota's best. We also met H. P. Vogt, who formerly was the projectionist at the Estherville theatre at Estherville, Iowa. He remembered us from former days. Fred Legler is the projectionist at the State for Beck & Sorensen. Fred used to operate for Claude Hanson at Redfield, where we met him some years ago. Fred knows projection from A to Z.

By way of 1790 Broadway, New York, we have the following letter from our old friend Anton Gilles of the Gilles and Opera House theatres at Wahpeton, N. D.:

"Mr. Jenkins in his report to the HERALD of June 10 says that he found Mr. Frederick, of the Grand theatre in Breckenridge, Minn., making some picture frames, and Schrieber nursing a severe case of lumbago, and he said that they had just finished running 'So This Is Africa.' If Schrieber told him that he must have got it from Wahpeton, as we ran the picture. As Mr. Jenkins puts it, it is enough to give lumbago for miles around.

"I guess Jenkins was delirious from it himself, or from the 3.2 they are serving in Breckenridge, or he wouldn't have made this report. Wahpeton is only a rabbit's jump from Breckenridge, and I wish to advise Mr. Jenkins whenever you are in this neck of the woods again not to pass up Wahpeton."

And next time, Anton, you stay home when I'm around your bailiwick. By the way, glad to hear that your new state theatre association is off to a good start. And that goes, too, for our good friend John Piller.

COLONEL J. C. JENKINS.

The picture "The Little Damozel," released in this country by E. H. Goldstein, features Anna Neagle and James Rennie, and not Jack Buchanan, as was stated in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, issue of May 20. "Say It With Music," also released by Mr. Goldstein, was produced by British and Dominions Film Corporation, instead of British International Pictures, as stated.

Allied

CLEARING THE RANGE: Hoot Gibson—Only fair. Running time, 61 minutes. Played May 31-June 1.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatres, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp—Just fair week day feature. No one in cast that means anything to the box office. Running time, 67 minutes. Played June 10.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

AIR HOSTESS: James Murray, Thelma Todd—Here is another good picture from Columbia. Story and direction good and plenty of thrills and laughs. Enough action for Saturday but also good for any other day you can play it. Business not up to average on account of bad weather, but all who saw it were certainly pleased. This is the type of entertainment that we would like to have more like. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 10.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN: Barbara Stanwyck, Nils Asther—This is a fine picture of the kind. Acting splendid by both stars. "Story Big" but war, Chinese and horrible things our patrons have had too much of and they just won't come and see this kind of feature. People want something to laugh at and be entertained, not shocked.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: Nancy Carroll, John Boles—I did not think that this deserved the praise that has been given it by the critics in the larger cities and also in the trade press. It's a good little story, but the dialogue about the baby and what to do with it is rather frank, and I would say for adults only. It seemed to please but did not draw any extra business after we had given it extra advertising. Running time, 73 minutes. Played June 1.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

McKENNA OF THE MOUNTED: Buck Jones—Just an ordinary picture that seemed to please the western fans at 10c and 15c bargain prices. Band concert for competition and this kept a few of the regulars away. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 14.—Marion F. Bodewell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN: Jack Holt—Some more fine acting on Holt's part. The theme was of a hard-boiled "Dud" that used his fists instead of a gun. The picture is nothing to brag about and yet it won't harm your standing in the community.—L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN: Jack Holt, Lillian Miles—A good program picture. Jack Holt is good in any picture. He always gets his man.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MUSSOLINI SPEAKS: "A motion picture autobiography" of Benito. It was all right as a historic and travel, but only Italians and a few teachers came out to see it. It's a hard one to put over unless you have a large Italian neighborhood. The picture is about a speech of Mussolini at Naples. With various scenic-shots and events thrown in, the picture is interesting and educational. 90% of Nashwauk's Italians came to see it and they raved about it (evidently in Italian, for our box office took a nose dive the second night). Running time, 70 minutes.—L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

OBEY THE LAW: Leo Carrillo—Leo with his Italian dialect clicks in our town. This picture has Leo as a barber and he exposes a crooked ward political boss. I thought the picture to be a poor attempt at something but I must have been wrong, for it was liked. Running time, 60 minutes.—L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

OBEY THE LAW: Leo Carrillo, Lois Wilson—After reading many reports on how raw "So This Is Africa" is, I cancelled it out and set this picture in. Receipts, after two nights and one matinee, did not amount to enough to pay for films and express. The picture itself is all right, clean, dramatic and entertaining with a decided "good American citizenship" flavor to it, reminiscent of "The Star Witness." But it didn't draw. I'm sorry for my bank account that I didn't run "So This Is Africa," but I do recommend "Obey the Law" as a darn good show. Eddie Garr's impersonation of Groucho Marx and Maurice Chevalier was particularly good.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evalyn Knapp—A good program picture, has plenty of action and a nice little story. There is enough action in this for a Saturday night crowd, and if your patrons are getting tired of westerns try this on them for a change. We ran it on Friday night and it drew average business and pleased. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 6.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND: Lee Tracy—A very fine picturization of our debased politics. Lee Tracy as the vociferous young congressman should click anywhere; however, we did not have to call out the "reserves" to hold back the crowds.—L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

WHEN STRANGERS MARRY: Jack Holt—Good picture of its kind. Running time, 69 minutes. Played June 9-10.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

First National

BLONDIE JOHNSON: Joan Blondell—It has action and the people liked it. Played June 6-7.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BLONDIE JOHNSON: Joan Blondell, Chester Morris—Another gangster picture from Warner. Murder seems to be the most important point in making pictures now. Every picture made during 1933 has contained murder and the public is fed up on it. However, in spite of the murder angle this one is very good. Lots of excitement and thrills. Blondell very good and also Morris. Business about average. Play it only one day. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 7.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—A picture that drew well and pleased all. Not Barthelmess' best by far, but it was good and had a good box office report, which means plenty nowadays.—L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Our Sunday business was a little above average on this one, and the crowd thought it a great show. Joe gives you plenty of laughs as the small town ball player who made good with the Chicago Cubs. Try and get all the ball fans in on this. It's a great show for them, but will please most any picture fan. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 4.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

EMPLOYEES ENTRANCE: Warren • William—Very entertaining. Pleased majority. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 4-6.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—A mighty fine picture. Gave good satisfaction to all. The star's work was great. Played June 13-14.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GRAND SLAM: Paul Lukas, Loretta Young—An awful flop at the box office. Picture is not bad.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson, Bebe Daniels, Aline MacMahon—A supposed to be historic yarn, and it was well done, fine acting, but no draw at the box office.—L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson, Bebe Daniels—Liberty gave this picture four stars and I think they used very good judgment. I think it is a fine production and was very much pleased to again see Bebe Daniels back again. She is a polished actress and hope she will be seen again soon. Edward G. Robinson is always good and my patrons enjoyed this production, especially on account of the scenes being laid in Denver and also that they are interested very much now in the silver situation. Come on, First National, give us some more as good as this one. Running time, 84 minutes. Played April 27-28-29.—Earl D. Smith, Tower Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah. Suburban patronage.

20,000 YEARS IN SING SING: Spencer Tracy—Good picture. Did a nice business.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Here we have Joe E. as a champ swimmer with Farina as his trainer. The audience is kept in a happy mood. It takes Joe E. to fill our house, and that makes everybody happy.—L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—This picture is a big disappointment, entirely unsuited for the star. Those who remember her in silent pictures will not like this. Another one like this one and Clara is through. Fair business first night, poor second. Running time, 88 minutes. Played June 2-3.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Diana Wynward, Clive Brook—Well produced picture. Will not please fifty per cent. Did not do average business. Played June 11.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—A wonderful picture, which five patrons told me they enjoyed. The remainder of the audience were bored. Personally I enjoyed this picture very much but cannot run pictures for my own benefit. The English accent was hard to understand and small town patrons are not interested in history. A great production that is not meant for the small town. Running time, 110 minutes. Played June 9-10-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN WEST, THE: George O'Brien—Exceptionally high class week-end picture for the small town. Zane Grey seems to be the best star we can have to bill on the advertising of a western. This not a cowboy opera, strictly speaking, but enough action to please the western followers, yet having a good story. Photography excellent. Played June 9-10.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

HOT PEPPER: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe—Very good, everyone enjoyed this. Hot weather killed business. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 11-12.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HOT PEPPER: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe—No good. It fell flat at the box office. These two birds are through as far as drawing is concerned. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 11-12-13.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HOT PEPPER: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—Plenty of action and rough comedy. Will please the average country patrons.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. General patronage.

HUMANITY: Ralph Morgan, Boots Mallory—Very good picture, but a hard title with which to draw patrons. Business light in consequence. Played June 4-5.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S.D. Small town patronage.

IT'S GREAT TO BE ALIVE: Raul Roulien—Did not go over with me. Had nice music, but draggy and no appeal. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 11.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—A spicy little picture with plenty of pep and action which is bound to please all.—L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—This fell flat at the box office. If the drunk and some of the smut had been left out of the picture it would have gone over a lot better. Running time, 82 minutes. Played May 26-27.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—I always like Spencer Tracy in any picture and my audience thoroughly enjoyed the wise-cracking in this one. Not a mammoth production but one that will please most any kind of an audience. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 1-2.—Earl D. Smith, Tower Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah. Suburban patronage.

PLEASURE CRUISE: Genevieve Tobin, Roland Young—A very entertaining program picture. They all liked it. Lots of comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—Fair; none of the westerns draw much for us. Running time, 64 minutes. Played June 7-8.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—Very good Zane Grey western. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 2-3.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—This is a production that will please almost anybody who likes action, outdoor life and comedy. Good for any small town.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. General patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—No doubt the best small town picture of the year. Just the type Rogers shines in. Being so dry here hurt our attendance. I wish Fox would give us more pictures like this. Running time, 100 minutes. Played June 4-5-6-7.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—The world's best picture for the small town and country patronage, but I received a poor set of records which queered the picture for me. With good records this would have pleased 100%. A lot had been censored. Why film scenes that do not pass the censor board in Kansas but get by in Nebraska, fifteen miles from here? Running time, 100 minutes. Played June 7-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—This certainly did not prove the big attraction for me that I thought it would. It is good, all right, but we had the misfortune to play it during the recent heat wave and not even Will Rogers was strong enough to pull folks into a theatre that was not as cool as their own front porches.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Very interesting picture, that drew slightly better than average business. The photography is very dark in places. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 16-17.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Gene Raymond, Loretta Young—Very good picture. Different locale and well produced. No draw, however. Played June 9-10.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies—Good for city and suburban theatres but not of much value for country patronage.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. General patronage.

MGM

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper—I ran this one late for Friday night and Saturday matinee and it sure pleased the women and kiddies. Wish we could get more pictures like this for what the small town needs is a good, clean picture for the kiddies, something they understand and like. One 7-year-old said as he left the theatre, "Why don't you get some more pictures like this, Miss Gladys?"—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston, Karen Morley—Excellent. Will please majority if you can get them in. It's not a picture that will build. No love interest, strictly politics. People know what they want to see, and don't come unless they think they will like it. It's a picture everybody should see, but we did no business on it.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone—Barrymore and Stone are great. A good evening's entertainment absolutely ruined by entire cast of English players. They are all excellent actors and actresses, but you can understand very little they say. Why producers continue to use English-speaking people is beyond me. Had I known this, would not have shown it. Played June 8-9.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore—A lot of conversation about the depression. People did not care for it. I played Sunday and Monday and did not take in film rental.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone—A good picture that did about the poorest business this year. Not the picture's fault. Too many Barrymore pictures being made. Played June 13-14.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

MADE ON BROADWAY: Robert Montgomery, Sally Eilers—Very nice picture and drew better than average. Montgomery fine. Eilers okay but she's been free-lancing so much of late and the releases are too close. If companies are going to loan stars to one another they should make some arrangement to keep releases from conflicting. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 18-19.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

MEN MUST FIGHT: Diana Wynyard—Did not please. The acting was O.K. but the theme of the play did not get over.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—Good picture but for some reason it did not draw for us. It seems as if her pictures don't draw any more. The rental was too high. No more of her pictures unless we can buy them at a figure where they will make a little money. I am sick and tired playing pictures just for the fun of it. Running time, 76 minutes. Played May 21-22-23.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: John, Ethel and Lionel Barrymore—Very remarkable performance with a cast as near perfect as one could ask. Slightly gruesome in spots, it nevertheless holds the audience's attention from beginning to end. That is, it would if there was an audience. This took a terrible flop for us and cannot possibly pay expenses. Played June 18-19.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—Good. Harlow-Gable make a fine team. Good business. Played June 4-6.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Ramon Novarro, Helen Hayes—Very poor. Novarro and Hayes miscast in very poor story. No business. Running time, 79 minutes. Played June 11-12.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro—A great picture. Wonderful acting by the stars. Story of the type people have had too much of and they just won't come out to see this kind of entertainment. It makes no difference what stars are in them or who made the picture, they will not draw any business.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro—I would say this picture was a well made one, but as far as I go and from remarks from my patrons, I wish all companies would take all the prints they now have of Chinese pictures and send them to Frisco's Chinatown and leave them there. My opinion is that the picture was very long drawn out and tiresome. Running time, 79 minutes. Played June 10-11-12.—Earl D. Smith, Tower Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah. Suburban patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER? Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Not up to Keaton's standard. Very few laughs. Fair business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 7-8.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Not much of a picture. Did not draw.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—About half of the patrons stayed to see this picture twice and it pleased about 90 per cent. If I never see these two stars again it will be soon enough, but if small town theatres keep open it will be with this kind of picture. It is what the young folks demand and they compose 80 per cent of the audience now, so speed up the Keaton-Durante pictures. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 14-15.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—A very fine picture which will no doubt draw extra well in Catholic communities. We have quite a few here and must admit that we did extra business although even then there was practically no profit after the percentage was paid. Played June 4-5.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Monogram

DIAMOND TRAIL, THE—Rex Bell—A very good action picture. Pleased a Saturday crowd. Story interesting.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Helen Twelvetrees—Pretty good Chevalier, fairly free from the bedroom stuff that has dropped this star from the top. He doesn't draw for us these days. The baby rather steals the spot this time. Played June 11-12.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Helen Twelvetrees—Very cute. Holds interest and patrons go out feeling as though they had been entertained. Played June 18-19.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BIG BROADCAST, THE: Stuart Irwin, Leila Hyams, Bing Crosby and other radio stars—I had this picture booked for three days, held it over for another day, which is a pretty good boost for a picture in my theatre. It is a well directed picture and one that will get money in most any locality on account of the popular radio stars. If it does not get money, there is something wrong with the exploitation. I used an outdoor horn, giving the public songs, etc., by Kate Smith and Crosby. Running time, 88 minutes. Played March 18-19-20-21.—Earl D. Smith, Tower Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah. Suburban patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March—Great acting by Fredric March. Picture not very well liked by the women as there is no love interest. Business average.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herbert Marshall, Sari Maritza—Another good picture from Paramount. Direction good, acting good and story good. Paramount has the "stuff" so far this season and here's hoping they will keep up the good work. Marshall is very good and so is Maritza, while Ruggles and Boland furnish the comedy. In our town it will only stand one day as the main characters are not so well known. Business fair. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 14.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

EVENINGS FOR SALE—Herbert Marshall—One of those gay, delightful pictures that make one feel the evening has been well spent. However, it has no drawing power and we didn't seem able to put it over. Had no one the first night, but fair crowd the second so it seemed to have "word of mouth" pull.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS, A: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes—This drew a little above average business. Some people thought it was beautifully presented; others thought it disgusting. Personally, I thought it all right and was not ashamed to stand at the front door as folks went out.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FROM HELL TO HEAVEN: Carole Lombard, Jack Oakie—Now who would know that this was a fairly good picture, with race track background? We told 'em in our ads, but what about those who did not see ads? Friday and Saturday business off in consequence. Played June 16-17.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

FROM HELL TO HEAVEN: Jack Oakie, Carole Lombard—Light story on the "Grand Hotel" type which held interest throughout. A very good program picture which we would say is good for Saturday if any picture is good for any date. We haven't been able to find many which will pay expenses. Played June 16-17.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

GIRL IN 419, THE: James Dunn, Gloria Stuart—A swell show and did a good Sunday business. Monday poor. Personal appearance and same show of Dunn 30 miles from me day and date. This helped, I think. Played June 4-5.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—Very satisfactory western. Zane Grey's name helps at the box office. We like Paramount recording. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 9-10.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

I LOVE THAT MAN: Edmund Lowe, Nancy Carroll—Very fair entertainment. Lowe and Carroll are good in their parts. Played June 13-14.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe—This surprised me with its drawing power. We have not played many animal pictures so this proved a good Saturday night draw. Circus scenes good. Circus fire excellently done, and entire picture above average.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Frances Dee, Buster Crabbe—Here is the prize package in fanciful adventure dramas. Any one who has ever enjoyed the Tarzan type of pictures should be delighted with this. It has everything plus. Plenty of romance for the better halves. Clean as the proverbial hound's tooth. If ever there was a picture for the whole family this is it. Recordbreaking heat Sunday prevented much business. Monday was cooler and business was above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PICK UP: Sylvia Sidney, George Raft—Pleased small crowd who were looking for light entertainment Believe Sylvia Sidney as well liked as in any she has played in for a long time. They use her in too much sob stuff; in fact, who wants to see all this sob stuff now, any way? Aren't we looking for something to cheer us up now? Played June 11-12.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PICK UP: Sylvia Sidney, George Raft—Nice picture to better than average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

PICK UP: Sylvia Sidney, George Raft—It is a splendid all-talking picture if you like mostly talking. "Pick Up" will fill your wants. George Raft's voice recording is most excellent. Of course, this is a good picture, but it is not a "42nd Street." Folks, we theatre folks, I will venture to say there is not one of us but what has been hard hit and there is a cause for it more than this depression and I am telling it like I have seen it right here at my theatre in 18 years' experience. I will just mention "42nd Street" to explain myself. With a picture like this, right on the dot at 7:30 P. M. my ticket window is open and I have customers already lined up to do business with first night run good, second night better, third night extra good. So when this good picture has made me a little good money then along come 13 more of those all-talking kind that eat up the little good money I made on the one good one. And during the time I am playing those 13 unlucky ones my theatre-going crowd has become disgusted and lined up with other amusements. Amen.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

PICK UP: George Raft, Sylvia Sidney—A superior picture in every way. While it is more what is termed a woman's picture, men will also find it much to their liking. The sex angle has been handled very artistically. Get behind it. Considering the hot spell when this was played, it did about all that could be expected.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—It gets the business. Not for your church goers, of course. A man's picture, as the ladies can hardly admit they liked it much, even though they may. It will be interesting to see what can be done with Mae West in getting stories that she can readily deliver in. She's a mistress of her art in her one character. Nobody else can handle it and make you like her, too. Running time, 7 reels.—Played June 4-6.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March, Claudette Colbert, Elissa Landi—Wonderful production. To my mind, DeMille's greatest. Advance word of mouth of the horrors of the arena scenes kept business below what the picture deserved. I cannot help but feel that the great message of the picture so far overcomes this that such an idea is almost foolish. But I couldn't seem to get that over to my people here. Many of our regulars refused to take a chance after what they've heard. Running time, 14 reels. Played May 28-30.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March, Elissa Landi, Claudette Colbert, Charles Laughton—Get out your adjectives and superlatives to properly describe this. It is massive, gigantic, spectacular, awe inspiring, etc. A lot of money was spent on this and I hope they get it back plus a profit. Fredric March is superb in this. Elissa Landi is very appealing as the Christian maiden. The arena spectacle is something they won't forget in a hurry. I used the special herald they have on this subject, gave them to our patrons as well as distributing them in the neighborhood. The weather favored us, a cool spell after a hot spell. Business on this was very good.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

STRICTLY PERSONAL: Dorothy Jordan, Marjorie Rambeau, Eddie Quillan—Another nice program picture, that's all. Holds interest of those who come, but who comes any more? Played June 9-10.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Verna Hillie, Stuart Erwin—Just a fair western. Lacked the magnificent scenery generally used as background for Zane Grey stories. Played June 2-3.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

WOMAN ACCUSED, THE: Cary Grant, Nancy Carroll—I did not read the story when it appeared in Liberty magazine. Ten famous authors each wrote a chapter, so it ought to be good. Whether the picture follows the story closely I cannot say, but they made a mighty good job of it. From the very first flash until the final fadeout, it holds your interest every second. They have given this a classy production. Handle this as you would a big special. The picture will back you up and the ending will send them out pleased. Business is about what you would expect on a beautiful sunny Sunday.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

RKO

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore, Katharine Hepburn—If your patrons like real, honest to goodness heavy drama, this is a feature that they will like. Drew a very satisfactory business at my theatre and I did not have to mortgage the home to pay for it. As far as I go RKO has made quite a number of features that have been very good on drawing power this year. Running time, 70 minutes. Played March 18-19-20-21.—Earl D. Smith, Tower Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah. Suburban patronage.

CHEYENNE KID, THE: Tom Keene—Very good western, but hot weather ruined my business. Played June 6-7.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHEYENNE KID: Tom Keene—If your patrons like western pictures, this one will please. Played June 7. —J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—I think Dix is a wonderful actor, but he is badly miscast in this picture. Too much love and too slow for this boy. Running time, 86 minutes. Played June 11-12.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HALF-NAKED TRUTH, THE: Lee Tracy, Lupe Velez—Lee Tracy is the show, with Lupe holding her own. Good entertainment. Played June 6-7.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Strong stuff that gripped our patrons. Good acting and action. A good one of its kind.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. General patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—Children and men thought it great, but the ladies stayed home. Worth about one-half of what RKO gets for it. Running time, 100 minutes. Played June 9-10.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Tied up with the ladies' guild of the Congregational Church and did the best business that we have done since the depression. This is a dandy little picture for a church benefit and every one was well pleased. Sound was very good. Running time, 7 reels. Played June 7-8.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

MEN OF AMERICA: Bill Boyd—Just a fair picture. Good for small town. Not Boyd's best.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. General patronage.

OUR BETTERS: Constance Bennett—Strange as it may seem to some of you this thing went over rather well for me, and drew better than average business. I saw several bad reports on this and laid off on advertising it strong. The women came in droves to see it at the matinee, liked it very much and went out and sent other women at night. Business good. It has some red hot moments in the dialogue and action, maybe that is what drew them. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 13.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

PAST OF MARY HOLMES, THE: Helen MacKellar, Jean Arthur, Eric Linden—Another good picture, but hard to get them in on that title. Rex Beach's tale, "The Goose Woman." Original title would have meant more. Patrons just didn't take a chance. Played June 18-19.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver—A good picture with plenty of comedy, but it couldn't buck the hot weather. Played June 11-12.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SAILOR, BE GOOD: Jack Oakie—A very nice little program picture that has plenty of laughs in it and lots of action. Jack Oakie is some box fighter in this one and as dumb as ever with the gals. Our Friday night crowd went for this one in a big way and it pulled average business without extra advertising. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 2.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SAILOR, BE GOOD: Jack Oakie, Vivienne Osborne—One of them rough program pictures that please the roughnecks. Satisfaction about 50-50. Played June 15-16.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SILVER CORD, THE: Irene Dunne, Joel McCrea—Ran this one on a two-for-one bargain night and the patrons lost at that. If Laura Hope Crews had been left out of the picture it might have got by. The patrons even hissed every time she came on the screen. Played June 13.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore, Myrna Loy—Another crow from RKO. The school teachers and a few of the others thought this extra good, but all others thought it the worst they ever saw. RKO had better start making pictures for the masses and not for certain classes or something is going to pop. This might have been great in Radio City, but in my town it did not draw twice the film rent. Barrymore does some great work in this, and personally I enjoyed the picture, but I'm in this business to make money. This one lost money. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 7-8.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—A fine cast in an excellent picture with plenty of action. Hot weather hurt business on this. Universal's prints are not any too good. Played June 9-10.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—A real air thriller, full of pep, action and a packed house in spite of a bad rainstorm. Running time, 90 minutes. —L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty—Eight long reels of snarling tigers and lions. No story; would have made a very acceptable one-reel subject. If this is too long for your show you can eliminate reel six. Last of five and first of seven connect in good shape. We did this. Played June 17.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING PRESIDENT, THE: Uncle Carl is sure slipping when he has to resort to handing this kind to exhibitors. Just a lot of old news clips put together with an alluring title hung on to it. Universal, double shame on you.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman, John Boles, Bing Crosby—Splendid. Run it if you want a good musical. It's better than when first released account not so long. Played June 11-12.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR: Gloria Stuart, Nancy Carroll—You may stack this up against anything made this year and it is my opinion that this picture will come out on top. It is by far better than anything that any one has done, and it will make a super offering for any one's theatre. The opening scene, a love affair between Gloria Stuart and Paul Lukas, is the most clever and most real that one can imagine. The performance of Frank Morgan will undoubtedly be given credit for the best one of the month.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LAUGHTER IN HELL: Pat O'Brien—Poor, much too draggy. No drawing power. The public are tired of these gruesome films. Played June 9.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

NAGANA: Tala Birell—Just an average picture. Won't hurt you and won't help much.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—If you enjoy good laughs, don't fail to see this one. Especially enjoyed by the married people. Good at box office. Running time, 71 minutes. Played June 12-13.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—Business below average. A fairly entertaining picture, but Lee Tracy

A TRIPLE PASS, BUT WHO STARTED IT?

That the "What the Picture Did for Me" department is fulfilling its mission of providing exhibitors with a common meeting ground is exemplified in the following exchange of letters. And Edward L. Ornstein of the Vernon Theatre at Mount Vernon, Kentucky, wants to know the identity of the exhibitor in Boston, Massachusetts, who commented on his reports. Mr. Ornstein writes:

Enclosed find copy of a letter which I received several days ago. It is self explanatory. I only wish to state that I would have appreciated it very much more, had the sender signed his name to it. This letter proves how your column brings exhibitors together.

I would appreciate it very much if you would publish this letter. It would stimulate other exhibitors into sending in their comments to the "What the Picture Did for Me" column. I might, too, find the name and address of the writer of this letter. Here is a man over a thousand miles away who writes to me. You would be doing other exhibitors a great injustice if you didn't publish it.—EDWARD L. ORNSTEIN, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky.

The letter, postmarked from Boston, follows:

Mr. E. L. Ornstein:

I do not know you but I admire your comment on "Age of Consent" in the HERALD.

I am glad to note that there are some exhibitors still left with a sense of dignity and candid enough to state his real impression. It would not do to sign my name. Keep up your good work.—Boston, Mass.

is no drawing card here. With the thermometer registering an even 100 degrees in the shade, no picture will draw much business. Sound excellent. Running time, nine-reels. Played June 10-11.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

ROME EXPRESS: Esther Ralston, Conrad Veidt—Reports don't lie and mine on this is like others who reported this as n. g. It's a shame to foist this kind on the public.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

TERROR TRAIL, THE: Tom Mix—Here is another knockout western from Tom Mix. You boys who show westerns and do not have the Mix pictures are certainly missing a lot. For me Tom Mix talking pictures are going over better than the old silent ones. It is a remarkable thing to note that after being on the screen for about 20 years, Tom Mix is still right at top. Business good three days last part of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind.

TERROR TRAIL, THE: Tom Mix—Good Western, plenty of riding and shooting. Played June 10.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Full of comedy, and funny situations, action and acting. Not suitable for high-class towns.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. General patronage.

Warner

EX-LADY: Bette Davis—A poor excuse for a picture. It was the mushiest that we have had for a long while. Not a favorable comment from any of those that saw it. Just too sophisticated for us poor "Ex-Ore" Diggers.—L. V. Bonaventura, Brown's Grand Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn. General patronage.

EX-LADY: Bette Davis—Well, Bette Davis is not off to a very good start as a star. One more like this one and she will be all washed up before she starts. This type story will not go in small towns. It's plenty hot in dialogue and action and my people thought it very silly. Some of the younger set said they liked it. But the married ones and the older people razzed it plenty. Watch your step on Bette. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 11-12.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

EX-LADY: Bette Davis—Good picture of the modern idea of living. Pleased the young folks. It's poison to grandma. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 12-13.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

42ND STREET: Warner Baxter, Ruby Keeler, Bebe Daniels—We did the biggest business in months. It pleased most people.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

42ND STREET: Warner Baxter, Ruby Keeler, Bebe Daniels—Ready built box office attraction for any town large or small. Its name and advance national advertising have done the work for the exhibitor. Comparisons are odious, but it doesn't seem to rate up in the audience mind with the original great musicals, but it won't hurt the business on it. Played May 14-15-16.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

42ND STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—A wonderful picture; gave 100 per cent satisfaction. The stars and all of the cast great. I could not find a person that was not satisfied with the show. Played June 11-12.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

42ND STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—When it comes to musicals we should thank Warner Bros. for this one. Book it and push it and your patrons will thank you. Running time, 89 minutes. Played June 16-17.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GIRL MISSING: Ben Lyon, Peggy Shannon—A good entertaining picture with no dull spots. It will please.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren William, Joan Blondell, Aline MacMahon, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Warners have done it again. Greater box office attraction than the old "Gold Diggers of Broadway." For the first time in five years my house was not large enough. Hot weather and depression has no effect on the drawing power of this picture. Absolutely the greatest box office attraction of all time. I am speaking strictly of box office. My personal opinion is that the old "Gold Diggers" is the best picture, and because of the success of the first one this has the greater drawing power. But this is some picture itself, and just twice as good as "42nd Street," and doubling "42nd Street" at the box office.

Had the scene, "The Forgotten Man," been placed in the middle of the picture instead of the end, it would have been better, but when a picture breaks all records it's hard to say it could be improved on.

I'd like to see Warners re-issue the old "Gold Diggers." It would still make a million for Warners, and a lot of dough for us poor exhibitors right now. The same goes for "The Desert Song," "The Song of the Flame," "Sally" and others.

We are the first in the intermountain region to play the new "Gold Diggers" and it's some honor to get this attraction before the big boys. We advertised it a hundred miles in every direction and were paid for our efforts.

When you get this picture, remember you've got the greatest box office attraction ever made, and it's just up to you to get out and make enough for your summer's vacation. That's what I did, and I am off to Chicago to the World's Fair tomorrow. Good bye, boys; I'll meet all you fellows who run the new "Gold Diggers" at Warner's exhibit at the Century of Progress. Played June 11-12-13.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

KING'S VACATION, THE: George Arliss—Good clean picture that no one cares to see.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney—Not my idea of a good picture, but it pleased the Saturday-Sunday patronage and is evidently the kind of picture they want. Played June 17-18.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

RIDE HIM, COWBOY: John Wayne—A good western that pleased the kiddies and the country patronage at the Saturday matinee. Played June 10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

UNTAMED AFRICA: This is as good a jungle picture as we have had. Compares well with "Bring 'Em Back Alive" or any of the others. But of course they are tired of this type of picture. We had a clause in our contract that would have allowed us to cancel this, but we wanted to play fair with Warner as they have given us some good pictures this year and we do not feel like canceling their poor ones. We played it to less than average business. If you can put over a June picture play this. Running time, 56 minutes. Played June 9.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—One of the best pictures of this or any other year. Just what the exhibitors have been praying for. Splendidly produced, acted and directed. Story good and interesting from start to finish. If the producers would make more pictures like this one, the poor exhibitors would be able to get out of the red. Give it all the playing time you can and advertise it as good clean entertainment. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 12-13.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

World Wide

CROOKED CIRCLE, THE: Ben Lyon, Zasu Pitts—One of the best and funniest mystery stories ever brought to the screen. Will make a dandy Saturday show. Use it if you haven't already done so. Entirely suitable for the kids.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DRUM-TAPS: Ken Maynard—The Boy Scout angle to this film seemed to keep the adults away. They seemed to think it was a picture depicting scout training. It really is not up to Ken's standard of his other pictures.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TRAILING THE KILLER: Caesar, the Wolf Dog—Very good picture, but no drawing power. We just couldn't get them in. Do not play this picture on Sunday as it will not do the business. Not a woman in the picture. Running time, 62 minutes. Played May 28-29.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

BURLESQUE—Terry-Toon—Fairly good cartoon. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LAMBS ALL-STAR GAMBOLS: Lambs Gambols—Another Lambs Gambol comedy from Columbia. This is the second comedy of this series and both have been terrible. Many kicks and quite a few walk-outs on them. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MGM

CALL HER SAUSAGE: Taxi Boys—This is the last thing in slapstick comedy. Lots of laughs from the kids. It's rough and funny.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

BUGS IN LOVE: Silly Symphony—Good.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ART JARRETT: Nick Kenny, No. 2, Radio Series—Acceptable. Nothing to rave over. Nothing objectionable. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHOULD CROONERS MARRY? Frank Albertson—Just a very ordinary comedy that didn't mean a thing. Sound in places was not so good. People nowadays want comedies with more pep. Running time, two reels.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

SHRIEK, THE: Oswald Cartoon—Only fair. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BOSKO'S DIZZY DATE: Looney Tune Cartoon—Good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CONTACT: Frank Hawks—Very entertaining and amusing if you care for airship flying. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GREAT BIG BUNCH OF YOU, A: Merry Melody Cartoon—Good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HERE, PRINCE: Joe Penner—Some liked, others thought it too silly. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HEY, POP: Fatty Arbuckle—Nothing to it. Not a good laugh in the two reels. Fatty can't come back. I guess he is through. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SKY SYMPHONY: Stoopnagle & Budd—One of the best two reel subjects we ever played.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TRANSPORTATIONS OF THE WORLD: E. M. Newman World Adventures—In this series are shown the various methods of transportation of the world. Very interesting, if your patrons like this sort of entertainment. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WORLD'S CHAMP: Jack Dempsey — Only fair comedy. Dempsey may be a great fighter but on the screen he is just another flop. We had many people walk out on the comedy and come back when the feature started. Even the children did not like this one. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

HEROES OF THE WEST: No. 8, with Noah Beery, Jr.—Got off to a good start, but have steadily lost out. There is such a sameness to it that it is utterly tiresome.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

JUNGLE MYSTERY: Tom Tyler—Just finished last chapter. We believe serials indispensable to get the kid business. They, and grown-up serial fans, all liked this one.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 179.—(A) If the collector lens of a condenser be 4.5 inches from the light source, and this distance be reduced to 4 inches, what diameter collector lens would be required to pick up an amount of light equal to that picked up under the first-named condition? (B) What percentage of the light would be lost by reducing the distance light source to lens as set forth?* (C) Exactly what factors limit distance of collector lens from light source when a straight or H.I. arc lamp is used; when a reflector type lamp is used?

Answer to Question No. 172

Bluebook Question No. 172 was: (A) To what should authorities pay close attention in the matter of removing possibility of fire panic? (B) Does limiting size of projection room ports properly protected by properly fused fire shutters serve any good purpose? (C) Give us your own ideas of effectively fusing port shutters, remembering that to prevent danger of fire panic port shutters must fall within not to exceed two seconds of the starting of an aperture fire.

Here is the list of those who answered acceptably: C. Rau and S. Evans, E. Danielson, L. VanBuskirk, G. E. Doe, H. Edwards, B. Doe, J. Wentworth, T. Van Vaulkenburg, K. Dowling, R. K. Wayland, D. T. Arlen and M. Spencer, L. Hutch and D. Goldberg, E. E. Parkinson, H. D. Schofield, D. Little and J. H. Rathburn, E. W. Warner, D. M. Banks and M. Summers, G. Tiplin, D. Emmerson, M. Greig, R. Rubin and L. Hendershot, B. L. Banks, T. Kelley and C. Cummings, D. Haber and A. Breaston, J. T. Ballinger and D. L. Mason, R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing, H. B. Coates, D. Holler and D. R. Peters, M. L. Dinpp and L. S. Quegg, S. Maybe and R. D. Konley, A. Bailey, T. Davis and T. Lambert, K. L. Knight, A. Geibto, B. Jones, A. Ilks and P. L. Jenson, T. Lavenburgh, P. T. Zann and L. Grant, R. Geddings, P. L. Danby, B. L. Blinkendorfer, G. Harrison and E. Harlor, D. U. Grainger, W. and S. F. Love, H. True and S. True, D. L. Danielson and T. R. Bancroft, H. Rogers, H. T. and J. N. Williams, G. Tinlin, B. Diglah and P. Jackson, M. R. Davis, F. F. Franks and P. K. Daniels, R. Suler and R. Wheeler and D. E. Bond, M. H. Lonberger, D. L. Peterson, G. Farmann, L. D. Jones and W. L. Smith, M. L. George and R. Singleton, D. Michaelson, D. L. Dillon, R. S. Allen and. T. N. Williams, J. Cermak, B. L. Tanner and E. Rymer, T. Lambert and T. Davis, L. D. Thomas and F. H. Daniels, L. H. Simmons, P. L. Danby, D. L. Sinklow, O. L. Daris and M. Simms, L. Thomas and D. D. Davis, D. Anderson, G. H. Boyd and L. H. Hines and G. Landers, T. McGruder, D. L. Howard, S. D. Adler.

There were many excellent answers to section A, but the outstanding one was, it seems to me, that of G. E. Doe, who says:

"Provided the projection room has thoroughly fireproof walls, ceiling and floor, there is not the slightest danger to an audience from actual danger of burning. If the gasses and smoke be provided means of escape from the projection room to the outer air, then no danger of suffocation exists. There is, nevertheless, a very serious danger, viz.: panic!

"The things authorities should, but very often do not, pay intelligent attention to in removing possibility of panic are (1) Thoroughly fireproofing of walls, ceiling and floor. This item is generally well attended to nowadays. (2) Means for removal or escape of the enormous amount of smoke and gas generated by a film fire from the room to the air outside the theatre building, as fast as it forms. (3) The selection of fuses that will act quickly to drop all port fire shutters and automatically open vent pipes to their full capacity, at the same time turning on all exhaust fans to their capacity. (4) The placement of the fuses selected where they will have as nearly as possible instantaneous contact with actual blaze when fire starts. Metallic fuses cannot be depended upon to act quickly enough even when so placed. Some highly inflammable substance, film for example, is best suited for instantaneous acting fuse links. However, to get sufficiently quick action such fuse must be so placed that it will have direct contact with the very first flicker of blaze."

[Note: It would seem to me projector manufacturers might, without any appreciable added cost, equip their projectors with a film fuse link installed in a slot in the mechanism casing immediately over the aperture. No room for it? It can be done. The fuse element might consist merely of a round "string" of celluloid. —F. H. R.]

(B) D. Danielson says exactly what almost every one has said in various forms of words, namely: "If port shutters are properly made, properly installed and properly fused, no good purpose is served in limiting their dimensions. An object without friction, except with the air, will fall sixteen feet per second." (Not checked but presumably correct.—F. H. R.)

To which many added the thought that limiting port size may and very often does hamper projection and make for poor results, all of which is evenly and exactly true. For years some official "experts" (?) insisted upon limiting port sizes to 4 inches wide by 12 inches high. Terrible! In Richmond, Va., many years since, I actually saw (believe it or not) an observation port in a brick wall 12 inches thick which measured a trifle less than 4 inches square. Only a spot of the screen about 6 feet across could be seen by the projectionist. When there was a shadow on the screen too small to reach into the range of that "port," well it was just too bad.

(C) I am free to say that very few of those whose names are included in this week's list as successful were fully so on this one. I just hated to cut the list down to almost nothing by eliminating all who failed on this one, so I passed them with intent to "land on them" here. Dale Danielson came nearest to making fully good by describing a system he had himself had inspected in some unnamed theatre. You people take a look-see at what J. Wentworth says:

"First, some master element, either a cord or mechanical arrangement, must be the movable element held in place by the fuses and released by the burning or melting of any one of them. All port shutters must be attached to and held open by this single element, so that when it is released all shutters are also released and all fall. This element must be so arranged that it may be released manually, preferably at a point close to the main entrance to the projection room.

"The fuses themselves must be of such nature that they will "let go" practically instantly from contact with blaze. They must be so located that the incipient blaze will reach them immediately. In practice, fuse metal requires an appreciable length of time to melt, even when in direct contact with such a blaze as would be set up the first second or two of a film fire at the aperture of a projector. It then is advisable to not depend upon metal fuses, though they may, if desired, be used in addition to some quicker acting device."

 Note: Since it cannot be expected that every man can make calculations of this sort I will not discard your answer as a whole should you fail in B. As a pointer it is the comparison of the areas of a 4.5 inch circle with the area of the face of a lens of the diameter required.*

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"FIRST CLASS JANITOR"

Besides summer colds and spinach, one of our pet hates is the term "first class janitor" when used to indicate managerial inefficiency. We hear it often used contemptuously to classify the services of certain managers at one house or another where agility is often supposed to spell "ability."

Granted that there are exhibitors who overemphasize the janitorial aspects of the manager's job, and further granted that there are managers whose greater virtues lie in their ability to keep a house clean—just what is wrong with being a "first class janitor?"

We were fortunate in serving our theatre apprenticeship under the wing of Col. E. A. Schiller, now vice president and general operator of Loew Theatres. And what he first impressed upon us, indelibly and vehemently, was as cleanliness is next to godliness, so is cleanliness in the theatre next to showmanship, in fact an integral part of real showmanship.

And in the beginning, we sometimes pondered the necessity of keeping things so everlastingly clean, but our following years in the theatre business proved that the most gifted showman backed up with the greatest box office attractions cannot do consistent business in a dirty, poorly maintained theatre.

Certainly, managers should be allowed the necessary freedom of action and thought to plan and execute money campaigns. But every last manager who calls himself that should concern himself as much with the cleanliness of his house, and not to be satisfied with anything less than a spotless theatre, well ventilated, comfortable and safe from every physical hazard.

Webster defines the term janitor in a general sense, as "one who takes care of a building." Well, don't you take care of a building, and if you do, aren't you "first class?"

Yes, it does take constant effort to insure cleanliness, and help slips at times. Those are the instances to guard against, for it is nothing to laugh off when Miss Gussie Fan comes howling to show you the dust the sleeve of her new georgette dress gathered from an arm-rest. A dollar against a doughnut that Gussie will go out speaking plainly, and why take on that extra free headache?

We're not going into any dissertation on how to keep house. Managers know what to do, from the boiler room to the booth. Try and find a real "up there" theatre showman today who among his other qualities can't do a real job of janitoring, who doesn't know as much or more about proper maintenance as his engineer, superintendent, stage manager and chief operator.

Most first-class showmen are "first-class janitors" — and proud of it, too!

HAPPY DAYS?

Some days ago, Motion Picture Daily ran a front page story that rated the box Red Kann gave it. Mason Dax, of the Hipp, Sioux City, Iowa, tilted salaries ten per cent all around. And while we received no first-hand report on the results of the glad news, we'd like to think, and we're pretty sure this happened:

Heartened that his house was going deeper into the black, Dax sat himself down and mused as follows: "Well, my house staff has been working harder for less money, and now that business is on the up, if I take some of the extra dough and raise salaries the boys and girls will be able to get some of the things they need and pay a few bills.

"And by giving them this little boost, my theatres will be the winner for the staff will dig in all the harder for still better business." He gets up, bangs his desk, exclaims, "I'll do it," and announces the news.

Then what happened? Pu-lenty. From the manager down to the porter, everyone just exuded such good news and good times that even the theatre seemed to take on a friendlier atmosphere. "Drop ins" became so impressed with the personality of the house that they became regular patrons. And every day the theatre made more friends and took in more money.

That's what we choose to believe happened, and we can't be far wrong. As a stimulant for ailing box offices, Dax's action might be considered by other exhibitors. He is to be commended for displaying sound business psychology.

OFF THE RECORD STUFF

To the Manager of the Pleasant Neighborhood Theatre Not Too Far Away from the Editorial Sanctum

A few days ago, in the balcony of your theatre, the seat next ours lacked an arm rest. At different times during the course of the performance, three picture hungry patrons waded through the row, sat down in the guilty seat, spread themselves, discovered the absence of the necessary rest, grumbled out loud, got up and waded back to the aisle, still grumbling, distracting the attention of those nearby who were enjoying the picture.

Perhaps the "casualty" occurred while the show was going on and no doubt the damage repaired at next day's regular house inspection. But just to make sure, may we suggest that you or your assistant take another "look see"?

They're Off! Drive Starts Today In July Club Contest for Free Vacation Awards to World's Fair

Film Companies Offer of Seven One Week Trips for Best July Exploitation Warmly Greeted By Managers in United States and Canada; Campaigns Already Under Way as Enthusiastic Showmen Battle Hard for Big Prizes Sponsored By Round Table

By A-MIKE VOGEL

There goes the opening gun and the fast race is on to Chicago!

On to Chicago where next month, seven high stepping, knock-'em-over managers will spend seven eventful dawn-to-dawn days in seeing the World's Fair, swimming, golfing, attending big league baseball games, theatres, and nightclubs as guests of the leading film companies.

And we mean "guests," for if you have digested the big news in the last issue of the Herald, you know that your Round Table Club is sponsoring that glorious contest for bang up July exploitation campaigns for which the winners will be awarded all-expense trips to the Century of Progress Exposition.

Study the dope in the second column of the next page. It tells all—where, when and how. Then go to work, mates, for while you are reading this, managers from every part of the United States and Canada are already working furiously on those campaigns to win the worthwhile prizes.

And how the boys and girls in the field are whooping it up. Enthusiasm runs high. Letters, telephones and even telegrams (not collect) are pouring into Club headquarters from members and non-members assuring us of every co-operation and the keenest kind of competition.

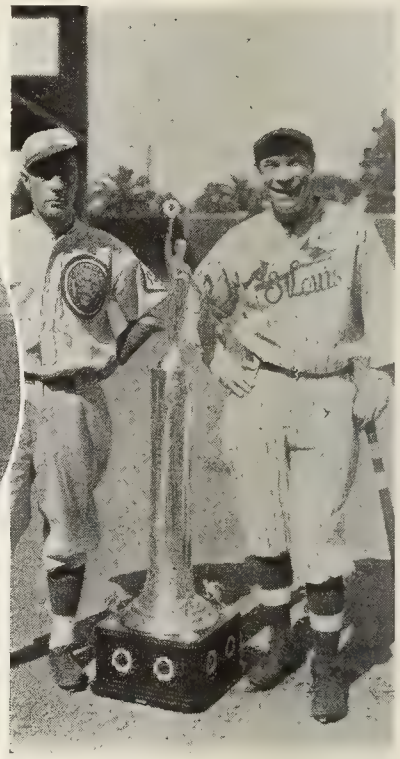
Winners



Just a Few of the Attractions the Fortunate Seven (A Natural!) Will Enjoy on That Trip to Chicago. Beaches, Golf, Big League Baseball Will Be Waiting in Between Visits to the Exposition.

Let's quote from just a few of them:

Jules (All-American) Fields, maestro of the Fortway, Brooklyn:

"Am packing my bag for I sure do love Chicago. Does the prize include my wife, or must she stay at home?"

From Frank (Pretzels) Boucher, Hagerstown, Md.:

"Please tell the other six winners that I look forward to meeting them at the Fair. The contest is a grand idea, and I hope you need another office for the contest campaigns."

And from away out thar' in golden Califor-nee-ay. Dick Moss, RKO Hillstreet, Los Angeles, speaking:

"As much as I hate to leave California for even a week, that prize is too tempting to pass up. All assurances from every one of us here that we're in the contest up to the hilt."

SEVEN BIG DAYS AND NIGHTS FOR SEVEN ACE TRIGGER-FAST SHOWMEN

Sonny (Honeymoon) Shepherd, Mayfair, Miami, Fla., is all set:

"That sure is a break. Rosalie will appreciate spending her honeymoon in Chicago."

The film companies themselves are just as enthusiastic, and we know that you will be interested in getting the reaction of a few of their ad chiefs.

Bob Gillham, of Paramount, gives us this cheery news:

"Five top-notch production names on the Paramount roster are available to theatre managers in the nation-wide Motion Picture Herald competition which will send theatre managers to the Chicago World's Fair as a prize for the best campaigns given July releases.

"In joining this industry-wide contest to stimulate July business, Paramount intends to back with full co-operation the efforts of all managers interested in winning a trip to the Fair.

"For July, Paramount offers the following releases: 'International House,' the all-star musicomedy with W. C. Fields, Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Rudy Vallee, Burns and Allen and other headliners of radio, stage and screen; 'College Humor,' the record-breaking musical spectacle with Bing Crosby, Burns and Allen, Jack Oakie, Richard Arlen, and Mary Carlisle; Nancy Carroll and Edmund Lowe in 'I Love That Man.'

"Also, Sylvia Sidney in Theodore Dreiser's famous 'Jennie Gerhardt'; Cary Grant and Benita Hume in 'Gambling Ship'; Helen Twelvetrees' latest, 'Disgraced'; Mary Boland and Charlie Ruggles teamed in 'Mama Loves Papa.'

"Edmund Lowe and Wynne Gibson will appear in 'Her Bodyguard'; and George Raft stars in 'Midnight Club' together with Clive Brook and Alison Skipworth.

"This contest is a timely stimulant for the industry. It should make exhibitors doubly anxious to boost box-office and win a trip to Chicago, all expenses paid. Paramount is behind all of you."

And from Monroe Greenthal, United Artist exploitation chief:

"I think it is a great idea. I am sure that exhibitors all over the country will consider it an added incentive for them to cut loose with all their ingenuity during the month of July in order to bolster their own theatre receipts.

"While the Contest in itself offers an attractive prize, every wise showman should really pitch in and put his strongest efforts behind the pictures he plays during the month of July so that he can counteract any so-called summer influence and give his theatre a profitable month's showing.

"Our July pictures available for the contest are: Eddie Cantor in 'Whoopee,' Jack Buchanan in 'Yes, Mr. Brown', Mary Pickford and Leslie Howard in 'Secrets', Ben Lyon and Claudette Colbert in 'I Cover the Waterfront,' Ronald Colman in 'Cynara', 'Samarang', and in a few resort spots, Ronald Colman in 'The Masquerader'.

"Any information you want or any assistance you may need as regards United Artists be sure and call on the writer."

Comments from other managers and film company representatives will be run in next week's issue to add to the flame of enthusiasm. We want to hear from you boys and girls in the field, so steal a moment from your busy day, sit down and dash off a line or two for the benefit of the other entrants. We'll be glad to print as many as we can.

So start shooting now! Remember, any campaign on any picture you play in July is eligible and entries from small towns and neighborhood houses, first run or third run, get the same break as the de luxers and the premier showings.

Who'll send in the first prize campaign?

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Bill comes to the fore again with another of his Laffs, and says he knows a million of 'em.

AUCTION NITE BIG DRAW FOR NIESSE AT ALAMO THEATRE

Carl Niesse, former city manager of Fox Midwesco houses and now general manager of the Central City Theatres Company in Indianapolis, has revived the auction night stunt.

In his Alamo house through a trailer he announced the issuance of one million dollars (in auction money) to be given with each paid admission. The denomination represented a ten dollar bill. The patrons were advised to save the money for the highest bidder would be given articles from a hot water bottle to a case of real 3.2 beer. In order to get the money in circulation a period of two weeks was used for distribution before the auction was held.

Auction night was presented on a Tuesday evening between first and second shows. An old fashioned auctioneer was engaged and articles such as a dozen fresh pies, dozen brooms, electric clock, irons, bushels of groceries, house dresses, table lamps and, as the capital prize, a case of genuine 3.2 beer. The stunt resulted in a great business builder, and is being repeated each Tuesday. Not only does the stunt get the patrons interested, but injects a great comedy punch to the program.

As an example, the first pie auctioned brought three hundred and ten dollars—and as the auctioneer stated, "Think of it, a genuine home-made pie being sold for only this amount." To prevent the kiddies from hoarding the bills, the auctioneer explained children under 18 would not be permitted to bid. Also to give everyone an opportunity to bid, only one article was allowed an individual. The bills collected from the highest bidders were put back into the box office for re-circulation.

The auction stunt seems to be doing very well from what we hear of other similar ideas, and now that Carl has revived it so effectively, perhaps brother managers will want to give it a go.

ROBERT L. SCHMIDT, NEW MEMBER, CLICKS WITH "20,000 YEARS"

Robert L. Schmidt, Grand Theatre, Hazelton, Pa., celebrates his induction into the Club by forwarding a bang up campaign on "20,000 Years," the topper for which was a newspaper escaped convict contest. A cut was run showing a prison scene, and readers were asked to find the escaped convicts. Bob reports over 3,500 answers. Five weekly newspapers ran the serial and worked a free jig tieup in connection.

A Sunday preview brought the expected endorsements which were used in ads and lobby, and in addition to a sound truck that covered a twenty-five mile radius, every town within this area was heavily billed for the showing.

Against a special atmospheric background atop the marquee, a 24 and two 6's were mounted, the display lighted by two 1,000 watt lamps from across the street. Large banners were hung, and title cloth signs placed over the marquee letters.

The convict street stunt was also tied in to a number of other newspaper and merchandising ideas, all of which helped to bring in the extra business this carefully executed campaign deserved.

OK, Hazelton, and now that you know the way, Bob, don't hesitate to call ag'in.

JULIA SMITH WINS $250 FIRST PRIZE IN THEATRE DRIVE

Two hundred and fifty dollars was the fat first prize won by charming Julia Smith for the best business record at the State, Waterbury, Conn., in competition with the helmsmen of the seventy Warner New England houses. Miss Smith has theatered in Waterbury for quite a few years and is credited with doing the lion's share in keeping the State up in the dark black.

As an instance of her fast stepping, in cooperation with a woman's club Julia staged a bridge party on the opening morning of "Grand Slam." It was held on the mezzanine, and prizes were given both for high scores and grand slams. Luncheon was served, after which the 300 players remained to see the picture. The bridge idea went over well enough to establish it as a monthly feature.

On "42nd Street" a highlight was an advance lobby show with the assistance of talented local children who did their numerous stunts and sang the show's hit numbers in full view of the street—a natural "stopper" which did much to bring in capactity on the showing.

The above campaigns bespeak real showmanship and indicate that Miss Smith takes no refuge in her sex to get by, even though her picture proclaims that the lady is very easy on the eyes.

Congrats, sister, and come again, says we. And, incidentally, we sent along your kind regards to Howard Waugh, and was he pleased!

ARKANSAS DRY LAW HELPS GUY B. SNOW GAG "WHAT, NO BEER?"

New Member Guy B. Snow, Roxy Theatre, Blytheville, Ark., was right on hand with "What! No Beer?" when the golden suds were made legal. It seems that Missouri is wet and Arkansas dry. Blytheville is only five miles south of the Missouri line, so Guy, with the help of his scenic artist, Harry Smith, fixed up a sightly saloon front, with swinging doors 'n everything.

On both doors he ran the following copy: "Missouri Says Beer, Arkansas—What! No Beer?" and you can bet that plenty of the worthy citizenry commented audibly on the state of affairs, not at all to the disadvantage of the box office.

Snow has been on the road for three years selling talking picture equipment, and is happy to be back in the old harness again, as he says, "struggling to find out what I can do to pull them in on this one." Welcome back, Guy, and keep comin'.

We sincerely believe that the movie-going public is thoroughly fed up with the long, misleading, ballyhoo trailers. Beautiful backgrounds in trailers don't sell the pictures.

Exhibitors throughout the country are beginning to realize that trailers with scenes keep as many people away as they attract.

The public is disgusted with the sexy scenes and titles which are invariably used by the trailer companies to make their products more "appealing" to the "ignorant" masses. We don't think the masses are ignorant.

H. M. ADDISON PUTS ON ANOTHER CORKING LOCAL FLORAL TIE-UP

If you recall, this time last year we ran a very interesting story on the tie-up that H. M. Addison, Division Manager for Loew's in Cleveland, effected with a local nursery outfit.

Wondering how, Addie, made out with it, we wired him and quote below what he has to say:

"Am pleased to report that the show was such an outstanding success that the nursery tied up on a year-round proposition. Consequently, during the winter all of Loew's Cleveland theatres were decorated with appropriate growing-greens that presented a welcome contrast to the snow and cold outdoors.

During the holiday season the displays were particularly interesting and appropriate. We loaded our lobbies with firs and evergreens and achieved some striking effects by enhancing the exhibits with colored lights, tinsel, artificial snow, etc. Another odd note of our winter activities in this respect was the distribution, during Christmas week, of roses to all ladies attending the State Theatre matinees. These, of course, were "flagged" with a strip of paper bearing our ad for the next attraction and I assure you they made a talk-provoking sight as they were carried through the snow covered streets by our patrons.

I might add that after your article appeared in the ROUND TABLE CLUB last year, we were besieged with letters from managers all over the country requesting various miscellaneous details of the tie-up, which leads me to believe the stunt was copied in innumerable theatres.

The photo shows a small part of our Peony exhibit in which more than ten thousand blooms, comprising forty-two varieties, many of them international prize-winners, are on display. The State's grand lobby is, I believe, quite the largest in the country and you can imagine how striking the display is when I tell you it starts immediately behind the box-office and extends the full length of the lobby (some two hundred feet). We admit people free to the lobby to see the floral show.

The show is being plugged in the newspapers and attracts thousands of people daily who wander about looking at the various specimens—all of which are labeled with their proper botanical names. Naturally a great many of these people are attracted to the theatre by the floral show and, once inside the refrigerated lobby of the State, buy tickets and remain to see the show. Our cooling plant is a powerful persuader during these torrid days.

All during this week we are presenting eight to eleven inch peonies to our feminine patrons attending between noon and two o'clock. I cannot commend the summer floral exhibit too highly to wide-awake showmen.

In everyone the sweltering summer heat inspires a desire to desert the sizzling pavements and seek surcease in the cool, flowery retreats of the country-side. And there are thousands, who tied down by the responsibilities of jobs, limited budgets, etc., do not find their way to the open spaces. So, for those, we bring a refreshing breath from the country-side and make it available to all."

BUNNY BRYAN RINGS BELL WITH WOW OF A TRIPLE STAGE WEDDING

You members have pulled single and double stage weddings, but Bunny Bryan has just topped everything with a triple wedding that hung them from the ceiling and chandeliers at the Belmont Theatre, Chicago.

Ordinarily, it's no cinch to dig up one couple to be hitched, and Bunny invited himself a flock of grief in promoting three publicity minded matrimonially inclined couples.

After getting over this obstacle, Bryan had to convince his neighborhood North Side merchants that presents for three couples was worth thrice the advertising, and if you know Bunny, you may rest assured he won his point.

The lobby was plastered with displays reading: "North Side's Greatest Wedding—First Triple Stage Wedding in Any Theatre Anywhere." Local newspapers cooperated, the downtown dailies picked it up, and four major stations broadcast appropriate wedding music, mentioning the event and theatre.

An old model T Ford was suitably inscribed, cans tied on the back and turned loose in the neighborhood on the wedding day, and sales people in the cooperating stores plugged the event a week in advance.

The stunt clicked on all "sixteen," but to make sure he would have a record week, Bunny, on the night before the weddings, put on a special Kiwanis Minstrel with an advance big enough to fill his large house.

G. A. Romine and Charlie Nagel, his assistants, are credited by Bryan as being responsible for the follow through on these campaigns. Bunny is the kind of a guy who doesn't hesitate to give his assistants a break when they deserve it. Good stuff!

SHANGHAI THEATRES GOING IN STRONGLY FOR NOVEL DISPLAY

The accompanying illustration shows a portion of the lobby in the Nanking Theatre, Shanghai, China, and examples of displays made under the supervision of Director Haig Assadourian. This work was done in connection with the run of "Explorers of the World" and marked first use of this type of display material in a Shanghai theatre. According to our information, other first run local houses have also discarded regulation posters for displays of this kind.

Thank to Jerome Wolff of Raspin Productions for bringing the photo to our attention. The Club would be glad to hear direct from Mr. Assadourian in reference to other work turned out by him and his staff.

GIVE THE "FORGOTTEN FAMILY" A BREAK!

Perhaps one of the finest gestures in show business at this time is the effort of John P. Vogt, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Gladstone, Michigan, to remember the "Forgotten Family" by distributing free tickets one night a week to people whom circumstances deny entertainment.

Here is something every showman should endeavor to do: give the family man, down on his luck, a chance to see a show. It will more than repay the effort, as it stands to reason, when a jobless man receives employment, he is going to remember you and PATRONIZE your theatre.

On his slowest night, Vogt entertains needy families. It is not within his province to give them money or food; therefore, he gives them a couple of hours' happiness in the form of a show.

Tickets are distributed through the City Manager of the theatres, who has a record of families deserving of tickets.

Why don't you do it!

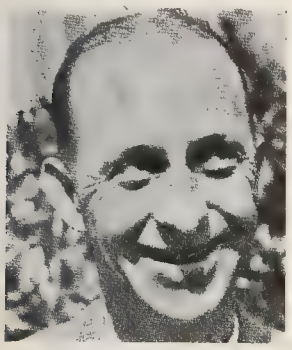
GUEST EDITORIALS

DIGGING

by HARRY E. BROWNE

Manager, Fox-Stanford, Palo Alto, Calif.

WHERE are the patrons of yester-year? They got away, and stayed away for a long time. It is true that many have not the money to attend the theatre as often as they used to go. However, they do come out when rare pictures such as "Cavalcade," "Prosperity," "42nd Street" and others are billed.



These pictures, and others so far this year, have attracted presentable grosses nationally, but for program pictures we must dig, and dig deep into our population for results. Prices are lower, consequently grosses are smaller, and it is hard to make a profit without tremendous effort and effort will help to build up and up. It has been proven in the past and now. Keep driving, sell and dig some more. Cater to every possible group in your community. There are some who will only come out for certain types of pictures. Keep in touch with this group.

We have an organization of club women and P. T. A. members in Palo Alto who advise this group what pictures to see. Their duty is to select these pictures and classify them and they publish a monthly guide which we pay for and mail out.

George Teckemeyer, Manager of our Varsity Theatre here, is the organizer of this group and full credit should go to him for a great idea, for it reached people directly by mail who could not be appealed to by our regular channels of advertising. Mr. Teckemeyer handles this group exclusively. On the other hand, I contact Stanford University, where we have about five or six thousand to draw from.

Outside of regular advertising and exploitation, we must dig into these outsiders for added business. We are just closing a very successful engagement on "Cavalcade." We appealed to the ministry, college and high school professors, private school teachers, and the Intelligensia with a personal letter. It bore heavy fruit, for they responded by announcing it in classes. We issued no passes to any of this group.

Each picture has an appeal for some one, or group, or class of people. Tear the picture apart and BUILD your sales talk into that appeal and sell your certain group. Build friendship for your theatre, build good will with merchants and organizations and clubs. Be active in every civic activity. Build confidence so that when you make a statement or endorse a picture, your patrons know that they can depend on what you say. Be truthful in all of your advertising. Keep faith with your public and they will keep faith with you. Get out of the rut of just saying every picture is "colossal," "stupendous" and all of those old hackneyed phrases. Put life into your copy, dig deep down into the affections of your patrons, get their confidence and keep it and they will help you BUILD when you call on them.

In small communities such as ours (population, 15,000) nearly everyone knows you and respects you. You are the local head of a community house, where your friends gather, so be at the door to greet them and make them feel at home. Be solicitous and anxious about your special class of patrons, make friends with every business man you deal with, and after you dig they will help you build. Conduct your business as though it were your own, with careful saving, and personal operation.

THE CORNER

by JAKE ROSENTHAL

Manager, Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa

WE'VE been hearing quite a bit of talk the past year or two about the "Corner." Not the corner in wheat or flour, but the "corner" that Prosperity was supposed to be "just around."

Folks, out here in Waterloo, Iowa, it begins to look like we've finally turned that Corner. You know there's an old saying: "It's a long lane that has no turning." And I believe that "turning" has come and that we're headed straight along the Highway to Happiness with good business and general prosperity straight ahead.

It seems to me that we managers have been giving entirely too much thought and attention to the query: "What's wrong with show business?" Just for a change, why not think for a while on "What's RIGHT with show business?" There's no use looking on the darker side of things ALL the time or our eyes will get so accustomed to darkness that we'll be blinded when we start looking on the bright side again.

So, folks, what's RIGHT with show business? Plenty of things. To begin with, we've been getting some mighty fine pictures. Depression or no depression, the producing companies, the actors, everybody connected with the industry have been carrying on. Why shouldn't we? Some of the finest pictures since the perfecting of the art have been achieved during the past two years. Certainly that is ONE of the things that are right with show business. Then, too, practically all of the movie houses throughout the country have managed to keep their doors open, even if business did fall off; and that's something that cannot be said for a whole lot of other industries throughout the country. People must have amusement. They need relaxation more right now than they ever have needed it before. The theatre fulfills a real mission these days besides being merely a place of entertainment. See to it that this angle is played up in your advertising. Keep harping on the happiness angle. The Public was talked INTO this depression; now it is up to us to do our share toward talking it OUT of it.

Another thing that's RIGHT with show business. We all know that the moment folks begin to have a little loose money to spend, we of the theatre get the first shot at it. The very moment the necessities of life are taken care of, the luxuries get their play, and with the average man and woman a good picture is one of the very first luxuries they go in search of when the pressure begins to lift even a little. Although at that, I think I'm stretching it a point to call the theatre a luxury. It has become so much a part of the average American's everyday life.

And one thing more: do we managers fully appreciate the value of personal contact with our customers? How many of us really seek to get in touch with our patrons in any sort of personal way? Every man and every woman likes to know that their patronage is appreciated whether it is at the butcher shop, the baker's, the dry-goods store or the theatre. It costs nothing but our time to manage to be around the foyer and the lobby now and then when our patrons are entering the theatre or leaving it. A cheery "Good evening, Mrs. Brown," or a casual "How did you like the picture, Mrs. Jones?" is worth a whole lot more than we may imagine.

BILL BROWN STEPS OUT WITH "RASPUTIN" AND RUSSIAN JEWELRY

Even the late Czar's treasures are not safe when a go-gettin' Round Tabler is on the prowl for an unusual slant, and believe it or not, but Bill Brown, manager Marlboro Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., actually promoted a flock of rare Russian Imperial jewelry for a lobby display on "Rasputin and The Empress."

The trinkets were part of the million dollar collection brought over here to be sold, and Bill talked the treasure guardians out of a loan of thousands of dollars worth of the stuff by indicating the sales possibilities of his proposed exhibit.

Brown reports it the biggest attraction he ever had. Incidentally, the only cost to the theatre was the sign in back of the exhibit as illustrated above. The showcase, display lamps, even the truck delivery were promoted, and if you know how Brown operates, that's to be expected.

On the level now, Bill, were you able to promote a set of the golden soup plates as a present for the missus on the wedding anniversary.

UNUSUAL BROADCAST RATES BIG RETURNS ON "PHANTOM" IN A. C.

Manager Lewis, of Warners Strand, Atlantic City, slapped across a radio tie-in on Monogram's "Phanton Broadcast" that has the virtue of being unusual and can be worked in other spots as well.

The following advance announcement broadcast by the cooperating station gives the meat of the idea:

"We take pleasure in calling your attention at this time to a most unusual broadcast to be heard over this station on Monday at 1:45 P. M., and again at 8 P. M. This program has been arranged as a preliminary to the showing of the motion picture, "THE PHANTOM BROADCAST," which will be the featured attraction at the Strand Theatre starting next Friday. As a unique method of directing attention to this forthcoming attraction, and at the same time afford an opportunity to the listeners of this station to see "THE PHANTOM BROADCAST," we will present on these special programs, several members of our announcing staff. These announcers will identify themselves as "PHANTOM BROADCASTER No. 1, No. 2, No. 3," etc., instead of by name and will attempt to disguise their voices by dialect and in other ways. Each will announce a musical number, and your job will be to see if you can recognize the voices of your favorite announcers. Don't forget to tune in Monday at 1:45 and again at 8 P. M. for the "PHANTOM BROADCAST" program. Two hundred and fifty tickets for the showing of "THE PHANTOM BROADCAST" at the Strand Theatre will be awarded as prizes."

On the early broadcast, announcers took turns broadcasting readers from the press book, and in the evening this was varied by the inclusion of musical numbers. A very satisfactory listeners' response was reported by Manager Lewis, and the station got a break with credit trailers in on the theatre screen and mention in theatre ads.

LOUIS CHARNINSKY SAYS ADIEU TO KAN. AND HELLO TO TEX.

Louis Charninsky has taken himself down to the Queen, in Austin, Texas, but before pulling out of Independence, Kan., where he skippered the Booth, Louis gave the folks a three-ring campaign on "King of the Jungle," so effectively that Glenn Dickinson sent it to all other managers in the district as an example of good theatre advertising.

Spotlight gags included jungle decorations made from natural shrubbery that covered marquee, lobby and box office: thatched hut on hay rack with Lion Man sitting inside, parade through downtown streets with boys and girls drum and bugle corps, all dressed in jungle costumes, led by Lion Man but float and six men on street wearing wild animal heads.

On opening night a forty-eight piece band played in front of the theatre and a fireworks display was also put on, no doubt as a farewell to Charninsky.

Then, without hardly waiting long enough to change his collar this big gun showman started firing immediately on hitting Texas. An invitation advance showing on "Be Mine Tonight" gave that one a proper send off, and on "Cocktail Hour" envelopes containing headache powders were distributed, as copy reads, "to make your head stop spinning after listening to Bebe Daniels singing."

Aces, Louis, and here's hoping you'll never have to take any of those powders in your new assignment.

CIRCUS TENT!

This is a miniature circus animal tent, complete in every detail, as used by Dave Itzel, manager of the Fox Theatre in Detroit as an advance lobby display for "The Big Cage." The display, which represents a scene from the pix, drew continuous crowds to the lobby.

BOOK, MUSIC TIE-UP

J. K. Emmet, manager of the Capitol Theatre, New York City, and Miss Bessie Mack, in charge of publicity, arranged an effective tie-up between the John Day Company, publishers of President Roosevelt's "Looking Forward," and The American Music Co., publisher of Benny Davis' and Ben Oakland's song of the same name. Photo shows features of the President, flanked on either side by stars of the picture and copies of the song.

"SHARLIE VAS DERE" AND KNUDSEN SELLS FREE THEATRE PLUG

Harold S. Knudsen, who with John Scharnberg is now operating the Capitol and Strand, Madison, Wis., sends in a load of edible ideas which he has used successfully as ad head of the two theatres.

One stunt we like particularly is a colored cardboard cover, size seven by eleven and a half, that Harold places on menus in his leading restaurants. He retains most of the front cover for his attractions and sells the remaining space on front and back to take him off the nut.

Knudsen also sends along some tear sheets of his paper's Sunday comic page with theatre copy of his coming attractions in a box across the bottom of the page promoted in return for passes.

Fast thinking on the part of this enterprising showman earned free sixty inch theatre ads in both his papers plugging a local appearance in person of Jack Pearl, the radio star.

From a newsreel showing the Baron drinking beer a frame was clipped from which a still photo was made. This was shown to the advertising agency handling a local brew and the result was the big ad smash.

This is smart showmanship and from all accounts Knudsen is certainly keeping the pot boiling out in Madison. He promises us an early article on theatre good-will and we know that it will be of real interest to all brother members.

QUICK SERVICE IDEAS THAT WORKED

J. F. THAMES, JR., ad head, Capitol, Pulaski and Royal Theatres, Little Rock, Arkansas, is another of the smart showmen who have put over the Warner promotional ad idea with their local papers on "The Working Man." Jimmy staged a screening for the ad staffs and publishers, and the papers in return came across with sizeable free promotional space, mostly given over to the Arliss dialogue, picture, theatre and date. . . .

CHARLES P. CARROLL, manager of the Academy of Music, New York City, recently brought his mailing list up to date by sending out a letter with an enclosed return card. He told prospective patrons that he wanted to be sure their names were properly spelled and that addresses were correct—and thanked 'em. . . .

J. LAWRENCE SCHANBERGER, manager of Keith's Theatre in Baltimore, Md., was successful in inducing the city fathers to give him permission to hang a banner for "The Kiss Before the Mirror" on the top of one of the churches. Don't know how Larry sold them the idea, but he did. . . .

LARRY BEARG, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, Canada, got out an attractive flower float with a pretty girl aboard for "Be Mine Tonight" when it played his house. Orthophonic phonograph played a record of one of the hits from the picture. . . .

KEN McGAFFEY, publicity manager of the RKO Hillstreet Theatre, Los Angeles, landed a big window display in a book store by planting a huge jig-saw puzzle of Roosevelt on "The Fighting President" in a frame in the store's window. . . .

SAMMY SIEGEL and TED CHAMPION, that powerful pair from John Hamricks' Blue Mouse Theatre in Seattle, turned out a two-way grocery herald on "Big Cage" that can be used every now and then if you haven't gone for it before. As food stores are consistent advertisers via throwaways, Ted and Sammy tied in with one of the big chains and used the back of the store heralds for theatre copy. . . .

HOWARD WAUGH, who Warner-izes down Memphis way, concluded that the youth of his city should know more of the significance of the motion picture, which resulted in a course for high school pupils called "Photoplay Appreciation." Sessions were held at the Warner Theatre where the students viewed a number of Warner and First National pictures, then marked down their reactions and opinions according to story, characters, dialogue, settings and so on. Howard blames Dave Weshner for the idea, but it seems to us the least Waugh rates is an honorary degree of Doctor of Filmosophy. . . .

SOME FRONT!

Ken Collins sure put over a honey when he played "King Kong." He had young girls sit in the huge paw of "Kong," who stood thirty-six feet against the Apollo Theatre in Indianapolis. The girls worked in shifts from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. and the entire front was flooded with light at night. Ken says the stunt was a natural, and we're sure of it.

FAY REEDER, manager, Fox California Theatre, Stockton, Calif., topped off a well rounded plug on "Gabriel Over the White House" by distributing 2000 copies of his local paper which carried a front page streamer and fulsome editorial comment on the picture's merits. Other highlights were a preview, free tickets to outstanding Boy Scouts, and a Karen Morley "Eyes" news contest. . . .

J. Q. CLEMMER, manager of the Fifth Avenue, Seattle, Wash., helped the sale of "Son Daughter" along by tying up with a toiletry concern for give-away of free facial treatments and small packets of face powder. Department stores also came in on a give-away of a $15 set of toiletries. . . .

HOWARD JAUDON, advertising manager for Sparks houses down in Tampa, Fla., arranges original copy for his newspaper ads that makes 'em talk. Recently Howard launched a campaign to educate people to stock by inserting between box ads of five houses a line reading: "Get the Peruchi Habit". A wag 'phoned in and asked what kind of dope it was; but doesn't explain 'em; he tells 'em. . . .

B. B. HAMILTON at the Palace Theatre in Norwich, Conn., turned out a mighty pretty lobby display recently when he played "White Sister." He promoted all the flowers which he used in the display from a neighboring greenhouse and at the end of the playdate donated them to the local hospitals. The photo he sent us has a crack across the front of it so we're sorry it can't be reproduced here, but take our word for it, it was a pip. . . .

JAKE ROSENTHAL, skipper of the Iowa Theatre in Waterloo, Ia., recently entertained at his theatre. The Dunkerton, Ia., basketball team, champion of the state of Iowa beat the Des Moines Roosevelt High in a spectacular tournament and Jake presented the trophy to the winning team. They were also welcomed from the stage by Mayor M. J. Morgan and Coach Hartman. . . .

JAMES CURLEY, advertising and exploitation man from Warner Bros. New Jersey Theatres, has been selling George Arliss in "The Working Man," using a rather interestingly new advertising slant. Curley in all his ads played up the fact that Arliss uses the expression "baloney" and goes in for slang and wisecracks for the first time throughout the picture. . . .

C. R. STOFLET in charge of the Margie Grand Theatre in Harlan, Ky., (and incidentally a brand new Colonel) made up a bally recently which consisted of two six sheets pasted on a wagon advertising Kate Smith in "Hello Everybody." Cow bells were generously added to the wagon and a darkie paraded the thing through the town. The old Colonel tells us the cost was small and very effective. . . .

JOHN A. BECERRA impressario of the Warner Variety Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, insists that in the spring a young wife's fancy turns to household things and he ought to know! 'tenny rate he promoted a refrigerator tie-up, got front page stuff in the locals and a radio mention twice a day. All the stunt cost him was $10 for coupons and $15 for a snappy trailer. . . .

GEORGE H. MINER, manager of Loew's State Theatre, New York City, used an imprinted paper napkin or crying towel to plug a recent show which featured "Looking Forward" on the screen and Benny Rubin and others on the stage. If a napkin, we gather it was intended for the Roosevelt opus and meant that we are going to eat again; if a crying towel, it must have been for none other than Benny. And you can draw your own conclusions. . . .

THEY COME—AND HOW THEY COME

WALTER J. KESSLER

holds forth as skipper of the State Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., and he's another Metropolitan theatre manager who doesn't think that exploitation is a lost art around his town. And it isn't, either, for we're finding out from week to week that there's still a lot of the fellows in this neck of the woods who still believe in selling their shows. You'll hear more about Walter later on, how about it?

comes recommended to us by none other than Chester Friedman, whose assistant Arthur is, up at the RKO Regent Theatre in New York City, and since both these gentlemen join the CLUB at the same time, there's not much doubt in our minds but that the Regent will be well-represented on our pages. Are we right, Arthur?

is the general manager of the Granada Theatre in Lexington, N. C., and the Lincoln Theatre in Winston Salem, N. C., and an old timer in showbusiness. "E. A." says putting a house over is the same as it was back in the old days when Adolph Zukor ran a train show on 14th Street and he was at the Crystal Hall. Well, if you've been at it so long, you ought to have plenty to contribute to our pages, so we shall expect to hear a lot more from Lexington.

is now managing the Strand Theatre in Somerville, Mass., and from what we gather he's doing a swell job of it. Take a bow, John, and promise the gang that you will do your bit to keep up the good work being done by this Department. Drop us a line whenever you get the chance, and we'll do the rest.

manages the Athens and Dreka Theatres in Deland, Florida. If taking care of two houses isn't enough to keep a man busy in these hectic days, we've missed our guess. Let's know how you keep them coming in, Frank, maybe you'll have some little secret that the rest of us don't know about.

comes fresh (no pun) from Warner Brothers' Art Department in Plainfield, N. J., and since this Department is ever mindful of the importance of the art work around a theatre, we're waiting with keen anticipation to receive samples of this new member's work. What say, Augenblick, are you on?

assistant manager of the Cedar Theatre, in Philadelphia, that city of brotherly love, joins our midst, and in order for there to be no doubt about his being a member, he ordered his CLUB emblem pin at the same time. That's the spirit, Walter. with the attitude you're taking, I'm sure "it won't be long" before you will be holding down a managerial job. We're rootin' for you, boy.

is holding down the reins at the Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood, Cal., and from what we learn is doing a darned good job of it. Harry used to be President and general Manager of the West Coast Junior Circuit, so he certainly ought to know what it's all about. He says "there's always something new and interesting for the alert showman to gain from someone else's experience," so we're hoping he passes a few of his own ideas on to us for the rest of the bunch to take advantage of. O. K., Harry?

is the assistant manager of the Criterion Theatre in Spartanburg, S. C. We'd like to know what you and your boss are doing, Charlie, to keep things humming down there, now that the hot weather is on us. A line from you would be appreciated.

acts as assistant manager of the New Partick Picture House in Glasgow, Scotland, and since the activities of our far-off members have always provided interesting reading in our pages we want you to know we'll print anything you send us as soon as it can be jockeyed into the book, so you'd better step on the gas, Bill, and shoot something in to us.

is more than welcome in the Club. His title is none other than owner, manager and operator of the Lyric Theatre in Shenandoah, Pa., and that sounds like a man's sized job in anybody's language. I'm sure our thousands of members and readers would enjoy knowing how you do it, Billy, so pass the word on to us and we'll do the rest.

manages the Roosevelt Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa., one of our good friend Monty Salmon's boys. George tells us he was once a newspaper man himself and appreciates what it means to turn out a section like ours, so we certainly ought to be able to count on him for various and sundry accounts of his doings in the City of Brotherly Love. Get going, George, we need you.

manages the RKO Regent Theatre up on 116th Street, New York City, and since this is a pretty thickly populated neighborhood, we know Chester has to be on his toes to keep them coming to his house. We're thoroughly familiar with your house and the location and know all your problems there. Drop in and see us when you're in the neighborhood. You'll always find the welcome mat out.

HAROLD FRIARY

manages the Warren Theatre in Roxbury, Mass. The house is a thirteen hundred seater and Harold has to do some hot plugging to keep the old shekels coming in. Let's know how you do it, Friary, so that we can tell your brother elks about it.

is in charge of the Colonial Theatre in Haverhill, Mass., and that's the same circuit that Harold Friary is with, so between the two of them we ought to get up a little friendly competition in that neck of the woods. Incidentally, that part of Mass. is almost solidly Round Table sold.

is another RKO boy to join our ranks and he hails from the Family Theatre in Cincinnati, Ohio. I guess we have the bunch signed up almost 100% in Cincy, Joe, as you are already doubtless aware. You probably have something to live up to with a theatre named "Family," so you might as well come clean and tell us how you do it.

is the live-wire manager at the RKO Rivoli Theatre in New Brunswick, N. J., and if you think it's any cinch managing a house in a college town, ask the man who manages one and you'll be told the answer in no uncertain terms. Well, Arthur, we have plenty more members in towns just like your own who would be interested in knowing what you do and how you do it, so shoot your stuff in to us and we'll pass it on.

holds down the fort at the Warner Theatre in Ridgewood, New Jersey, and according to the word passed on to us from Al Zimbalist, there just isn't any peppier division to be found. So you have a rep to live up to, Frank, and we're counting on you to make the grade.

is the manager of the RKO Williamsburg Theatre, Williamsburg, Va., and judging by the nice things that he says about the Department, we'll miss our guess if he isn't going to be an active contributor to the pages. Now that so many of the RKO boys have joined our ranks, you'd better watch your laurels, Tom. So get busy, and let's hear from you.

assists H. W. Pettengill at the Warner Theatre in Worcester, Mass. If we're any judge, Russ, you've got a darned good man to teach you the business and I'm sure you'll profit by it. Now that the two of you are both members of this organization we certainly ought to be hearing good reports from the Warner Theatre. What say?

sends us his application and signs it Advertising Manager for John Hamrick's Theatres in Seattle, Wash., and that's a man's size job for you. We understand Bill's nickname is "Ted"; we don't quite get the connection, but maybe he'll let us in on the secret a little later. However, Ted is at the same house as our good friend Sammy Siegal and between them they certainly ought to keep things humming at the Blue Moose Theatre, where they make their headquarters.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

THEY'RE ALL TALKING ABOUT "HIGH FIDELITY"

Dollar and half's WORTH FOR One Dollar

IT doesn't take much arithmetic to figure the best time to reseat your theatre. The financial pages of your newspaper will tell you that prices of all raw materials have not only started up, but that they're going considerably higher.

Putting off needed reseating now does two things to your pocketbook. It delays the time when your theatre can have its profitable reputation for up-to-the-minute comfort and beauty. And each week's delay threatens an added cost when you finally do make up your mind.

You will probably never again be able to reseat for as little money as you can today. Ask a Heywood-Wakefield man for his expert advice and assistance.

Francis M. Falge

contributing to this issue of Better Theatres his second discussion of color in lighting, which is part of a series he is writing for this publication, to appear in alternate issues.

IN WRITING of practical problems in theatre lighting, Mr. Falge is surely on intimate ground, since his knowledge of them is not solely a matter of the electrical and lighting laboratory, but the result of his varied experience as a worker in the theatre. Mr. Falge is a Badger, and spent all his early youth in Wisconsin. In 1919 he joined the Navy, and in 1920 entered the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Resigning his commission, he went to work, first for Westinghouse, later for the National Lamp Works at Nela Park. There he specialized in theatre and decorative lighting, and in 1928 went into the employ of Paramount Publix as a lighting specialist in charge of stage lighting and assisting in general theatre illumination. In 1930 he joined the Beaded Screen Corporation, and in 1931 returned to Nela Park, where he is now engaged in research engineering.

Leo T. Parker

a regular contributor to Better Theatres for many years on legal subjects pertinent to theatre operation, discussing special subjects and analyzing the latest decisions.

A VARIED CAREER has been Mr. Parker's —and it includes the ownership and management of a motion picture theatre! Thus, somewhat like Mr. Falge, he is peculiarly fitted to bring his profession to the service of the theatre operator. It was in 1911 that he was an exhibitor. Then he became a manufacturer of automobile accessories, remaining in this business until 1920. From 1917 to January, 1919, however, he ran the business from an army camp. Mr. Parker was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of Ohio in 1922, and was made attorney and counsellor of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in 1925. . . . It is to be noted that his articles avoid the method of so-called "handbooks," by which efforts are sometimes made to reduce the complexity of Law to a few simple rules, which can apply only to a few specific conditions.

[The first of a series of advertisements on current and future features in Better Theatres and those who contribute them.]

WHAT DOES CIRCULATION MEAN TO READERS?

Publications boast (when they may) of their circulations. Better Theatres does. But in doing so publishers seem to be thinking only of those who buy advertising space.

Obviously circulation is of basic significance in advertising. By the amount and class of readers a publication has, the manufacturer or the dealer determines the value of that publication to him as a means of taking his product to market. And so publishers talk to him about circulation—unless, of course, it would be too embarrassing for them to do so. And somehow forgotten is the significance of a publication's circulation to its very readers.

A simple one but a fact of fundamental importance to readers is that a publication develops, maintains and extends its circulation by developing, maintaining and extending its service to readers. Now what this service should consist in depends, naturally, upon the purposes of the publication. For a semi-technical business journal like Better Theatres, service to readers means (1) practical, reliable guidance in the daily job, and (2) seeking new methods that point to betterment. Such service requires leadership, of course. There must be a sensitiveness to the interests, to the immediate needs, to the currents and potentialities of the business. Now it is neither difficult nor expensive to find material that will serve to cover pages. This material may be dumped in. It may be utterly trivial. It may be the merest repetition of matters which the business, during the normal course of its growth, has thoroughly considered, rejected or adopted and long since got done with. It nevertheless can make a printed page. The fellow who cannot permit the acceptance of such material is none other than our old friend, Mr. G. P. Circulation (the front names being Genuine Paid). Circulation demands a responsible editorial plan—in the business journal field, a plan of guidance and stimulation to the personnel of that business. And this is strictly a reader affair!

There are circulations and circulations, of course. That's why the advertiser or the advertising agency asks, right off: "To whom does your publication go? How many?" And then he puts in the sticker: "Let's see your latest A. B. C. statement!" What he wants the A. B. C. statement for is to see absolutely authentic figures on how many people in his market actually buy your publication in order to read it. If those people buy it, they read it. Otherwise they wouldn't buy it.

What this means to readers is simply this: To build and maintain the circulation required for a profitable authentic rating, there must be responsible journalism always, organized for leadership and permanence, and this becomes the reader's assurance of significance and reliability in the material discovered and selected for publication.

Better Theatres net paid circulation, A. B. C. (Audit Bureau of Circulations), 13,722; Foreign, 1,481

Observations

¶ One of the effects of the government's recovery legislation is a rather immediate stimulation of building. Figures for May show a definite upturn—an increase over the month of April more than five times greater than the increase of May over April in 1932. And that is significant, indeed. A total of 761 cities reported projects instituted in May in a number 128.6% greater than for April.

This, it is to be remembered, represents a reaction that even precedes the operations of the Recovery Act and public works measure. The latter has for its purpose the stimulation of construction, and the result will be, of course, that building materials prices and wages in the building trades will undergo a decided rise. Therefore it behooves the theatre owner who is at the "mebbe" stage of remodeling or other construction, to make his decision quickly, lest a few months of procrastination wipe out the advantages which the depression brought the purchaser of building materials and labor.

In planning the arrangement of chairs, the number of rows, the aisles, the spacing, the architect has almost never used any guide except the code. True, occasionally he adds an extra inch or two, in the interests of what has become known as "deluxe comfort." But mainly he has thought only of capacity and fire hazards, the latter of which is forced upon his attention by law.

The code exacts provisions which must be considered as only minimums. Even that "little extra" which sometimes is provided almost never reaches an amount showing a real appreciation of the difference between the motion picture theatre and any other kind of an auditorium.

The unique thing about a motion picture theatre is that in and out of it there is continual traffic. To any other type of auditorium, patrons come at a certain hour before the performance begins, and there is only one performance. But most motion picture theatres operate on a policy of more than one performance during a certain period of the day, which the so-called "grind policy" is common enough to be considered an important characteristic. Patrons arrive at any time following the beginning of the first show, assured of witnessing an entire performance. Those arriving first, take the choice seats, and so as not to be free to leave with as little annoyance as possible, they usually take aisle chairs. And so it is that a large number of those who follow them, have to climb over them in order to be seated.

This goes on daily and nightly in thousands of theatres everywhere. Yet this unique condition in the motion picture theatre—continuous traffic in and out of the auditorium—has received practically no attention whatever in the formulation of seating arrangements. Yet we can think of nothing that would be more immediately appreciated by the motion picture's public than the establishment of practices which would make ingress and egress easy and without annoyance to self or anyone in the theatre.

¶ A matter which has some rather special points of interest to the owner and builder of theatre structures is the subject of a discussion in a recent issue of the service bulletin published by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, concerned with a novel form of indemnification called "obsolescence insurance." The author is Mr. J. C. Knapp, vice president of the Otis Elevator Company of New York.

"Each decade," observes Mr. Knapp, "is a decade of progress. Each is a year of changing styles. Each month brings on the market some improvement in arrangement, heating, air conditioning, flooring, roofing, plumbing, lighting and transportation, to say nothing of new ideas in decoration. Each week produces from the architect's drafting room new effects in street fronts, lobbies and halls."

It even seems as if obsolescence had been encouraged in the field of the motion picture theatre. Every fad and fancy of architecture has been rampantly adopted, on the ground that the public wanted something "different," strange and new. The point of view has been that the theatre itself is a show, and although this attitude is gradually disappearing, it was predominant during the very period when most of the modern theatres were built. In many other respects the theatres built during that period are now obsolete—in their auditorium forms, in their foyer provisions, in their illumination, in their provisions for the mechanisms of the theatrical art they exploit. Yet we should not say that such obsolescence is inevitable. Proper planning can thwart it.—G. S.

FIGURING YOUR REMODELING JOB AND COSTS

By S. CHARLES LEE

WHILE IN THE last few years the receipts have been slow, theatre depreciation has been going on at the same pace that it maintained in the years gone by. As a result motion picture theatre properties are now in a condition generally recognized as utterly deplorable.

We all realize that building costs are past their low point and rapidly on the way back to higher levels. Therefore, to make repairs and improvements now seems the smart business move. Lumber has moved up $9 per thousand in the past 30 days, and is due for another rise. Similarly plumbing, electrical and other necessities. Labor is still very cheap, but on the whole building is about 15% higher than the low, though still about 30% below normal.

To illustrate what can be done, we will take component parts of reconstruction jobs and analyze the methods of rebuilding and their costs.

MANY THEATRES are absolutely obsolete in exterior appearance, although they may have an excellent location and the proper capacity, and the structural frame is sufficient for all requirements. Thus a new facade would give the theatre new value immediately.

Take for example the two fronts shown in Figures 1 and 2, and apply new ones so designed that it would fit either of these two houses. (See Figure 3.) What a change! The cost of this "face lifting" operation would have run in the old days to about $5,000. Its cost today would be about as follows (exclusive of signs, marquee and accessories, which will be discussed later):

Permit	$ 10.00
Shoring and Wrecking Roof Repairs	200.00
Concrete (Approx. 40 yds.)	300.00
Carpenter Labor	200.00
Plastering	400.00
Waste Molds—Iron Grilles—Misc.	250.00
Sash-Doors	80.00
Lumber Finished and Rough	250.00
Tile Trim	75.00
Steel Reinforcing and Miscellaneous Anchors	100.00
Fence	50.00
Scaffold	40.00
Cement and Lobby	75.00
Electrical Repairs	65.00
Plumbing	75.00
	$2,175.00

A smaller facade treated with elaborate materials could be changed as shown in Figures 4 and 5, for about $1,500.

THE FEATURE of our present day theatre fronts is the box office, which should be attractive but not glaring. It should reflect business progressiveness and pride. A box office like the one shown in Figure 6, used to cost $950, without change machines or ticket vender. It can be built today with a simpler top, and omitting the marble slab, for $250 —or as shown, for a price ranging from $350 to $400.

Box office equipment in most cases can be rebuilt in a new box office, although a new rapid money changer is a good improvement, and may cost as low as $65 today.

A ventilating fan can be built into the ceiling of the box office for $35. An electric heater can be installed for $20. In a box office where the climate requires a closing mechanism a metal window shield can be installed for prices as moderate.

Another important feature that should be rejuvenated from time to time is bulletin cases. Look at the difference between the display of the jumbled up lobby shown in Figure 7, and how fine a display is made by the bulletin frame shown in Figure 8, where the attention is drawn entirely to the display. A bulletin frame such as that in Figure 8 can be built of wood and sprayed with metal, for about $40, without the top ornament. The ornament would cost from $10 to $20 additional. It is made of plaster. Note that this bulletin case has a slanting back and is equipped with lights above so that at night you have perfect illumination inside of the case.

Another desirable improvement to make today is a wainscoting such as shown about this bulletin case, particularly in neighborhood houses where the children park their bicycles. A wainscot such as shown can be installed for about 75c per square foot. If your lobby is 20 feet long, a 4-foot wainscot on both sides would cost about $120.

A new outer lobby floor can be made extremely attractive and helps change the character of your building. A terrazzo floor like the one shown in Figure 9 can be installed for 75c a foot. In

ORGANIZING FOR GOOD MANAGEMENT

By JOHN T. KNIGHT, JR

Personal supervision and division of work—the second article of a series on management and maintenance

THE FIRST article in this series laid emphasis upon the common sense of theatre maintenance. The common sense application to the problem of maintenance definitely makes maintenance a part of theatre management.

Good and efficient management depends to a very great extent on a good personnel and organization. Therefore let us consider the organization of a theatre, for without a planned organization the profitable management and maintenance of a theatre is in question.

Suppose we begin your program with a careful analysis of your present organization in the light of the statements which are to follow.

At the outset it must be clearly recognized that the business of exhibiting motion pictures is, in many details, radically different from most other lines of merchandising. Therefore the successful handling of our business demands a somewhat different approach. We cannot look upon our problems in a cold, impersonal way and expect a solution by the rules laid down under the heading of so-called scientific but often unscientific management. Our study of proper theatre management must be in the light of actual management tempered by a careful examination of all that has taken place during the last three years.

Further, it should be also clearly understood that good management is applicable to all kinds of theatres—large, small and even those of the "shooting gallery" type. It concerns each employee who performs the simplest tasks, up to the complicated functioning of large theatre circuits, which call for the most extensive cooperation. Briefly, successful management is not dependent upon your having a large number of persons employed in your theatres. To the contrary, good management may reduce your pay roll and still accomplish the desired results.

The one means of salvation for those of you who are now managing with practically skeleton crews is for you to become so versed in the principles of efficient management that you organize what you have and weld it into a smooth, efficient and coordinated group.

BASIC OBJECTIVES OF MANAGEMENT

THE PRINCIPAL objective of the suggested scheme of management is to secure the largest possible return from your theatre, coupled with the greatest contentment among your employees. The phrase, largest possible return from your theatre, is used advisedly. The expression is intended to mean not only the largest net profit for the owner or company, but the fullest development of every phase and activity of that particular theatre. This development cannot help but include proper maintenance so that the net figures which you show each week will represent facts. For you to build up a substantial and profitable accumulated balance for your theatre at the expense of neglected maintenance is only to fool yourself or somebody else. Then when the final showdown comes to those managers who adhere to such a policy, they will have some very difficult questions to answer.

In using the words, greatest contentment, with reference to your employees, I not only have in mind wage scales, but the development of each person and group to the maximum efficiency, so that they can turn out the highest type of performance possible with available facilities. I believe that efficient and capable people are more contented and satisfied as individuals and as groups than those who are without skill or real ability.

The degree to which you can reconcile this idea of the largest possible return for your theatre with the greatest contentment among your employees, establishes your value as a theatre manager.

LIMITS OF ORGANIZATION

THE OPERATION of a theatre may, on the surface, and particularly to business men not connected with the business, seem simple. Yet upon study there are so many different elements and

Protecting Iron-Work from Rust

● As a matter of regular maintenance, or as a part of your reconditioning program, your exterior iron-work—at the marquee and elsewhere—may now need thorough inspection to determine whether the deteriorating influence of rust has set in. Rust (ferrous oxide) eats into metal if allowed to remain on it.

In order to protect exterior metal-work properly, first brush it thoroughly with a steel brush. If particularly difficult to remove, the rust may be loosened by tapping the affected parts with a hammer before the steel brush is applied.

Next scrape the badly rusted spots and all cracks with a putty knife or a similar instrument, and apply the treatment described below. Do not let the job wait over night. If you do, you will notice that the metal will have formed on it by the following day, a very thin coating of rust. If it must stand over night because of special conditions, wipe off this later surface of rust with a rag slightly moistened with linseed oil, before applying the treatment described below.

The full protective treatment calls for a priming coat followed by at least two finishing coats. The priming coat should be selected for its rust-retarding qualities. Red lead as a pigment is the commonest means of retarding rust. The priming coat should be prepared along the following lines:

One gallon of pure raw linseed oil is mixed with from 20 to 25 pounds of red lead oxide 96% pure. Use little or no turpentine. There is a grade of red lead oxide classified as non-sagging. This or a type of comparable qualities should be used.

Here the manager should be cautioned that red lead prepared paints settle very quickly and very hard, so that if prepared paints must be used, be sure the painter mixes and stirs them thoroughly.

Red lead oxide in a paste or semi-paste form, mixed on the job, is the most satisfactory means of acquiring protection against rust.

In the case of marquee and vertical signs, it is good practice to finish off the protective job with a coat of high-grade weatherproof varnish.

[Managers and Owner-Managers: What specific problem in maintenance would you like to have Better Theatres get you information on? Write us what it is. We shall be glad to get you the best available solution. Merely address Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.]

efforts that must be coordinated and brought to a climax in a properly presented performance that it requires a very high degree of organization.

The gain from good organization is so very evident when it is applied to the complex situation of the theatre, and the satisfaction so great in having a theatre run smoothly, that some become convinced that it cannot be overdone. This is a fallacy and has been definitely demonstrated. There is a very definite limit to organization. It should not be an end in itself.

Organization is for the sole purpose of accomplishing definite results with the least expenditure of time, labor and material. With this thoroughly understood, good organization of necessity must be economical.

Without doubt more can be learned from a careful examination of our business during periods of severe depression—such as the one through which we have passed—than during an equal period when we have had clear sailing. Weaknesses are not always so obvious when we are making plenty of money and the world is acclaiming us a huge success. Consequently such periods of depression are more than a total loss unless we can see the mistakes made during boom times, and lay plans to protect against a recurrence of those mistakes.

FACTORS OF ORGANIZATION

WE KNOW pretty definitely the factors that make good theatre organization.

These factors, which are guides to the organization of a basic operating method, are:

1. Organization structure.
2. Lines of authority.
3. Responsibility.
4. Division of labor.
5. System.
6. Discipline.
7. Accounting records.
8. Statistics.
9. Team play.

In attempting to analyze or determine the relative importance and the specific part of each of these factors, we find they vary according to the following:

1. Purpose.
2. Conditions.
3. Material.

From this you can see there is a personal skill and a technique in organizing a theatre that requires a breadth of knowledge on the part of the manager. He must fit together the aims, the personnel and the local conditions, to the basic principles underlying good organization.

Much depends upon the manager of a theatre. Any manager who seriously attempts to apply some of these thoughts will soon discover that he must set the example for his entire organization. It has been said that organization is only the elongated shadow of its head. Such is the personal responsibility of the manager in following out any efficiency program.

Personal efficiency demands that a manager work out for himself details, and not seek to follow too closely somebody else, whose conditions might be entirely different. Each manager should take these basic facts and apply them to his own problems in his own way.

FIRST STUDY YOUR STAFF

THE FIRST STEP toward organizing a theatre is to study the present personnel and their duties. This is not something that can be done in a day. It might be done in a week, but one month will give more reliable facts upon which to base your later plans. In brief, this first month should be spent in the study of your staff in the light of their present assignment to jobs. You then will check this against what you know should have been done that was not done, what was done that was unnecessary, and the duties performed by more than one person.

THE DRIVE-IN THEATRE: A MOTOR AGE EXPERIMENT

The unique show-park in Camden where patrons witness motion picture entertainment from their automobiles—how it is built, and how it works

WHAT IS doubtless the first theatre designed so that patrons may witness the performance while remaining in the automobiles in which they have come, has been opened in Camden, N. J. It is indeed a theatre unique, a motor age experiment which may prove the idea sensible enough to warrant others like it. Then on a broader scale will be determined whether the public likes such theatres merely temporarily, as a novelty, or as a happy means of "going to the movies" in the summertime. After a few weeks of operation, the promoters of the Drive-In theatre in Camden indicate that so far the innovation seems to be a success.

Being so distinctive, this theatre invites description quite as different from the usual. Some characteristics even offer opportunities for levity that one preparing a serious report wishes he need not forego. Perhaps it will occur readily enough to the reader what fun Young America could have in a coupe under the added stimulation of a sophisticated Hollywood romance! One also visualizes the consequences of a rain storm—a situation, indeed, that has suggested itself already to the operators, for a test was made during a downpour to determine the effect of rain on vision and sound. Windshield wipers offered some aid to vision. The quality of the sound was declared to be little, if at all, impaired. At the outset, of course, the question arises: Why is it desirable to remain in your automobile when you go to the movies? Only Mr. Average Man in his Chevrolet can answer that one.

The Drive-In theatre is located near the airport of Camden, on a popular highway. It occupies an area of 250,000 square feet and accommodates 400 automobiles, or, on the basis of four persons to the car, an average of 1,600 patrons. The enterprise was conceived by Richard M. Hollingshead, Jr., of Camden, who is associated with the company manufacturing the "Whiz" automobile products. Mr. Hollingshead came upon the idea of the Drive-In theatre in rather a realistic way.

It was his theory that the "Whiz" products should be retailed, in certain situations at least, in connection with a kind of super-gas-station, and he finally conceived of a "Hawaiian Village" with thatched houses and gas pumps dissembled as palm trees. Then in order to attract customers in the evening, when business tends to fall off, he thought of offering entertainment in the form of motion pictures, preferably consisting in newsreels, abridged features, and short subjects. After a couple of years of such ruminations, patents were obtained.

Two companies were incorporated in

New Jersey. The first was the parent company, known as Park-In Theatres, Inc., of which Mr. Hollingshead is president and treasurer, with Mr. Edward Ellis as vice president. The second concern is called Camden Drive-In Theatres, Inc., which has built and which operates the present theatre under a license issued by the former company. The initial Drive-In theatre was designed by Howard E. Hall, architect, of Camden.

GENERAL PLAN

THE PLOT occupied by the theatre is 500 feet deep and 500 feet wide, with the back of the screen facing the highway. Automobiles enter through a driveway at the right of the screen (which is housed in a shallow structure flanked by stepped enclosing walls), passing a box office reminiscent of the ticket office of a ferry or toll bridge. The machines can be driven to any of seven parking rows, proceeding along a broad side aisle, turning left into one of the curving driveways, and then, swinging sharply to the left again, up a ramp to a position facing the screen.

To leave the theatre, the automobile is backed out into the crosswise driveway and headed toward the side of the theatre opposite the entrance side, proceeding then to an exit driveway at the left of the screen housing. [See ground plan, page 17.] There are auxiliary exits at the rear corners of the theatre (farthest from the screen).

The projection room is located at the middle of the first ramp, or front row of cars. This position is 133 feet from the screen platform. [See ground plan and screen housing cross-section, page 17.] The area remaining between the projection house and the screen platform may be used for seats (probably, states the architect, of the steamer chair type), but the Camden theatre has not been so equipped as yet, and the direction in which this seating level would slope, if at all, is not indicated. [See discussion of ramps and projection arrangements.]

Beginning in the same plane with the projection house the seven automobile ramps range back in broadening curves on a consistent radius to the rear of the plot, which, except for the front screen housing and abutting structure, is enclosed by fencing. The space between ramps is 50 feet deep, with the portion of the ramp occupied by the parked automobile, measuring 16 feet, which measurement was adopted as that of the average length of a car. This leaves a space 34 feet deep in which to drive in and up on the ramp. Thus patrons in the seventh row of automobiles are approximately 430 feet, or about one-twelfth of a mile, from the screen. Moreover, a 40° angle of vision places about one-fifth of the cars accommodated in an area of distortion, but checking shows this condition to be not comparabe to that of the average theatre of large capacity.

PLAN OF RAMPS

THE DESIGN of the ramps is based on a determination of sightliness that clear an average closed car on the ramp ahead, with the screen given a substantial elevation, and with the cars resting at an upward angle. While this tends to give each tier an upward slope, the parking area as a whole is stepped downward toward the screen. And as the elevation increases toward the rear, the degree of upward inclination for each row of cars is successively reduced. The angle of inclination for the front row is 5°. [See schematic drawing on page 16.] The highest point of each ramp (front edge) is five inches above that of the ramp ahead, with the first ramp having its highest level 9 inches above the ground. The driveway portion of each ramp is practically level, the inclination being confined largely to the front portion on which the cars rest.

CONSTRUCTION

CONSTRUCTION began on May 16, and the theatre was opened June 6. The structural phases of the project lie mainly in the screen housing, projection house, and the ramps.

The screen housing (exclusive of the decorative barriers that flank it on each side) is 149 feet wide, 35 feet deep, and 60 feet high. It is built of 6 x 6-inch wood posts spaced 8 feet on centers, with

At B, the first ramp has sloped back to a level one inch above the ground (sketch is out of scale). The second ramp at C is 14 inches above the ground level, and at D, seven inches above the ground. Similar increases in elevation and changes in the degree of slope are carried through in construction of the remaining five ramps.

RECONDITIONING WITH COLOR AND LIGHT

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

Specific and economical ways to better your illumination and to make it an aid to rehabilitation

WHAT CAN the theatre owner and theatre management do today to renovate his theatre so that it will at least approximate the original installation in beauty, charm and attractiveness? Obviously this question, now more than ever, confronts the theatre operator who is in search of ways to maintain or increase his box office receipts.

In considering this question it is fortunate indeed that the majority of theatres in operation today were, in the main, well lighted when they were new. Now, however, paint has become dull, and dust and dirt have collected on the lighting equipment, and the wall and ceiling surfaces. A thorough refurbishing is necessary. To redecorate and refurnish the permanent decorations is frequently a major operation that many of our patients are in no economic mood for today. Lighting however, is a tonic, that is cheap and generally available. Let us start with the theatre exterior.

EXTERIOR LIGHTING

IS THE THEATRE front bright and sparkling, or is it dull and lifeless, giving the impression of listlessness and a "don't care" attitude? (See Figures 1 and 2.) If it does not have the snap which sells tickets, the lamps may be of too low wattage or of too high voltage, giving a yellowish appearance.

The signs, especially the channels of letters, may be dirty, giving a poor appearance and wasting a quarter of the light that is being paid for. Some new paint, or even soap and water, will work wonders. Flashing and running border effects may have become listless and jerky. A few minutes attention to the flasher will often pep up the displays.

LAMPS

Does the front present a neglected appearance because of poor lamps? If it does, it may cause prospective patrons to wonder if business is good and make them think that the show is inferior.

Brightness, motion, sparkle and liveliness are inherent characteristics of incandescent lamp displays that go hand-in-hand with the business of the theatre. Well-kept displays are far-off invitations to the patron, while a dim and shabby exterior (see picture above, at right) is not an invitation but an unpleasant experience which the patron is inclined to associate with the performance.

Replace all burned-out lamps promptly and remove "dead heads," those odd lamps which do creep into signs because they happened to be around—odd shapes, poorly colored, or greatly which have already blackened lamps which have already given more than their expected life. Actually, the theatre owner is money ahead if he discards lamps of this type, because, while consuming the same amount of current as when new, they really produce considerably less light, not to mention the harm they do to the general effect.

Are attraction letters broken or dull and unattractive? Replace the broken ones, of course, then thoroughly clean all the glass letters with soap and water.

In some cases an acid treatment may be required to get the dirt out of the pores. Then paint the inside of the attraction-letter box white, which in itself will probably add 30 or 40 per cent to the light output. If all of these steps are taken, the signs should be two or three times as bright.

MARQUEE

Is the ceiling of marquee in need of attention? If the paint is dirty and chipped off, a distinct improvement in appearance as well as a considerable increase in light will result if it is given a coat of glossy white paint to accentuate the sparkling appearance. The lamps, of course, should be checked as to size, voltage and condition, as discussed above.

Even with the marquee in good shape the front as a whole may still lack life. Light attracts. The addition of several floodlights will do much to add to the effect of life and gayety and will add interest to the poster displays.

BOX-OFFICE

The box office should be easy to find and the established prices should be easily seen and read. Light intelligently used makes both these possible in addition to facilitating the work of the cashier.

DISPLAYS

Considerable money is spent for posters

Figure 4

An example of spottiness at the ceiling. Polished surfaces of the interior treatment at such points as shown above reflect the lamp images and cause this undesirable condition. Mat surfaces, on the other hand, diffuse the light and prevent any glare.

For the older coves designed for use with bare lamps, the color problem is solved for all time by the use of color hoods. These should be carefully selected for uniformity. These use inexpensive standard lamps, reducing the costs of operation very substantially.

and other art work for the theatre front, and the effect is often lost or spoiled by a lack of light. Sometimes when posters have been lighted, the lamps themselves are visible, and the viewer sees the bright lamps and not the posters. Light sources should be concealed. When posters are not lighted, a few small inexpensive floodlights will accomplish the desired result.

LOBBY

THE LOBBY is often visible from the street and sometimes people are required to wait in it. Their opinion of the theatre is often governed by their impression of the lobby. Make it bright and cheerful. Dull dark paint and dark colored lamps are the enemy of life and gayety.

Redecorate with light tints that are good reflectors and light appropriately with uncolored or lightly tinted lamps such as ivory or flane-tint. With high-hanging lobby ceiling fixtures there is little danger of glare. Remove old dirty shades that absorb much light and let a little sparkle be present.

Liveliness may be added, with beneficial results for future business, by featuring coming shows through the use of attractive motivated displays.

Motion is always more effective than stillness in attracting attention and it can be had inexpensively.

FOYERS AND LOUNGES

"FILL AND SPILL" with a minimum loss of time in seating patrons is important to the box office results. Patrons would rather not be bothered with having to ask unnecessary questions, and many ushers add to the operating costs. Lighted directional signs, judiciously placed and operated, help immeasurably in the handling of patrons, and are very inexpensive assistants. Study your theatre and install these box-office aids where they are necessary.

"Silence Please" signs also do much to keep standees and people in the rear seats quiet so that others may enjoy the talking pictures. This tends to lessen the possibility of people continually moving forward to enjoy the show.

Aisles, lounges, balcony and other portions of the theatre should be indicated by directional signs in order to preclude confusion and annoyance.

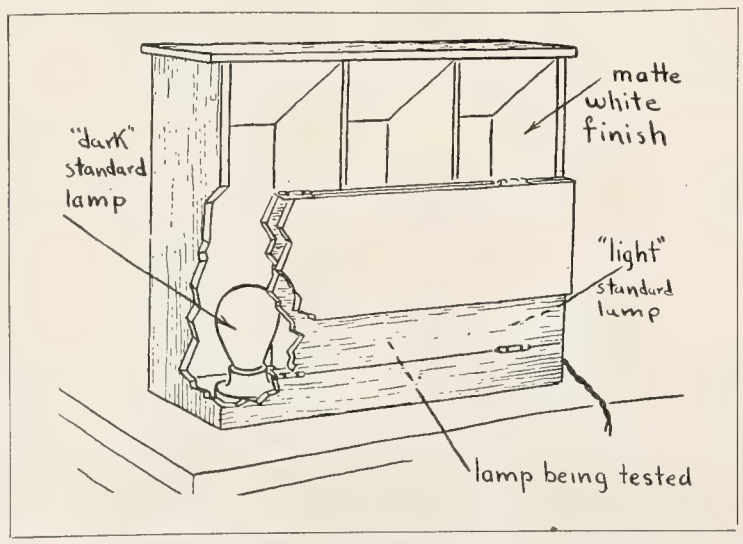

Figure 5—Colored lamps are generally not of satisfactory color uniformity for theatre coves. Selecting them in a matching box before installation assures uniformity and reduces the cost of culling out the non-uniform lamps after they have been installed.

A warm inviting homelike atmosphere of lounges helps to give a feeling of hospitality to the entire theatre. Warm ambers and rose tints are desirable colors. They should be well shaded. The addition of a few floor lamps will often improve the atmosphere of these rooms.

AUDITORIUM

WHEN THE patron comes into the auditorium does he flounder around in the dark trying to find seats? (See Figure 3.) Is it necessary that an usher show him the way with a flashlight? If so, this is expensive economy. Not only does it add to the cost of operation by necessitating extra usher service and perhaps increasing insurance rates because of greater accident risk, but it keeps people from the theatre because they do not care to be bothered in this manner.

AVOIDANCE OF SHOCK

Sometimes this condition is exaggerated because of an abrupt step-in from a bright lobby to a dark auditorium. A gradual transition should be made so that the eyes may accommodate themselves to the darker auditorium. While aisle lights, staggered, on not less than every other row, help identity the aisles and the seat rows, they do not add to the general illumination necessary to overcome the objectionable condition of too dark an auditorium—and dark auditoriums antagonize many people.

Sufficient auditorium illumination is necessary, and an important step in renovation is to supply it if it has become impaired. Often the facilities are present, but darker-colored lamps have been used so that the light will not be glaring, whereas the real trouble is improper baffling or shading of the lamps. A new shading arrangement with lighter tinted lamps may then serve.

AVOIDANCE OF GLARE

A second point is to remove all glare spots, which are constant sources of annoyance to patrons. (See Figure 4.) No source should be anywhere near as bright as the screen itself, whether the light is reflected from the walls or not. Proper

LATE LAW APPLYING TO THE THEATRE

By LEO T. PARKER

Add these recent cases and decisions to your understanding of law involved in theatre operation

ALTHOUGH a clause in a film rental contract violates the anti-trust laws, the theatre owner cannot use this as a defense against paying for films which he has exhibited. This point of the law was discussed in the late case of Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer Distributing Corporation v. Cooke (56 S. W. [2d] 489).

Films Played Must Be Paid for Despite Invalid Contract Clause

CASE:

In this case it was shown that a film distributor filed suit against a theatre owner to recover the agreed rental charges for films exhibited under the terms of a contract entered into between the distributor and the theatre owner. The latter contended that he was not liable for payment of the specified rental charges for the reason that a portion of the contract [compulsory arbitration clause] which he signed had been declared void by the United States Supreme Court as violating the Sherman Anti-Trust Law.

DECISION:

However, it is important to know that notwithstanding the fact that a clause in the contract had been declared void, the higher court held the theatre owner bound to pay the agreed rental price for the exhibited films, and said:

"The record shows that the films or photoplays designated in the contract had been copyrighted. The appellee, by exceptions, insisted that the contract sued upon was void because, by its terms, it violated both the national and state anti-trust laws. The court correctly overruled these exceptions because the anti-trust laws do not apply to copyrights and for the further reason that a violation of the anti-trust laws by a corporation is not available as a defense to a person dealing with such corporation to release him from liability for debts incurred or contracts creating debts separable from the trust combination. . . . The appellee (theatre owner) cites in support of his contention that the contract was void. . . . That has no application whatever to the issues in the instant case. In that case the government was attacking a trust entered into by several film companies, in an effort to dissolve the trust under the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. The case before us is purely one of contract between individuals."

NECESSARY TO PROVE CONTRACT IS VOID

THE LEGAL question is important whether or not a theatre owner may be compelled to accept and pay for films not previously exhibited, where it is shown that the rental contract contains a clause which violates the anti-trust laws. Generally speaking, the theatre owner may rescind a contract which is void in its entirety, or if fulfillment of the contract violates the law.

However, sometimes the obligations assumed by the theatre owner may be fulfilled without violation of the law, and although a clause in the contract which is not a part of the obligations in controversy may be void, the theatre owner may be compelled to fufill his obligations.

On the other hand, even though the whole contract is void, which would relieve the theatre owner from his obligations, the court will not render a favorable verdict unless the theatre owner introduces positive proof that such contract is void.

CASE:

For instance, in Fox Film Corporation v. Bailly (246 N. W. Ill.), it was disclosed that a theatre owner contracted to exhibit a definite number of films. On account of the fact that a clause in the contract had been held void by the higher court, the theatre owner refused to accept and exhibit the films.

The distributor filed suit and during the trial proved that after the contract had been in effect some months the theatre owner refused to accept or exhibit any more of the films. The distributor carried out its part of the contract by shipping the films as provided by the terms of the contract, but the theatre owner refused to accept or pay for such films.

The counsel for the theatre owner proved that the contract contained a provision for the compulsory arbitration of differences that might arise out of the contract. As previously mentioned, this provision of the well known Standard Exhibition Contract was held void by a higher court, as violating the anti-trust law. It was contended by the theatre owner that this fact rendered the whole contract void, which relieved him from accepting and paying for films specified in the contract.

DECISION:

However, since the counsel for the theatre owner failed to introduce positive proof to the court that the contract actually violated the anti-trust law, the court refused to render its opinion, and said:

"There is nothing before us except what appears on the face of the complaint. There is nothing in the complaint to indicate that the contract violates the anti-trust law, or that it resulted from a combination in restraint of trade. . . . In order to pass upon the matters argued in respondent's brief, we must assume matters that do not appear in the record and that cannot be brought into the record except by additional evidence."

LIABILITY FOR STOLEN PROPERTY

THE question has often arisen whether or not a theatre owner is liable for the value of wearing apparel which may be stolen from a patron while the latter is attending a show. The law is well settled that a theatre owner is bound to exercise ordinary care to safeguard the personal property of patrons. However, the courts have consistently held that unless made so by contract, an ordinary bailee, no matter to what class he belongs, is not an insurer of goods delivered into his keeping. Generally speaking, a gratuitous bailee, or a bailee without pay, is bound to slight diligence only.

If, however, the ordinary relation of bailor and bailee exists, then a theatre owner would be liable only for the want of ordinary care and diligence.

CASE:

For example, in Nolde (164 Atl. 804), it was shown that a patron of an amusement place entered the reception room and left an expensive fur coat hanging upon a rack. When she returned the coat was missing, and she filed suit against the proprietor to recover its value. However, since the patron did not prove that the proprietor had extended an invitation to patrons and other persons to use the rack for hanging wearing apparel thereon when the owners of such apparel were out of the room, the higher court refused to hold the proprietor liable, and said:

DECISION:

"Neither actual nor implied bailment or constructive custody having been established, there is no evidence of such negligence on the part of the defendant (proprietor) in the general supervision exercised over the reception room, such as it was, for the protection of property in general. The burden of proof upon this point was upon the plaintiff (patron); for it is only in a case of a bailment that the burden is cast upon a bailee (proprietor) to account for the loss of the goods."

WHAT ARE TRADE-FIXTURES?

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen from time to time with respect to the right of theatre operators to remove from a leased theatre building certain articles, commonly known as trade-fixtures, which the theatre operator has purchased or installed in the theatre.

Generally speaking, a tenant may not remove from a theatre building any article which, when attached to the building, may be considered a part of such building, or if its removal will in any way permanently damage the real property.

On the other hand, it is a familiar rule of the law that, if one stands by and allows his property to be sold to an innocent purchaser without disclosing his ownership, he is estopped from claiming it afterwards.

While under ordinary circumstances trade-fixtures permanently installed by a theatre operator legally become the property of the owner of the theatre building, yet if the latter stands by and permits the tenant to remove the articles, or if he willingly permits the tenant to sell the fixtures to another person, he cannot later complain.

CASE:

For illustration, in Looney v. Trimount Theatres (184 N. E. 683), it was disclosed that a theatre operator installed certain articles in a theatre building. When he vacated the building he left the articles which he had installed in the building. Several years later the owner of the building rented it to another tenant and explained that these various articles did not legally belong to him. Afterward the new tenant purchased the trade-fixtures from the old tenant. Later the landlord refused to permit the tenant to remove the articles from the theatre building. However, under the circumstances, the higher court held that the purchaser of these articles was entitled to remove the same from the building, and said:

DECISION:

"In order to work an estoppel it must appear that one has been induced by the conduct of another to do something different from what otherwise would have been done and which has resulted to his harm and that the other knew or had reasonable cause to know that such consequence might follow. . . . The conduct and words of the defendant's (landlord's) agent to the effect that the defendant did not own the fixtures and that, if the plaintiff's (tenant's) assignor wanted them he must buy them of a third person, were, or might have been found, in substance and effect, to be an implied agreement that the fixtures, as between the plaintiff's assignor and the defendant, were then personal property and were to remain such during and after the expiration of the lease, provided the plaintiff's assignor bought the fixtures in accordance with the representation of the defendant's agent."

RIGHT OF MANAGER TO OBLIGATE FIRM

IT HAS BEEN held by various courts that the very use of the word "manager" conveys the idea to the ordinary mind that such person has the management of the affairs of the corporation which he represents. Therefore, a corporation is liable for any act of its manager within the scope of his employment, and intended for promotion of the business.

CASE:

For instance, in Cook v. Ruston Company (127 So. 347), it was disclosed that an indemnity agreement was signed by the general manager in furtherance of the business interest and for the promotion of the welfare of the corporation. Later the corporation attempted to avoid liability on the bond. However, the court said:

DECISION:

"The governing principle with reference to the general power of a manager is that where he has the actual charge and management of the business, by the appointment of or with the knowledge of the directors, the corporation will be bound by his acts and contracts."

POSTER BUSINESS HELD TAXABLE

CONTROVERSY has arisen from time to time whether or not a contract is legally a sale or a lease by the terms of which a purchaser has the right to return the article to the seller and receive a credit therefor. This point of the law was considered in the recent case of State v. Southern Poster Exchange Company (145 So. 26).

CASE:

In this case it was shown that a company's business consisted in buying posters or displaying advertising from the larger motion picture theatres and selling it to smaller theatres, with the understanding that if the advertising were returned in good condition within a certain time, an allowance would be made as a credit upon other purchases made by the theatre taking this service.

DECISION:

"There is no stipulated rental and none of the usual features which distinguish the contract of lease."

NEED YOU ADMIT POLICEMEN FREE?

By M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

AN INTERESTING and ever-present problem is raised by the following letter from a worried theatre manager:

"We have had, at different times, five policemen in this small town who come to the theatre and occupy seats without buying tickets. I wrote the men letters stating that I would allow them a pass one night a week, to which some of them objected very strenuously. I would like to know if I am within my rights in refusing these men admission every night."

The answer to this question is that the manager is entirely within his rights in refusing admission to these so-called "guardians of the law."

By the laws of the State and the local regulations of the town or city they serve, policemen are under a duty to prevent violations of law, to maintain public peace and order, and to detect and arrest offenders. However, in pursuit of these duties, policemen are limited with respect to private premises.

It is only when a police officer sees a violation of law taking place under his eyes or is pursuing a person escaping arrest, that he can enter a man's home or place of business without a warrant or without the owner's permission.

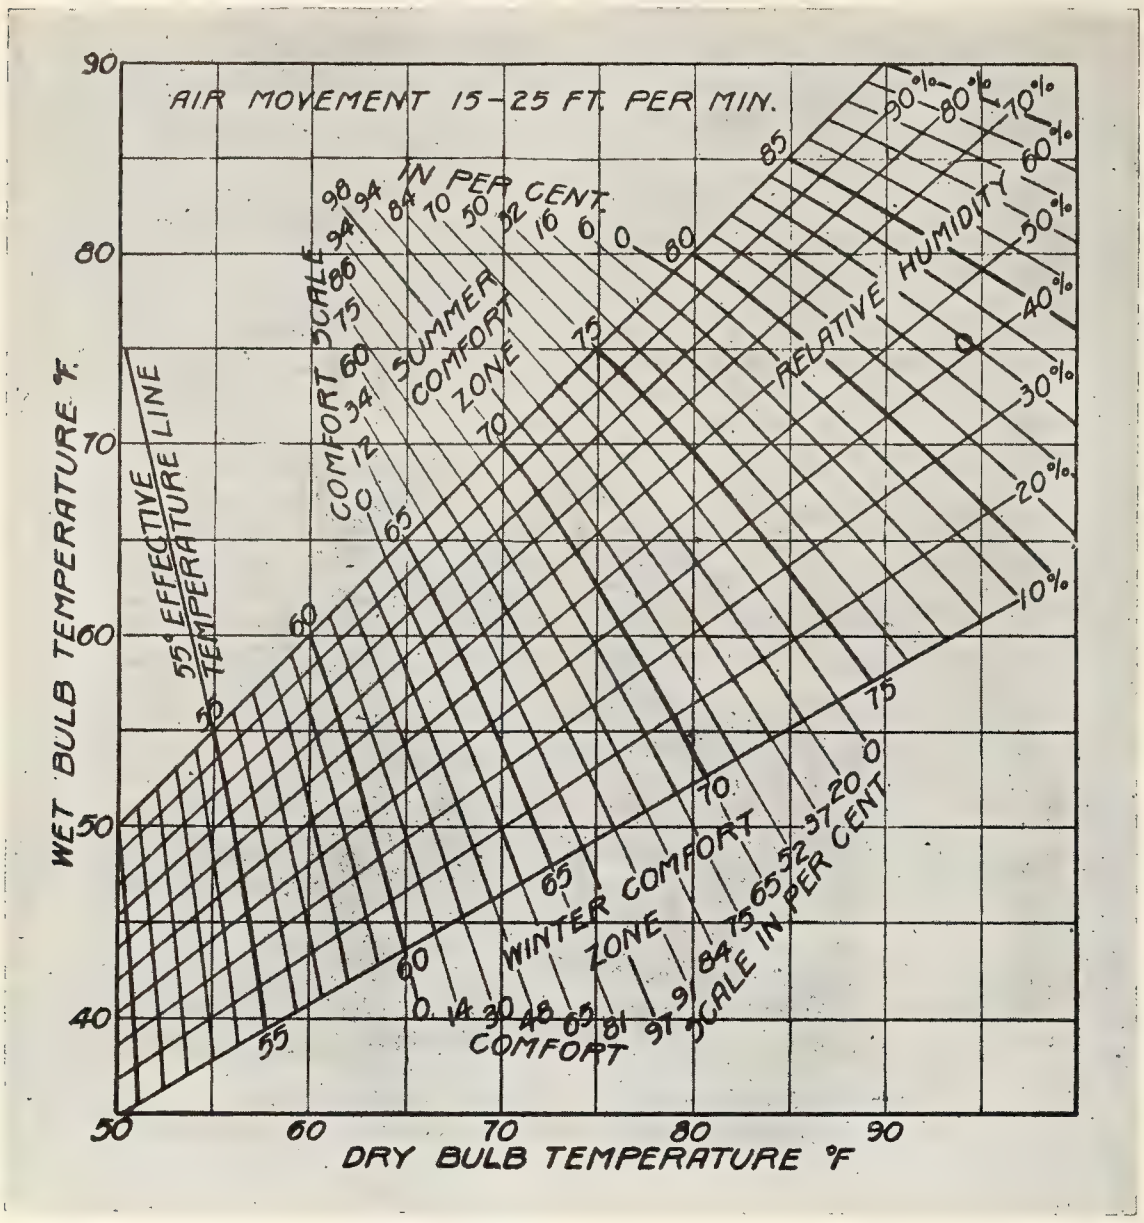
The only modification of this rule as it concerns motion picture theatres, is where police officers are specifically permitted by law to enter and inspect places of public amusement or businesses operated under a license. In that case, however, the entry and inspection must be made in strict line of duty and only to a reasonable extent. Generally, the power to enter and inspect theatres does not authorize police officers to sit through performances as spectators.

What remedy has a theatre owner or manager against uniformed intruders? Most states provide by law that a public officer who, pretending to have authority but being actually without authority, deprives a person of liberty or property, commits the crime of extortion.

Furthermore, by local law or by the rules of local police departments, an officer may be suspended or dismissed for misconduct. Insistence upon entering a theatre without authority constitutes, in my opinion, both extortion and misconduct.

If you, Mr. Manager, feel generously inclined, you may issue passes to policemen as often and in such quantities as you please. Remember, however, that you are under no obligation to do so, and that if a police officer, not in the line of duty, or without a warrant, tries to enter your theatre without your permission or without paying an admission, he may be generally treated as a trespasser.

AIR CONDITIONING: GUIDE SHEET NO. 1



EFFECTIVE TEMPERATURE CHART

SHOWING SUMMER AND WINTER COMFORT ZONES

[The first of four charts applied to theatre air conditioning]

To the management of theatres which have complete air conditioning equipment, this chart is a guide in checking the performance of equipment, in determining the skill of the engineer (or other employe in charge), and in keeping advised of the comfort of patrons. The house manager should have both wet and dry bulb thermometers located at advantageous spots throughout the theatre so that he can check conditions personally from time to time. Understanding this chart, and keeping it handy, he will find it easy to keep a constant check on the operation of the plant.

The engineer should have a copy of the chart and be instructed in its use, for this chart is a measure by which the manager and the engineer may judge the results obtained from the equipment.

Ventilation and air conditioning are elements of patron comfort, and patron comfort is a progressive sales argument and should mean money at the box office.

The chart can be thoroughly understood with a little study of the simplified explanations and examples here accompanying it.

DEFINITIONS

EFFECTIVE TEMPERATURE: The resultant degree of comfort from any combination of readings of the wet and dry bulb thermometers, as evidenced by a person through his sense of feeling.

EFFECTIVE TEMPERATURE LINES: Lines on a chart indicating points resulting from various combinations of wet and dry bulb readings which produce equivalent effects of physical comfort.

DRY-BULB TEMPERATURE: The reading indicated by the ordinary thermometer.

WET-BULB THERMOMETER: An ordinary thermometer which has its bulb covered by a piece of soft cloth which has been dipped in water before taking readings.

WET-BULB TEMPERATURE: The reading indicated by a wet bulb thermometer.

RELATIVE HUMIDITY: The percentage of water, or moisture in a unit of air at any given dry bulb temperature. This percentage is based upon the maximum quantity of water that would completely saturate that unit of air at the given temperature.

EXPLANATION OF CHART

DRY-BULB TEMPERATURES: Represented by vertical lines, with the value in degrees Fahrenheit (indicated on every alternate line along the lower edge of the chart). Multipls of 10° are indicated; the unmarked lines are 55°, 65°, 75°, 85°, and 95°, and between the lines you must interpolate values.

WET-BULB TEMPERATURES: Represented by horizontal lines, with values in degrees Fahrenheit (indicated on every alternate line along the left-hand edge of the chart). Multiples of 10° are indicated, the unmarked lines are 45°, 55°, 65°, 75°, and 85°, between the lines you must interpolate values.

Note: The extreme lower left-hand corner of the chart represents a reading of dry bulb 50° (this is indicated) and wet bulb of 35° (this figure 35 is not shown on the chart).

SUMMER COMFORT ZONE: In the upper left-hand corner of this chart you will see the Effective Temperature lines from 64° line up to the 79° line, extended. Within this range of effective temperature lines you will see printed the words "Summer Comfort Zone." At the ends of these extended effective temperature lines, and enclosing the words "Summer Comfort Zone," you will note figures from zero—12, 34 and so on up to 98—then down to zero again. These figures represent the percentage of summer comfort resulting when the combination of wet and dry bulb readings in your theatre fall on a point on any of these effective temperature lines. See following examples:

Example No. 1—Dry bulb reading 75°, with wet bulb reading of 62½°, results in an effective temperature of 70°, which is 94% comfortable.

Example No. 2.—Dry bulb reading 80°, with wet bulb reading of 69½°, results in an effective temperature of 75°, which is only 50% comfortable.

In both examples the conditions assumed result in effective temperatures within the comfort zone, yet the conditions of the first example are far more desirable than the conditions indicated in the second example.

WINTER COMFORT ZONE: This zone is indicated in the lower right-hand corner of the chart. An explanation similar to the one above for the summer comfort zone would explain the winter comfort zone.. You will note that the "Winter Comfort Zone" has its range of Effective Temperatures from 60° to 74°.

OBSERVATIONS FROM CHART

The summer and winter comfort zones overlap so far as Effective Temperatures are concerned. The Effective Temperatures from 64° to 74° are common to both zones

Effective Temperatures from 74° up to 78° indicate conditions which would be very uncomfortable in summer.

Effective Temperatures from 61° to 64° indicate conditions which would be very uncomfortable in winter.

These facts show conclusively that audiences can be comfortable in colder theatres in winter than they could possibly stand in summer. Also, that an audience can be comfortable in a warmer theatre in summer time than they could possibly stand in winter. The explanation for this is that people wear less clothing in summer and generally eat food with less heat value, and in addition the human body goes through certain physiological changes in conformity with the general seasons of the year.

Note: Though not indicated on this chart, Relative Humidity greater than 70%, or less than 30%, regardless of dry-bulb readings, are not to be desired in theatres.

BEST SUMMER CONDITIONS

Effective Temperatures between 68° and 74°.

Relative Humidity between 45% and 65%.

BEST WINTER CONDITIONS

Effective Temperatures between 64° and 69°.

Relative Humidity between 50% and 70%.

THEATRE WITHOUT CONDITIONING

What does this all mean to the theatre manager who has no air conditioning equipment, and is struggling along with, perhaps, two ancient fans? So far as improving conditions immediately it is not of any assistance. But by understanding this chart and by taking constant, regular readings in the theatre throughout a summer season, it is possible to judge just how badly that theatre needs additional equipment. It might be definitely learned that air conditions within the theatre are much worse than the owner had ever before believed.

OPERATING WITH FANS ONLY: The results of the regular readings should be plotted on cross-section paper. In this form it is possible to see the variations from day to day, and what is more important, just how many days during the summer when air conditioning equipment was actually needed. Whether the manager is also the owner or not, such a picture of the actual conditions should be most convincing.

IMPROVING FANS: To improve the fans already in the theatre the following suggestions are made:

1. Have the bearings of the fans checked. If they are worn or loose, replace them.

2. If the fan is driven by a belt, consider one of the more silent and efficient V-type drives.

3. Be sure that the fans are operated at maximum speed. Generally the higher the speed, the more air delivered into the theatre.

4. If these steps give a disturbing noise, consider (a) placing fans and motors on sound absorbing bases, (b) insulating and bracing connected duct work for sound absorption material, (c) placing staggered baffles in the ducts, these baffles should be of sound absorbing material

CREATING COOL EFFECT: Without air washers or air conditioning equipment, the only means of creating an apparent cool effect in a theatre is to put into it all the air possible with the equipment available. Fifteen or 20 cubic feet of air per minute per seat is not enough; get 40 or 50 if possible, even if it is necessary to alter your equipment to obtain this quantity.

OPERATING WITH FANS AND AIR WASHER: The theatre manager who has no air conditioning equipment other than fans and an air washer should note carefully what has been said previously about fans, fan speeds, noises and quantities of air in the foregoing case of the manager with fans only. These same thoughts apply in this case of fans and air washer.

For example, look at the chart and check the conditions represented by a dry bulb reading of 80°, and a wet-bulb reading of 65°. Looking along the bottom of the chart for 80°, follow up that vertical line until the horizontal line indicating the wet-bulb reading of 65° is reached. The point where these two lines cross represents this condition This point indicates a relative humidity of about 45%, an Effective Temperature of slightly over 73°, and summer comfort of about 80%, really very good conditions.

Assume that the water in your air washer system is approximately the temperature of the air (dry-bulb temperature, or 80°), which will be the case in a very few minutes after you start your air washer (unless the water in the washer tank is continually replenished from the city main and the surplus permitted to escape into the sewer through the overflow pipe). Under these conditions, with the air washer water at 80°, the use of the washer will only add moisture to the air, which increases its relative humidity. In effect, the point where the horizontal line 65° crosses the vertical line 80° would tend to rise along the vertical line and approach a wet-bulb reading of 80°, which would represent complete saturation at an 80° dry-bulb temperature. Therefore as the point approached while the washer is being used, would be the intersection of the vertical line 80° with the horizontal line 80°, and as this point falls completely without the comfort zone, it follows that by using the air washer it produces a condition far worse than if it had not been used.

Actually in practice this maximum condition would not be reached. Several elements prevents this from existing.

CHART CARDS

Instead of mutilating the magazine in order to place these guide sheets on air conditioning in a handy place for references, it is suggested that theatre managers and engineers write to Better Theatres indicating they would desire reprints of this material. If enough orders are received, each of the four charts will be issued, with condensed explanations, on durable cards of convenient size.

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

JUDGING THE QUALITY OF YOUR SOUND

Presenting a handy reference chart for the guidance of management in keeping track of reproduction conditions

SO THAT management may have a handy means of becoming familiar with the commoner conditions of sound reproduction, and thus be placed in a position better to judge the current quality of sound and efficiency of equipment operation, a chart has been prepared indicating the more frequent faults, how they may be readily identified, methods that would likely correct them, and what could be done in an effort to eliminate the conditions that caused them.

It should be pointed out, of course, that to try to provide management with a complete course of study in sound in such form, would be futile. The result could only be misleading. Indeed, were it possible, such a chart would be so complex that its very purpose would be defeated. The chart presented (on the following page) is intended to give management a convenient means of keeping track of sound quality and equipment operation.

The chart is self-explanatory, but it should be studied with an appreciation of its significance and limitations. For example, the column headed "Where to listen." No specific listening point is recommended in cases in which any portion of the auditorium will serve. Such a case would be that concerning volume. If the speakers are properly adjusted, volume will be the same in every part of the house. But in no case is the projection room monitor to be trusted as a listening post! Projection room noises will drown out weak disturbances which may nevertheless be quite loud enough to be annoying to an audience. Only when no projection machinery is running will the monitor serve as a fairly trustworthy guide, though even then it should be remembered that monitors are not always capable of delivering a quality of sound as high as that of the auditorium speakers.

THE COLUMN headed "What might be cause," does not, of course, purport to list every possible cause of every trouble mentioned. Only the more probable ones are listed, for the reason noted above. These causes are the ones to be looked into first. In a large proportion of cases, their elimination will prove the solution to the trouble.

Similarly, the columns dealing with corrections and preventions are not absolutely complete, but are intended to be helpful in the majority of instances.

Frequently among the preventions indicated will be found the notation, "Inspection routine." This means that management should install, or intensify, regular methods of apprehending trouble.

Inspection routines are multiple: there should be a daily, weekly, monthly and semi-annual routine. These can be drawn up for any given sound system with the assistance of the manufacturer of the equipment; or if the projectionists in charge have had enough experience with that type of apparatus, such inspection routines may be based on their knowledge. Management should be aware of the commonly existing fact that those things which are least likely to cause trouble are most often inspected, since inspection of them is usually easy; and those things which are most likely to give trouble are commonly looked after the least because of their remote location or involved character.

The same generally applies to overhaul routines. Little things, like exciter focus, may be adjusted as part of the daily inspection. Soldered contacts throughout the system are inspected, and are overhauled where they need to be, perhaps once in six months. The semi-annual inspection should be fairly thorough, covering every reasonable possibility of future trouble. In many cases such an inspection should be an all-night job.

Inventory of the stock of spare parts should be made a part of the weekly or monthly inspection, depending upon the amount of spares usually carried. This is not a side-issue, but one of the important items of inspection. Very few things stop a show today as much as the lack of just the right gadget to repair some trifling damage.

Attention is directed to the note at the bottom of the chart. It is of the greatest help to the projectionist or service engineer if management can say definitely whether the trouble is associated with one projector or both, and if only one, which one. When a deficiency in the quality of sound is noted, a glance at the projector ports will tell which projector is in operation. In some cases the fault may lie in the record. To determine this, at the next performance the order of the program, or that of the projectors, may be so altered that the questionable film runs on a different projector. If the trouble has disappeared, the cause most likely lay in the previously used projector system.

USE INDEX FOR REFERENCE

Beginning with the July 29th Better Theatres, each issue will carry a cumulative index for all of the previous issues during a period of six months. For example, a detailed index, with cross references, of this issue, will appear in the July 29th issue. Then Better Theatres for August 26 will contain an index which will refer to the material published in both the issue of July 1 (the present one) and that for July 29. Thus the December 16th issue will carry an index covering all material published in the previous six issues. Each index, therefore, will be complete for each six-month period.

This plan has been adopted in order to permit easy reference to information concerning specific problems and methods in maintenance, equipment and management, without mutilation of pages.

It is suggested that a convenient shelf or drawer be found where each issue may be filed as a new one is published. When some matter arises suggesting reference to past issues, examination of the last index will indicate the dates and pages.

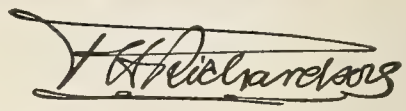
F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •



WAGES—AND GOOD PROJECTION

FROM NO matter where came a letter from which the following excerpts are taken:

"I have had a most unfortunate experience. Reading that a new theatre was being erected, I made application to the general manager for the position of projectionist, giving ample references from managers or executives whom I had worked for in past years.

"In due course of time I received an answer stating that there was a possibility of their having need of a man of my calibre in the very near future. The letter said, 'Our men are expected to work long hours and to assist at other work than the routine work of projection,' It was also desired that I send references from one of several business men whom the general manager personally knew here in ——. I chose Senator Walker, who gave me an excellent reference, which was forwarded.

"After all this I received a letter from the general manager stating that the wages would be $15 to start, but later would be raised to $17.50. He added, by way of good measure, 'You can expect long hours, plenty of hard work, but all the opportunity in the world for advancement.' Also I received a telegram, sent collect, asking me to hurry my decision!

"I have a family to support, and I felt that the wage offered 'to start' was wholly unreasonable. I had 'started' in projection years ago. I therefore replied to the effect that I had evidently overestimated the calibre of his organization, apologizing for having caused him the trouble of answering my letter. Now Mr. Richardson, did I do right or wrong? I value your opinion more highly than that of anyone else in the industry."

You did right. A man who would make such an offer on behalf of what may be assumed to be an organization of some size, for such a service, will in due course of time come to grief, and will, if too long retained, probably carry his organization to grief with him. His sending the wire collect was, I believe, about the cheapest act I have heard of in 66 years of life.

Here is a "general manager" who expects an experienced and presumably capable projectionist to perform his regular duties and then do other work in addition, all for a sum very much less than any ordinary skilled mechanic receives for eight hours of work. Is that good business? Does this general manager imagine he is going to secure an efficient projectionist on such terms? And does he not understand that an inefficient projectionist may easily, and probably will, waste more in equipment and electric power than the fifteen-dollar wage amounts to, to say nothing of loss at the box office caused by poor results in picture and sound?

He gravely asks an experienced projectionist to deliver all kinds of references, work hard for long hours, and in return to accept the wage of an office boy, with the "promise" of advancement, which may or may not come, except possibly for the $17.50 bye-and-bye.

Such procedure represents nothing short of a penny-wise-pound-foolish policy. If such a policy ever became general, then the whole industry will suffer, and suffer sadly for the simple reason that we shall have such a low calibre of men as can be secured for beggardly pay in projection rooms, in charge of the highly sensitive, complicated apparatus and optical systems, and that, in the very nature of things, could mean only one thing; namely, a general lowering of the quality of the finished product as sold to its buyers, the public. Even a blind man can see that would mean less business and a decided, probably fatal drop backward all along the line.

I SUPPOSE exhibitors and projectionists are rather naturally continually quarreling about wages. But it seems to me to be rather unnecessary. It also seems to me that both sides are not so much concerned with what is right, reasonable and best as they are to grab every possible thing for themselves, regardless of final results.

Come, let us reason together, remembering that I am not taking sides, but trying to appeal to reason and common sense. Is it really good business, friend exhibitor, to pay relatively large rental for productions and then have them projected unskillfully to "save" a couple of dollars, employing projectionists of mediocre ability?

In modern theatres the projectionist has in his charge relatively very costly, complicated equipment. Certainly. we all now realize that this equipment is very delicate in some of its parts, requiring expert adjustment and care if it is to deliver the best service in picture and sound. Surely we also must realize that this costly equipment will last much longer and cost much less for upkeep if it has expert care. It is also true that the expert, careful projectionist can secure better results than the inexpert, careless one with much less consumption of electric power. It is therefore plain that the careful, expert projectionist may reduce projection overhead very materially below the cost built up by inefficiency.

"But," the theatre operator retorts, "unions very often have in their ranks men who are not competent, and I am forced to pay them the prevailing scale."

True, but do not forget that it has been the attitude of exhibitors themselves in the past that has forced many unions to admit incompetent men. I myself offer no excuse for unions which admit incompentent men, no matter what the circumstances—and permit them to remain incompetent. I most emphatically hold it to be the duty of unions to force such men to improve both their theoretical and practical knowledge. And I believe that if exhibitors generally pay the scale and demand that the union supply only expert projectionists, the union usually will make every effort to please them. But it was not to argue union matters that I started on this subject. What I have to say amounts to this:

If you want maximum results in sound and picture, together with minimum operating cost (including electric power, equipment upkeep and replacement), you must have a man or men of brains, thorough training and professional pride in your projection room, and these things cost real money!

If you force wages too low, you inevitably will "pay through the nose" for thus indulging yourself. You will get poorer results and those results will cost you a sum unnecessarily large. And at the same time, the box office is placed under a continual threat.

Another thing and I am done: Paying a reasonable wage is not all that is necessary. If you give the projectionist no reason to believe you observe and place high value upon expert projection work—well, you, just won't get it from the average man. Pay good wages and let the projectionist occasionally know that you are aware of the great importance of his work and he will darned near break his neck to deliver the goods. Force wages too low, and give your projectionist no encouragement and—well, brother, you will, in the long run, lose out. It simply works that way, always.

HOW I WOULD RESURFACE MY SCREEN

THE MANAGER of the Lee theatre in Pennington Gap, Va., asks, "Please advise us at once as to the best way to clean or paint a Walker white screen."

This is similar to requests received from time to time, in which almost all makes of screens are named. Some exhibitors owning small theatres do not now feel able to stand the expense of having the screen manufacturer either clean their screen or renew its surface. As a result very many screens are today in bad shape, reflecting light with enormous inefficiency.

I feel justified in declining to tell exhibitors what they should do in such a matter as this. If they follow my advice and results do not please them, automaticaly I am the goat. And one can never tell whether any particular result will please any particular individual. They might get really excellent results, yet feel that had they done the job differently results would have been better. But I can tell what I would do about resurfacing were I placed in the position of the Lee theatre management. If an exhibitor or manager does what I would do, and later believes another way would have been better—well, that is no fault of mine, what?

Assuming no sprayer to be available, I might conclude to do either one of two things, depending upon whether I preferred to recoat my screen quite frequently at very low cost, or to use it longer as it was, with higher reflection power during the earlier stages. I would coat it with either paint or white alabastine. The paint, while new, would give higher brilliancy for a given illumination value; also, it would give wide diffusion. Alabastine gives wide diffusion and good reflection power. It may be easily washed off when dirty and a recoat applied at very small expense.

THE PAINT

If I decided to use paint I would visit a paint store and buy:

A 4-inch brush of good quality.

An equal quantity (enough for at least two coats) of zinc white and white lead.

Two gallons of turpentine.

Two quarts of boiled linseed oil.

Small amount of ultramarine in oil—or, if this was not available, Prussian blue.

MIXING THE PAINT

I would dump the turpentine and the boiled linseed oil together, shaking well to mix thoroughly. Having secured a suitable mixing can, I would then mix the zinc and white lead thoroughly, breaking it up well, using a sufficient amount of the oil and turpentine mixture to accomplish the purpose. Then I would add enough of the blue to give the combination a decided bluish tint while in the mixing can. Not too much, mind you, but a decided bluish tint. It is the same as putting bluing in the rinsing water for clothes. It makes the paint dead white when spread.

APPLYING THE PAINT

Having thinned the paint until it showed little or no inclination to fill up the perforations, I would coat the screen. If this is done in the morning, the screen may be used that night.

Next morning I would coat it again. If a good vacuum cleaner is available, I would, by some handy means, attach a garden hose where the dust bag is and have an assistant follow my brush, blowing all perforations clean.

Having finished the second coat, I would re-do the border surrounding the screen.

That is all there is to it, but in the matter of thickness of paint you must use discretion. It won't do to fill up the perforations. If you can use the hose and blow the paint out—get pressure enough to do it, I mean—you can use the paint a bit heavier, but no so very heavy even then. The result should be an excellent reflection surface having wide diffusive powers.

USING CALCIMINE

If I decided on calcimine, the job would be more simple. I would coat the screen surface with a good grade of glue sizing. Any painter will mix it for you, or tell you how. Just dissolve a full pound of good glue in water enough to fill an ordinary water pail, perhaps two-thirds full. Let the sizing coat dry thoroughly. Then, having first secured a package of alabastine or similar calcimine material, mix it according to directions and coat the screen. Mix it according to directions except as to consistency—thickness. It must be thinned down so that the perforations won't be filled up. I think it advisable to use the vacuum cleaner technique here, too. As to thickness, try a corner of the screen surface first, observing the effect; then mix to a consistency which seems best. You probably will have to give the surface two thin coats.

Good calcimine is something quite a few projectionists and exhibitors swear by. It has the virtue that it costs little and may easily be washed off for recoating when dirty. Possibly it might be best to try calcimine first, as it can be easily washed off and paint applied if it does not seem to be quite what is wanted.

You will of course have to have a good calcimine brush. Don't try a cheap brush. A good brush will last for years if properly taken care of. Wash it clean when through using it, and hang it up. That's all there is to it.

THE NEW A.C. PROJECTION ARC

SOME TIME ago I asked the National Carbon Company to send me a detailed description of their new alternating current projection arc product as soon as complete information was available. I have just received the following account of the development, which I understand is about ready for use in theatres. Pending such applications, I am here letting National's research department speak its piece without material changes or asides:

"While the present low intensity direct current projection arc in general use by the majority of smaller houses, when viewed by itself apparently gives a brilliant white light, nevertheless this light when compared directly with that obtained from the high intensity arc is yellowish white in color. The object of the research that has brought about the development of the alternating current projection arc, has been to bridge the present wide gap in effective screen illumination that exists between the high intensity arc used by the larger theatres, and the present low intensity direct current arc. By this new development the smaller theatre may have the advantage of a snow white light for screen illumination similar to that enjoyed by the larger theatres and which is so desirable for the satisfactory projection of colored films.

"Not only has this marked improvement in color and brilliancy of light been accomplished by this alternating current arc, but it is also accompanied by other economical advantages. First, the power required to produce a given screen illumination with the new arc is less than that of the low intensity direct current arc. Secondly, with the new alternating current arc, it is possible, by the use of a specially designed transformer, which is comparatively low in cost, to eliminate entirely the use of motor generator sets, rectifiers, converters, as well as the power consuming ballast resistances now required with direct current projection equipment. This economy will appeal to all theatres located in districts where alternating current only is available.

"The characteristics of this new alternating current arc are quite different from any other arc now in use. By means of special carbon design and control, it has been possible to effect an increase in arc current with a decreased arc voltage, thereby concentrating the light giving power of the arc into a much smaller volume near the carbon tips than has heretofore been possible. This high concentration of power in such a small space allows the light to be focused easily by the means of a mirror, thereby making it a very desirable arc for projection. In reality, this new arc is a high intensity alternating current arc. The color of light from this new alternating current arc is snow white, and in operation it is very quiet and steady.

H. I. reflecting arc carbons	Arc current	Arc volts	H. I. a.c. arc 95% transformer efficiency	SRA carbons 35 amp. 55 v. 80% motor generator efficiency	Screen light compared with SRA carbons 35 am. 55 v.	Power saved by a.c. H. I. arc in watts
8 mm.	70-80	24-29	2,130	3,500	115-150%	1,370

"A point of particular interest and one which is new to the projection field, is the use of a specially designed transformer as a source of power for the arc. By this simple arrangement, it is possible to supply the higher current necessary for the operation of this new high intensity alternating current arc at the right arc voltage, with equal or even less line current than that drawn by the present low intensity arc equipment. The transformer used is a high reactance, step-down transformer which automatically reduces the standard voltage supplied by the power company to the proper arc voltage and, at the same time, provides ballast and effects the necessary increase in amperage. The usefulness and economy of this method of transformation is evident when the efficiency of the transformer (95% and over) is compared with the efficiency of the best direct current converting equipment.

"The carbons for the new high intensity alternating current arc service have been made in 6 mm., 7 mm., and 8 mm. diameters, the same size carbon to be used in each holder. The carbons are all metal coated to accommodate the higher current values necessary, which range from 40 to 80 amperes, or a current density of 800 to 1,000 amperes per square inch. The carbon consumption is as follows: 4 to 4.5 inches per hour for the 6 mm. carbons at 45 amperes; 4.5 to 5.5 inches per hour for the 7 mm. carbons at 65 amperes; and for the 8 mm. carbons at 80 amperes.

"The accompanying table gives a general idea of what may be expected from this new high intensity alternating current arc in terms of well known direct current projection systems. The 35-ampere, 55-volt super-reflecting arc with the regular mirror arc optical system is chosen for this comparison. In arriving at the value for line watts, an efficiency of 80% (unusually high) has been assumed for the motor-generator sets in the case of the direct current, and 95% efficiency for transformers:

"Projection equipment designed to use this new high intensity alternating current arc is said to be well along in development."

RCA SOUND CHANGEOVER

RECENTLY I wrote the RCA Victor Company in Camden, N. J., asking for a simple, complete explanation of the fader system now being used in RCA Sound Equipment. In response the following letter was received:

"The term fader as applied to Photophone equipment, is merely nomenclature retained through the evolution of methods for changing projectors.

"Changeover, as accomplished by Photophone methods, is practically instantaneous. Each projector is equipped with its own station selector, in which is mounted a non-locking key switch and relay. The circuit is so designed that by throwing the switch for any one projector energizes its relay. Contacts on the switch first short-circuits the loudspeaker voice coils (to eliminate any switch noises), then disconnects the relay coil of any station selector located to the left in the circuit. The energization of the relay coil causes contacts to make and break, accomplishing, first, a 'stick' circuit to keep the relay energized after the switch is released; second, the breaking of the 'stick' circuit to any relay located to the right in the cir-

PLEASE SEND STAMPS FOR MAIL REPLIES

Frequently I receive air mail letters, asking for information or help in some problem, accompanied by a request that I reply by air mail. Seldom, however, is an air mail stamp enclosed. Now 3c is not much, and 8c is no fortune. Still, a great many pennies make what the Scotchman calls a "muckle," and in the course of a year there is plenty "muckle" in this matter. When you want a reply by mail I must ask you to enclose stamps.

proper photocell output to the amplifier input. Release of the switch then disconnects the voice coil short and allows the equipment to operate from the projector in question. A neon lamp connected directly across each relay coil indicates which projector is in operation.

"It must be remembered that the time cycle involved for the procedure, as outlined, is so nearly instantaneous that no break in the program is noticeable.

"Some older types of equipments also used relays for changeover, although the electrical circuit was somewhat different. For a two-projector installation the photocell transformers were connected in series and three leads brought out, one from either end, and one from the common connection. The relay connections were then so made that either one transformer or the other was shorted out, depending upon which position the relay switch was thrown. The two outside leads were also connected to the amplifier input, so that the projector whose photocell transformer was not shorted, functions as a reproducer.

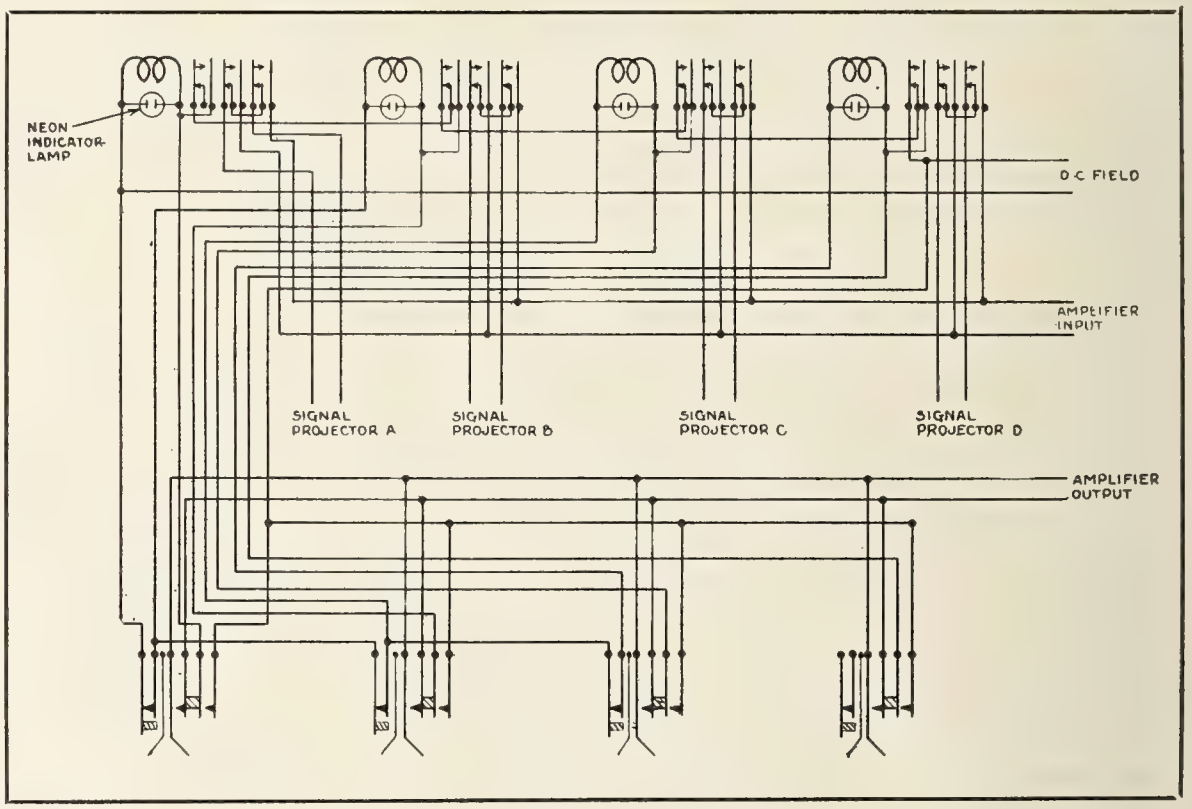
"The volume control consists of a 500,000-ohm potentiometer, one side of which is connected to the plate of the tube in the first stage of the amplifier through a 0.05-mdf. condenser, the other side connects to ground. The movable contact connects to the grid of the tube in the second stage.

"For convenience alone, RCA Photophone has incorporated a.c.-operated exciter lamps on one type of equipment. In order to eliminate the hum due to this alternating source of power, it is necessary that a low voltage lamp be used having a very heavy filament and drawing considerable current. These factors keep the filament temperature practically constant and the light output stable. Photophone's standard a. c. exciter lamp operates at 10 volts, 7½ amperes.

"Since the discussion on fader systems has had to do with our most up-to-date equipments, it should be mentioned that the latest types of Photophone reproducing equipment incorporates a d. c. exciter lamp, obtaining the power source from Rectox units mounted on the amplifier rack."

WIRE HEATING AND DRY CELL DESIGN

JOHN L. DORAN of Mexico City, Mo., asks, "Will you please answer two questions which, though they may seem very simple to you, I am unable to find any understandable answer to. The first is: Just what causes wires to heat as additional current is sent through them over and above a certain number of amperes. Second: Just what is it that enables a dry cell (battery) to produce electricity. I can understand the action of a wet cell, but not that of a dry one."



Photophone changeover system.

Electric current, Friend Doran, meets resistance in passing through a conductor. It must overcome that resistance, and in doing so, heat is produced. If the wire or other conductor is not working above capacity, then while the heating effect is present, it is not sufficiently high to do any harm, either to the wire or its insulation. It cannot be detected by sense of touch, but if you take the temperature accurately before the wire is in use and afterward, you will find there is a difference.

As the current flow is increased, however, the resistance to be overcome is also increased, and therefore the best. If carried far enough the wire may become red hot and finally fuse—that is to say, it might if it were not protected by fuses. (If you have a Bluebook, or can borrow one, you will find the matter explained rather fully in Volume 1, pages 53 and 64. You will find it fully treated, though possibly not in such simple terms, in any standard text book on electricity and electrical action.)

As to the dry cells, I felt a bit rusty on the subject because of the many improvements made in such cells of late years. I therefore asked the National Carbon Company, makers of dry cells, to answer your question for me. They have very kindly consented, as follows:

"The present dry cell is an adaptation of the old type sal-ammoniac cell known as the Le Clanche cell. The elements are carbon (positive terminal), zinc (negative terminal), sal-ammoniac in solution (acting as the electrolyte or attacking fluid). The chemical action of the sal-ammoniac solution on the zinc builds up a difference of potential. Voltage is about 1½ on open circuit in this type of cell.

"The dry cell consists of a zinc can (negative terminal) inside of which is an absorbent paper lining which acts as an insulator between the carbon mix and the zinc can, and at the same time acts as a reservoir or sponge for the moist electrolyte. The mix contains, besides carbon, a substance known as manganese dioxide, which is called the deplorizer. The action of the depolarizer is to maintain the voltage of the cell when it is in use by taking up the free hydrogen gas which is liberated due to the action of the sal-ammoniac on the zinc.

"A dry cell is not really dry but contains electrolyte the same as wet cells, the only difference being that the so-called dry cell has the electrolyte absorbed in the porous materials so it will not spill out.

"With good electrical connections and proper insulation of connections, there is no limit to voltages obtainable with dry cells. However, where dry cells are connected in series, the current drain cannot exceed that which will operate efficiently from a single cell. The present radio B-batteries are excellent examples of high-voltage dry cells."

It may well be remarked that the projectionist need expect little respect to be shown his profession until he himself learns to give it his serious support. With thousands of projectionists in New York City, half a dozen would well cover the number present. The program was entirely on projection. Besides Doctor Goldsmith's paper, there was one entitled "Operating Disadvantages of Perforated Screens," by myself; one on "Effect of Oil on Film on Screen Image," by George C. Edwards; and another on "Factors Affecting Sound Reproduction in Theatres," by J. O. Baker.

True, a large percentage of the men were working at the time of the meeting, but enough were not to have filled the large hall jammed full; also, at least the heads of Local 306, and a representative of the International office might have been there. It is no excuse to say they "did not know." It is their business to know, and they are paid high salaries to know what is going on in projection. I honor Joseph Bliven, projectionist of the Garde theatre in New London, Conn. He came down 125 miles to attend the meeting,

STILL A GOOD IDEA—IF IT WORKS!

How many of you remember this cartoon? It was first published quite a few years ago in Moving Picture World, now absorbed by MOTION PICTURE HERALD. But with July upon us, the idea expressed still seems a good one—if you projectionists can work it. Surely, this must be a model projection room—or a projectionist's idea of Heaven! Why not ask the boss to revamp his projection facilities along these lines? But be sure to do so on a very hot day, so that he will have the necessary sympathy—or be sufficiently crazy with the heat!

whereas New York men did not bother to come even a few blocks.

Plain talk, yes, but it is about time we told some unpleasant truths. New York men are altogether too self-satisfied. There must be many things a large percentage of them can learn about their profession. Projectionists everywhere should bear in mind that if projection is to be a profession, it must have professional interest.

PROPER SIZE OF SCREEN IMAGE

L. J. WEGENER, manager of the Capitol theatre in Clinton Ia. (my own home state, by the way) writes, "I seek your advice as to proper method of determining the proper size of the picture in any particular theatre. We have a screen image 21 feet wide, using a good grade of sound screen illuminated with H. I. lamps using 60 amperes. It is 15 feet from the screen to the first row of seats, 85 feet from the screen to last row downstairs, and 105 feet to last row in balcony. Under such conditions would or would you not advise a smaller screen? Any suggestions or information you will give will be appreciated."

Unfortunately you have not stated the width of your auditorium, which is a factor in the case. Picture size is dependent upon more than one item. There is extreme viewing distance, screen brilliancy and viewing angles to consider as items of prime importance. Under the conditions described your picture is entirely too large. As you reduce its dimensions, using same light source and proper projector optical train, you would of course increase the brilliancy of the screen image, and that automatically, to a large degree, compensates for the reduction insofar as this has to do with ability to see picture details at a distance. I have stood almost 1,000 feet away from a very brilliant 16-foot picture and have viewed the action therein very plainly, though of course all the smaller detail was lost.

In your theatre your front seat patrons have a literally terrible set-up. Such a picture would be extremely "fuzzy" at 15 feet; also, the eyes of those seated there would be "jumping around" like a jack rabbit, to say nothing of the strain imposed by the lack of sharp definition. Frankly, Friend Wegener, the condition is very, very bad.

By reducing your screen image (picture) to, say, 16 feet wide, you would have, provided you have your projectionist revamp the projector optical system to meet the new condition, a screen sufficiently more brilliant to compensate for size reduction so far as vision from the rear of the balcony is concerned. As a matter of fact, patrons in rear seats should see the picture details fully as well as they do now, or even better, while those down front would have a vastly improved condition.

You might get some kicks from patrons at first. Many people prefer what they are accustomed to. Soon, however, the objectors would change their tune and realize the condition had been improved.

Remember this, however: You must have a different projector optical system, including projection lenses. Don't try the stunt with your present optical system set-up. Personally, I would regard a 16-foot picture as large enough under the 15-feet-to-screen layout, with 18 feet as an absolute maximum.

QUEER RESULT OF RECONDITIONING SCREEN

FROM Dale Danielson, projectionist of the Main Street theatre in Russell, Kan., comes a complaint essentially as follows:

"We had a Da-Tone X perforated screen installed in September 1929. In January last we had this screen refinished by a man who was refinishing all Fox screens in this territory. He used a prepared screen paint and portable air brush and seemed very careful. Apparently it was a good job. Brilliancy was materially improved.

"This week a friend asked if I had noticed the white streaks in certain subjects. He said it appeared to be like stray light. They were entirely invisible from the projection room. Viewing the screen from the main floor I was amazed to find it full of vertical shining streaks. These were invisible from a wide angle, also from straight in front of the screen. They seem to be getting worse. It is very noticeable in light scenes. The glare seems to stand out away from the rest of the picture. Upon close examination, the glare areas look as though the paint was absorbed at the holes. Between them there is a narrow strip of shining surface which only appears in spots. There are, however, quite a few of the spots.

"There is a complete air conditioning system in the theatre, hence the humidity is held at a good point—12 degrees on the wet bulb. There is a draft of cold air through the screen as the theatre is being heated. Warm air goes up to the top of the prosceneum, and after striking the cold brick wall at the rear, comes down and out through the screen. When not in use the screen is protected by a curtain.

"I tried the lens polish you recommended, namely fifty-fifty water and alcohol. It seemed to leave a white scum on the glass, especially on the port glasses, very similar to a light frosting. Bausch & Lomb recommend lukewarm water, a cloth without lint, and ivory soap. Don't you think cleaning the lens with a wet chamois, polishing after with Kleenex or Ponds' Tissue would be better?

"Last but not least, I have just finished gearing down my rewinder to 1,000 feet of film in 9.14 minutes. It is equipped with an automatic stop. Wheel diameters (bottom of belt groove) are as follows:

"Motor pulley, 1.3125 inches, 1,750 rpm; from this by belt to pulley 12 inches in diameter; on shaft with this latter is another 2.12-inch diameter from which belt goes to rewind wheel 5.625 inches in diameter. The automatic stop works over a wheel 1.6875 inches in diameter. We have been rewinding 1,000 feet of film in 1.61 minutes. Do you think we are reducing film damage? Oh boy!"

Yes, Brother Danielson, unnecessary rewinder speed has caused hundreds of thousands of dollars of unnecessary damage to film in years past and gone.

As to the lens polish, you must have got hold of some alcohol which was denatured by some chemical agent. Yours is the first case of the sort that has been reported. The only trouble with water alone is that it won't completely remove oil. Ivory soap and water is quite all right, but then the soap must be removed —every bit of it.

About your screen, I am puzzled. One thing is sure: So far as possible, the circulation of air through the perforations should be stopped. Air passing through a perforation inevitably leaves a ring of dust and other discoloration immediately around the hole. For that reason it is important that so far as possible the screen back should be closed in to prevent air circulation through it.

USING ONLY ONE HEAD AMPLIFIER

MARTIN TEKER of the Martin Opera House in Leith, N. Dak., writes, "I have a problem in sound to which I have been unable to find an answer. Perhaps you can help me.

"I am using one of the battery-operated sound equipments which uses two head amplifiers. Since it is out of the question, during present business conditions, to get one of the a.c. equipments, I would like to make some improvement in the one I have.

"When switching from one head amplifier to the other there is no sound for several seconds, or until the 112-tube heats up. This fault I would very much like to eliminate. One way is to install a switch that would keep all head amplifier tubes lit up continually during projection, but that of course would not only waste current, but also to some extent would shorten the tube life. I therefore would like to eliminate one head amplifier and use the present switch to changeover the exciter current and the photocells at the same time.

"What I want to know is, would a single-pole, double-throw switch do a good job of changing over the sound portion; and if the anode of each cell can be directed to one side of the switch (the head amplifier to the center of the switch, of course)? I would like to know about this before we do any rewiring. The manufacturer of the

Writes Mr. DeMoss:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Last year I ordered your Bluebooks of Projection, fifth edition, three volumes, since which time I have often intended to thank you for the help I have received from these books. I have gone from cover to cover of them all, again and again, and each time I have received more help.

Through the help I have had from your books I have not had a stop in a show because of something going wrong with the equipment, and our sound is as clear as a bell. This is about my tenth year in the movie game, about eight years of which I have been a projectionist.

I do all my own repair work. When I get a little bawled up I just grab my Bluebooks. The net result is that my two Powers 6B's run like Singer sewing machines.

I would advise all projectionists to get $10.20 and send for the Bluebooks. Borrow the money if you have to, unless you already have them.—William Glynn DeMoss, chief projectionist, Court Theatre, Huntingdon, Texas.

system is unable to give me information, as they do not build a set having only one head amplifier."

I referred this inquiry to Electrical Research Products engineers, who have replied as follows:

"Except as a temporary measure to restore sound in an emergency, it is not good practice to switch photoelectric cells as Mr. Teker suggests. There are several reasons why it is not, the most important of which are the following:

"1. The photoelectric cell circuit is a 'low-energy' circuit. It therefore would be quite likely to pick up an excessive amount of extraneous noises.

"2. Depending somewhat upon the impedance relations, if the capacity to ground of this circuit is appreciable, a loss in the higher frequencies would result. Under some conditions this loss might be as high as from 8 to 10 decibels.

"3. Such an arrangement would be very likely to result in noise at the time the circuits are switched from one projector to the other.

"It would seem to us that there are only two practical methods by means of which the difficulty Mr. Teker reports as resulting from the interval required for the vacuum tubes to heat up, can be overcome; namely, to keep the heater current on both amplifier tubes at all times. This is open to the objection, as he points out, that it wastes power and shortens the tube life.

"An alternative method which would save power and not appreciably shorten tube life, would be to keep the tubes of the idle amplifier partially heated while not in use. This would of course materially shorten the time required for the tubes to reach operating temperature. The method for accomplishing this would require nothing more than a series resistance, which could be short-circuited when the amplifier is put into action. The exact amount of resistance required would probably be best determined by actual trial.

"The only other solution possible would be an arrangement whereby the filament of the amplifier on the incoming projector might be turned on a few minutes before the sound is switched. This, however, is open to the objection that unless it be in some manner made automatic, its success will depend upon the ability of the projectionist to do the switching."

DO YOU WANT REPORT BLANKS?

We have received inquiries from time to time concerning printed forms on which projectionists could readily make their reports to the management. If enough of you write in response to this notice, indicating that you make such reports regularly and would like to use suitable blanks, I will see what can be done about having such blanks supplied you projectionists, with the compliments of Better Theatres.

EQUIPMENT AFFAIRS

Equipment News and Comment

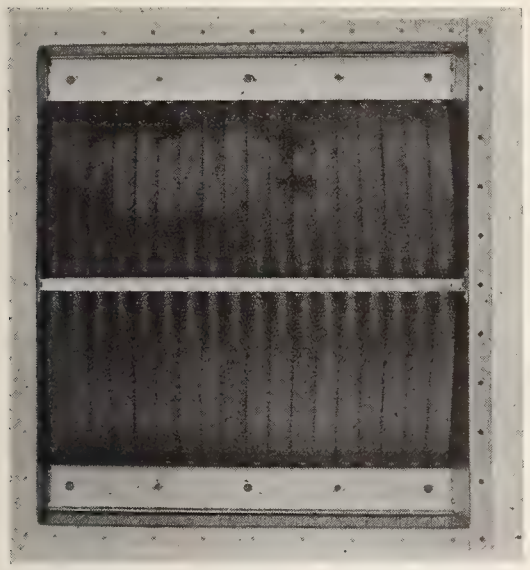
FLASHER EQUIPMENT

● Flashers and associated equipment form the subject of a bulletin just issued by the Reynolds Electric Company, whose Reco lighting accessories is well known in the theatre equipment market. In a four-page folder are described and illustrated, with ordering instructions, seven types of flashers for various applications, and such accessories as cords, vibrating motors and hook-ups.

UNIT HEATER

● A unit heater, which is said to be adaptable to theatre auditoriums, has been brought out by the Griscom-Russell Company under the name of K-Fin Bentube Heater. The name is derived from the curved characteristic of the steam tubes, in contradistinction to the usual straight tube employed in unit heaters of similar type.

The curved design of the K-Fin Bentube tubing has been adopted so that expansion due to increase in temperature puts no strain on the two headers at the ends of the bank of tubes. The curvature is merely increased by the rise in temperature.



Bentube unit heater.

In an attempt to increase the heating efficiency of the heater, the external surface of the tube has been extended by the use of helical fins on the outside of each tube.

The heaters are light enough in weight to be installed in any convenient location without extra structural support. They are designed for application to general ventilating systems which incorporate cooling as well as heating functions.

NEW TUBE CATALOG

● A catalog which also offers considerable scientific information concerning vacuum tubes in general, has been issued by the General Scientific Corporation on its line of Lumotron tubes. Types of tubes for every purpose are described and illustrated, while there are explanations and diagrams of the methods to be followed in their application. Other material is indicated by such chapter headings as "Relation of Load Resistor and Grid Leak to Output Levels," "Luminous Intensity or Light Flux," "Color Sensitivity," "Cell Life" and so on.

The booklet is well printed on paper of substantial weight, and contains 38 pages, bound in looseleaf fashion.

SAFETY EQUIPMENT

● New type safety equipment for projectors has been developed by the Pyrene Manufacturing Company, combining the use of this manufacturer's well known chemical extinguisher and an electric cut-off.

The device consists of an aluminum alloy frame or holder that is attached to the upper magazine, a special brass nickel-plated one-quart container to hold the extinguishing fluid, a CO_2 (carbon dioxide) gas cartridge with holder and firing mechanism and electric switch-box.

The frame is designed to be fastened to the upper magazine and the existing screw holes on the magazine are utilized for this purpose. Where the present screws are not long enough, replacement screws are furnished by the manufacturer. Into the frame is fitted a special Pyrene container with quick opening top and a glass inspection sight. Running from the extinguisher container to a master head is a system of ¼ foot copper tubing. From the master head the tubing continues around the upper magazine to the valve or roller holder and aperture head and to the lower magazine. Nickeled brass cleats hold this tubing in place. At each of these points is placed a spray nozzle designed to direct the extinguishing fluid into these parts in an efficient spray.

The shut-off action to the motor is controlled by relaying a special switch between the motor and projector.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● New officers of the Chicago Cinema Equipment Company have been chosen following reorganization prompted by acquisition of the Gallagher Orchestra Equipment Company. The company continues the use of its established name and will continue to manufacture and develop projection, stage lighting and orchestra equipment and accessories. Executives just named are: President, Walter W. Pitann; vice-president, Alexander M. Berg; secretary, Arthur Pitann; sales manager, Roy P. Bedore; advertising manager, Milton B. Kanter; and chief engineer, Alexander I. Newman.

4. What work he did.

5. When he went to lunch, etc.

Get from the individual exactly and in detail what he did. This should be repeated every day with each employee. This should be carried on for one month. Not many will follow this advice, but make an effort to do it for at least seven consecutive days.

While tabulating this data, assure yourself by means at your disposal that the details given you by each employee have really been carried through as they have been given to you. You may have some difficulty with certain personalities in obtaining such detailed data due to their belief that such information should not be expected of them. In cases of that kind you will have to observe, ask questions and compile it as best you can.

In the smaller theatre where the employees are few this does not require a great deal of time each day, and the manager, who may also be the owner, can easily handle it. In larger theatres it requires a great amount of time. However, with a large staff this can be overcome by delegating a member of the staff to compile it, or by a system of daily questionnaires. In all cases some steps must be taken to verify the data turned in, for the very employee that should be checked does not hesitate to falsify the records.

WHAT DATA WILL SHOW

AFTER A CAREFUL examination of this information for one week you will be astounded at the ratio between the work actually accomplished, and the hours spent in the theatre by each employee. The explanation for this is that in small and medium-sized theatres each employee reports verbally to the manager for direction and supervision. In many instances this report takes the form of a "Good Morning," which is the extent of the daily contact until something goes wrong. The split shifts of working periods also increase the difficulties of proper supervision and emphasize the need of furnishing each employee with daily work schedules.

Again, the examination of this data will disclose certain duties or functions performed too frequently, and many very necessary items that were not attended to at all during that week. This will show whether the manager has failed to allocate responsibility, duties and supervision in a proper manner.

TWO BASIC CLASSES OF DUTIES

NOW TAKING all of the duties or functions performed by all your employees you should classify them under these headings:

1. Those actually necessary in putting on your show.

2. Those duties of more or less recurring nature that do not directly affect the performance.

As you draw up this classification estimate the approximate number of hours spent by each employee that week on each classification.

This brings us to the first real division in the structure of your organization, and it begins to indicate the strength or weakness therein.

Those functions executed directly in connection with the show or performance must undoubtedly remain under the direct supervision of the manager; whereas, those functions performed of more or less routine nature and not directly part of the performance should be under the supervision and direction of some employee appointed by the manager.

This latter person might be called an assistant manager, or could be a very capable, matured usher or doorman—even, possibly, your engineer, or the man who attends to your boiler and ventilating fans, or perhaps it will be your chief janitor, depending on the executive ability discovered. In any case he should be an individual who will welcome the responsibility and enjoy that phase of work about theatres; also, he should be a person who is methodical and has a mind for detail. When you as manager have this man properly trained you will find this service indispensable. The proper selection and training of this man is part of a manager's job.

Proceed now to study your particular group pertaining to the performance and go a step farther by classifying them as: stage, projection, music, advertising, service and cashiers.

From this classification make this further grouping: you, as manager, retaining the stage, projection, music and possibly advertising (which latter you probably handle yourself); then designate, for instance, an usher to be responsible for service and cashiers.

This method of approaching the plan of organization creates no limitations because of size of theatre or number of people employed. The fewer the employees the less laborious is the detail involved. During all of this basic work we are gradually and almost without effort shaping the structure of the organization, establishing lines of authority, placing responsibility and creating a division of labor. These are the first four factors in good organization.

DUTIES CONNECTED WITH MAINTENANCE

THE GROUP of functions which we have decided as not having a direct bearing on the performance has been placed under a working assistant to the manager. It is in this position that you should make every effort to have a person mechanically or technically inclined. It is this assistant to the manager who should begin actually to list every routine job in the theatre that must be done, and he must establish how frequently the job must be done. His list of items to be done nightly or daily (once in every 24 hours) should read, in part, something like this:

		Hours
Mopping lobby floor	1 man	2
Polishing all brass	1 man	1½
Clean toilet main floor including fixtures, etc.	1 woman	½
Vacuum all carpet main floor	1 man	3
Sweeping under seats and removing trash	1 woman	4
Cleaning box office	1 woman	½
Cleaning manager's office	1 woman	1

and so on to include every duty that must be done, the items indicated to be taken from the original cards.

After this classification list those items that should be taken care of weekly. This list might partly include such items is:

		Hours
Vacuum clean all upholstered furniture	1 woman	6
Dust all picture frames	1 woman	2
Furniture polish all furniture	1 woman	3

After this all items to be done monthly, such as:

		Hours
Dust down walls	1 man	5
Wash or clean lighting fixtures	1 man	15
Vacuum clean draperies, etc.	1 man	20

With these schedules completed, draw up definite schedules for each employee, listing carefully the work which they are expected to accomplish. These work schedules are for six- or seven-day weeks, depending upon an established policy. In building up such work schedules, allocate the work so that all the daily work is taken care of, with one-seventh of the weekly schedule included, and one-thirtieth of the monthly work included each day. If the cleaners work, say, eight hours, then five and one-half hours each day or night would be devoted to the daily work, one and one-half hours to the weekly work, and one hour to the monthly work. Or if the theatre is large, have certain workers concentrate on daily work, another group on weekly work, and one or two on monthly work. With such a plan you know positively that at the end of each month every item which you have on your list has been taken care of.

The same system may be used in covering all mechanical and electrical routine work—for instance, lubricating fans, pumps and motors; the changing of oil in motors and pumps; the cleaning of switchboards; the checking of flashers, fuse boxes and light loads.

WORKING OUT WORK SCHEDULES

IN WORKING out such schedules practically, you should start with heavy schedules, possibly slightly more work listed than you actually expect to have completed in the allotted time. Before cutting these schedules or adding more help, try every intelligent means to live up to those work schedules. Try switching your employees from one schedule to another. Many times you will find one especially good with a vacuum cleaner, another better fitted to mopping, while another will polish brass or clean glass with greater facility.

Many times minutes can be saved by relocating the spots where equipment, such as mops, pails, brooms, etc., are stored between work periods. Give each employee his own tools and hold him responsible for them. Make every effort to establish your schedules so as to have one class (schedule) of work be rated on a higher wage scale than another. This creates an incentive to efficiency by holding out the possibility of a small advance, and also is a means of exacting a degree of discipline, for such an arrangement is an argument for promotion or demotion. Just such methods have an effect of incalculable value.

The idea of establishing your organization on a plan which provides definite paths of progress, especially for non-union employees, is excellent. It is discouraging for an individual to work along day after day without being able to see what he is working toward.

With these last considerations we have established the means of discipline and of a system. These are the fifth and sixth factors of organization.

ACCOUNTING, STATISTICS AND TEAM PLAY

DISCUSSING the seventh and eighth factors involved in your theatre organization needs little time. As managers you have your accounting system prescribed and it is probably sufficient; the owner-manager can and will establish his own.

Statistics will not be touched on at all here since it has a certain special character and therefore a complete discussion of this factor will be given later, with an explanation of some very helpful methods.

Team play, the ninth factor in organization, is always important in any endeavor where two or more persons are working towards a common objective. This factor has got to be injected into the organization by the manager. There is no short cut to building up this characteristic. The degree to which the manager succeeds in instilling team play into his organization will establish his capacity as an executive and a leader.

Effort has been made to be sufficiently specific in this discussion about organization to enable you to take means suggested and use them immediately. Organization is a carefully cultivated growth, not a weed that just grows. It does take intelligent effort and a lot of it to develop a smoothly working organization, and the man that can do it must be tenacious, persevering and able to train men and acquire their loyal co-operation.

The example which you set as manager of a theatre will make or break your efforts as an organizer.

To create and run an organization you must be organized yourself—must practice what you preach and lead the way.

[In the July 29th issue of BETTER THEATRES, Mr. Knight will discuss definite steps in efficient maintenance, with an analysis of labor and material costs which should help in checking estimates on maintenance jobs.] shading and distribution of the light will usually overcome this serious difficulty.

SPECIAL LIGHTING

The "classic" theatres using fixtures, and the "atmospheric" houses are so definitely of a certain type that the problem is chiefly to restore them to their original beauty and cleanliness.

In general, a good cleaning and overhauling of the fixtures of these two types of houses will do much to add to the illumination and the effect. In the case of atmospheric houses, the blue sky has often been lighted only at the edges, and even here spottiness is often noticeable. The addition of a number of floodlights illuminating the central sky area adds greatly to the effect, and both baffling or lamp positioning may help the spottiness. Fixtures should be baffled so they do not spill on the blue ceiling, producing a muddy effect.

With hanging fixtures, such as indirect bowls, a careful selection of the proper lamps for the two or three-color circuits will assure better results. In the case of crystal fixtures, clear non-diffusing lamps are often desirable. Crystals should be kept clean and sparkling by cleaning with alcohol.

In some cases a change of lamp type may give a better effect and at a lessened operating cost.

COVE LIGHTING

Many of the recently built theatres use indirect lighting from coves. These are usually arranged for operation on three circuits. Some of them have bare lamps in the coves, although the newer houses use individual reflectors with cover glasses.

Bare-lamp coves have many disadvantages. Because the light is directed almost equally in all directions from a bare lamp, the edge of the cove is lighted and the center is dark. Colored lamps are troublesome at best, because there are always some that are not so uniform as others, causing spottiness. And dirt constantly collecting around the lamps decreases the light output so that many of these coves are very inefficient.

Cleaning of the cove surfaces around the lamps and the use of selected natural-colored lamps will improve results. (See Figure 5.) The best solution here is to use color hoods, which screw into dust-tight holders. (See Figure 6.) Lamps or hoods should be dusted periodically, because dust tends to give the appearance of a washed-out effect.

Individual reflectors for coves have the advantages of directing the light so that the entire cove surface is lighted, and of utilizing the light that is ordinarily lost in back of the lamps. They are not so susceptible to dust collection because they do not employ the plaster surface back of the lamps as a reflector. They are easier to clean and to keep clean—a simple wiping of the glass cover is all that is required. One selection of colored glass cover plates, or roundels, is all that is necessary to insure uniformity of color, and thereafter the less expensive standard lamps are used.

In almost any cove, and in remote fixtures, too, a regular maintenance schedule —preferably with a periodic group replacement of all lamps—effects a saving.

SEASONAL EFFECTS

In taking full advantage of the flexibility of light, for seasonal effects and as atmosphere for a certain picture, etc., a rearrangement of the lamps in the various circuits will often be found desirable. Usually the circuits are laid out with one all blue, one all red, and one a tone of amber. These are sometimes flat and uninteresting because of the lack of contrasts to heighten the color effects and to give pleasing harmonies. A study of the various parts of the auditorium will reveal locations where green may be used to advantage and where lamps may be changed so that a small amount of amber will appear with the blue, red with the blue-green, blue and red with the amber, etc. By a few small changes, the entire appearance of the theatre may be altered and made more interesting and pleasing. (Refer to "Color in the Lighting of Theatres," May 6, 1933 BETTER THEATRES, page, 10.)

With the new arrangement, the three-color circuits can be used more often. More light may be used during comedy pictures, lighting effects may be used for short subjects, and musical selections and lights may be played during breaks in the program so that people may readily find seats or leave the auditorium with minimum confusion.

THE DRIVE-IN THEATRE
A Motor Age Experiment

1 x 6-inch timber cross-bracing. The outside facing of the screen housing, as well as of the flanking walls, is of structural asbestos lumber having the appearance of limestone blocks. Foundation footings, which number 45, are of poured concrete. The only steel employed is in the proscenium arch truss and in channels for splice plates between the uprights (6 x 6-inch posts), to anchor them in the foundation footings and to the truss. [See cross-section on page 17.]

The screen, which measures 40 x 30 feet, sets in a recess having splayed walls of masonite board, which is painted a flat (non-reflecting) black. The ceiling is similarly treated, but is suspended by means of a block-and-fall arrangement so that it can be removed if the management wishes to use drops for stage productions. The platform has a rubberoid surface.

The projection house, which is of construction similar to that of the screen housing, measures 15 x 25 feet, located (as previously noted) at the first ramp, 133 feet from the screen platform. So that its vision be not obstructed, the floor is sunk 2½ feet below grade, while the roof is only 7 feet above, giving the projection quarters a height of 9½ feet. Thus the projection angle is upward, at an angle of 6°. The bottom of the screen is 12 feet above the ground; its top, 42 feet above.

Ramps are constructed of concrete retaining walls, and paved with gravel and cinders, well rolled and oiled. (The oil serves to discourage mosquitoes as well as reduce dust.)

PROJECTION

STRUCTURAL facilities for projection have been noted. The equipment consists in two Simplex projectors, the necessary accessories, and RCA Victor "high fidelity" sound system. The latter had to be especially adapted to the conditions of outdoor reception at unusual distances.

The analysis of the problems included a study of the number and location of loudspeakers to give not only a uniform distribution or coverage of sound over the entire parking area, but the proper illusion of sound as coming from the screen; also, a study of the amount of power or size of equipment required to give an adequate loudness of sound within the automobiles, and to override the general noise level due to nearby auto traffic and wind. To insure naturalness of both speech and music, consideration of frequency characteristics, of course, entered in the choice of both loudspeakers and amplifiers.

Full low-frequency response for giving richness to music is doubly important in outdoor installations because the reverberation which usually builds up the low frequency response of indoor installations is entirely absent outdoors. For this reason and because of its narrow distribution angle (33° arc) the directional baffle loudspeaker was chosen for the Drive-In theatre.

In the horizontal plane the parking area, when viewed from the screen, subtends a 90° arc; hence three loudspeakers are required to give full sound coverage in the horizontal plane. In the vertical plane the parking area, when viewed from the screen at a point two-thirds the height of the screen, subtends an arc which is well within the distribution angle limits of the loudspeaker. The three loudspeakers are located at a height two-thirds up the screen for the purpose of creating the best illusion. They are mounted side by side with loudspeaker axes spread apart 30° in the horizontal plane and tilted down 10° in the vertical plane.

The intensity of sound from a loudspeaker is greatest along its axis, and the intensity diminishes for points removed from the axis; that is, for increasing azimuths. In the horizontal plane a uniform distribution of sound is obtained from the three loudspeakers, because in passing across the field of sound from one loudspeaker axis to the next, the increasing intensity of the one compensates for the decreasing intensity of the other. In the vertical plane, a fairly uniform distribution of sound is obtained because the increasing intensity due to decreasing the distance from the loudspeaker compensates for the diminishing intensity due to the increasing azimuths.

The narrow distribution angle of the directional baffle loudspeaker is of particular benefit in outdoor installations in reducing the amount of power lost by radiation into the open air overhead.

Knowing the distribution characteristics and efficiency of a loudspeaker, and the sound pressure or acoustic power desired at any point in the sound field, determined the electrical power required at the input of the loudspeaker. Calculations reveal that the power output or size of equipment varies directly with the area or number of seats to be covered. Such calculations showed that for normal conditions of noise, a power output (40 watts) was ample for covering the listening area in the Drive-In theatre. Three directional baffle loudspeakers were determined to be adequate for handling the 40-watt output without distortion.

ILLUMINATION

LIGHTING is by means of floods. The entrance driveway from the highway to the parking area is illuminated by projectors located on tall ornamental poles. The automobile lights are extinguished upon entering. At each inner corner of the screen house roof is a projector to flood the parking area between divisions of the program and at the end of a performance.

The theatre sign is painted on the highway side of the screen house and is illuminated. Other illuminated signs consist in two announcing coming attractions, located at the entrance.

POLICY

THE DRIVE-IN theatre is operating on a straight picture policy, programs being made up of features, topicals and comedy shorts. Whenever possible, the feature is shortened to permit a variety of shorts to be included in a performance of two hours. Two shows are presented nightly, the first at 8:45, the second at 10:45. Programs are changed twice weekly.

Admission prices are 25c for each car, and 25c per person up to three. For more than three patrons per car, the charge remains $1.

some cities a permit would be granted to have this terrazzo not only in the outer lobby but also on the sidewalk directly in front of the entrance. When this is done in several colors it makes a striking improvement. An ordinary sidewalk costs from 20c to 25c per foot, so this additional cost for a colorful material is not a very great charge.

Entrance doors are next approached by the patron. An old door can be given an entirely new appearance by sand-blasting a design on the old glass; or if the doors are of wood, by applying the design with decorative materials, either paint or metals. Glass in the doors can be sand-blasted as shown in Figure 10 for $6 per door. The wood frame of the door can be sandpapered and given a high lustre Duco finish for about $3 each.

[In the July 29th issue Mr. Lee will discuss economical methods of achieving immediate improvement in the interior of the theatre, with specific information on materials and costs.—The Editor.]

WARNER BROS.' YEAR-BOOK IS PRINTED ON CELLULOID

You can read it today at any Warner Bros. Exchange!

Last year Warner Bros. smashed precedent with the first advance trade showing of new-season product. You came — you saw — you bought solely on the basis of the production quality those first great 1932-'33 shows demonstrated.

We promised you nothing then about later releases . . . But we gave you everything. We didn't even mention "42nd Street" or "Frisco Jenny," or "Working Man" or "I Am A Fugitive" or "Little Giant" or Cagney . . . You got these and many other great properties without a syllable of obligation on our part.

So now again we invite you to give Warner product an eyewitness test. Come to your exchange and see the last of the 1932-'33 pictures that you bought on FAITH IN WARNER BROS. See "CAPTURED!"— see "GOODBYE AGAIN"—see "MARY STEVENS, M. D."—see "VOLTAIRE" and "NARROW CORNER" and "MAYOR OF HELL." See for the first time in your experience a summer line-up without a let-up . . . See whether your faith in Warner Bros. was justified!

Then let that decision guide you when it's time to buy for next year. Throw out all the reams of praise others have showered on Warner Bros. for reviving theatre prosperity. Discard the judgments of hundreds of exhibitors and trade observers as to Warner Bros.' "leadership" and "highest consistent quality." BE YOUR OWN JUDGE!

If these pictures convince you that we have dealt fairly with you this year, you will probably want to deal with Warner Bros. next year.

If you are impressed by the way we are finishing this season, you can judge for yourself how we will start the next.

For we unhesitatingly submit these final 1932-'33 releases as samples of the product we will give you in 1933-'34. We don't promise you that on some arbitrary date on the calendar there will be a sudden magical step-up in our production quality. We honestly don't believe we need a shot in the arm or a new lease on life.

We've been in there trying every minute on every production, and we're going to keep on trying to make every new picture just a little better than the last.

Our pictures for next year won't be much better than the ones we have to show you now . . . But we do promise you they'll be just as good. For Leadership is the sharpest spur to human effort . . . And next year's Warner Bros. Pictures will be produced by 4,000 human beings who are grimly determined to retain this title . . .

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 112, No. 2 — July 8, 1933

AS MR. KUYKENDALL REMARKS

PRESENTATIONS of the complete texts of tentative drafts of the codes of practise under consideration for the industry, in compliance with the Industrial Recovery Act, in the columns of Motion Picture Herald and Motion Picture Daily, which were the subject of some agitation on the part of persons given to policies of secrecy, have proved and are proving of obvious service in addition to their news value.

Interesting comment is made by Mr. Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who at first objected but now remarks in a letter: ". . . since getting the reaction from exhibitor units from all over the country, I am convinced it was helpful in getting immediate response and suggestions from exhibitors everywhere."

Code making is the business of the whole industry for the whole industry. Secrecy produces more plots than plans. The purpose of the code is to prevent the plots and evolve plans for the common good.

MAKING HASTE SLOWLY

CERTAINLY this virile young industry of ours cannot be charged with any headlong pursuit of radical new notions. What with this being a warm, leisurely minded day in July, and being reminded a bit by a letter from Mr. R. B. Wilby of Atlanta, we prowled out into the cool long hall of Quigley Publications lined with bound volumes from Then to Now and pulled down Motion Picture News for August 30, 1924, dealing at great length with the big journalistic gesture of that year: "The Distribution Plan Contest."

It was that issue which announced and presented the winning plan, by Mr. Walter W. Irwin, then considerably prominent in the world of the motion picture, being in 1915 the organizer of Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay and subsequently a vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It was a plan of unified distribution promising many economies.

Reading the summary of the forty-four submitted plans, as written by Mr. William A. Johnston, then editor, we find interesting in the light of today, that:

Twenty-seven recommended consolidated physical handling of films and accessories.

Ten recommended classification of theatres and pictures.

Ten recommended percentage playing.

Eight recommended committee-control—to fix rentals, play dates and production supply, etc.

Four recommended consolidated selling.

Two offered plans for saving prints.

It is interesting to remember now that in sequel to this award to Mr. Irwin, he was called upon to go considerably further and thrashed his proposals into working form with the American Express Company, presenting finally a plan at a special session of the members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. The plan was seriously considered and finally dismissed—for the most interesting reason that it made distribution "too neutral," and gave what the meeting called "fly-by-nights" too ready an access to the market. Nine years ago the possession of a great ponderous exchange system was still considered an important asset. Which whimsically reminds us that once upon a time, 'way back in 1896, a motion picture company failed largely because its film cement would not stick.

Thus haltingly do we travel along the road toward that ultimate phase of evolution when the chief business of the motion picture business will be the making and exhibition of motion pictures. Everything has been tried from the days of the patents wars onward, from possession of the tools to possession of the exchanges and the avenue to the retail market, and lastly to the possession, through the chains, of the retail market itself. Now that all that has been tried, perhaps the next step is to make movies—the idea that started the industry.

SELECTING JOHN C. FLINN

THE selection of John C. Flinn as the nominating committee's candidate for president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers is a pleasantly popular choice. It is to be recalled that Mr. Flinn was one of the founders of the organization, when it became the successor to the publicity committee of the long forgotten Motion Picture Board of Trade. Meanwhile Mr. Flinn brings the breadth of view of experience as a top rank executive in production and distribution, as well as exhibition and exploitation including some of the screen's most significant product—"The Covered Wagon," for instance.

BUILDING FOR TOMORROW

COLONEL G. T. Woodlaw, of Portland, Ore., who for some thirty years past has owned and operated the famous Circle Theatre, really remembers, not just one or two old friends who have helped to pay the overhead for many years past, but actual hundreds of his one-time regular patrons. Through no fault of their own they are now "off the payroll," and this pioneer-exhibitor makes it a practice to have their names put on a special list to which, once or twice a month, are sent both free tickets and programs listing coming attractions. This practice builds further goodwill for the house, and as the recipients spread the news about many cash customers are interested.

FOOTLIGHTS AND KLIEG LIGHTS

"And God knows there's plenty of room for writers, good ones, in Hollywood." Thus one day last week did famed actor Leslie Howard, en route to England from New York, speak his little piece after a lengthy Coast sojourn. Shortly he will commence writing a play: "I'll have had enough pictures to last me for quite a while. It's drudgery, though we can't complain as long as the drudgery is pretty profitable." Out of long stage, happy screen experience came: "Some day, perhaps, when pictures have grown up a little more, and some good original writers get to Hollywood, and they stop adapting plays, an actor will have a real opportunity out there." No caustic critic of the screen, no disappointed stabber at the film, able actor Howard sees the stage, screen far apart, has inbred the love of footlights, no great passion for klieg lights. . . .

A NEW FORCE

Into his own, with something of a splash, is coming the motion picture actor, implying masculine and feminine of the breed, as indicated by the actions and reactions of a representative group, gathered last Wednesday in Hollywood to discuss ratification of the new constitution, by-laws of the screen's Academy. The talk veered, under direction, from by-laws to salaries, the actor's position and his future. Determined are these performers to organize, group themselves, thus place themselves in a position where they may readily wield that weapon of weapons, the power of collective bargaining. If the Academy will get them what they firmly believe they are entitled to, they will go with the Academy, is the apparent sense of the group. If the Academy cannot so do, the performers will set about to get it themselves, for themselves, by themselves. A new force, yet to be reckoned with, apparently. . . .

STAR EXTINGUISHED

Like many another famed name of the screen, that of Roscoe Conkling "Fatty" Arbuckle, known to millions the world over, was meteor-like in its climb to the firmament of stardom through vaudeville, Mack Sennett, Famous Players. Fame, money came to the rotund comedian, who, with wide trousers, a gift for pantomimic performance and unerring aim with custard pies, made people laugh, producers pay. Then, with dramatic suddenness, again as does the meteor, "Fatty's" star descended, crashed into the earth, when, following a hectic 1921 party in his hotel suite, one Virginia Rappe, actress, died. Three times was "Fatty" tried for manslaughter, finally acquitted. For better than 10 years was the Arbuckle star dim, obscure. To direction, under an alias, did Arbuckle turn for sustenance in recent years, hoping always that the star might relight. Last year, for Warner, the once great "Fatty" made a few short subjects, successfully, this year made five. Happy, again rotundly laughing, "Fatty" worked at the New York studio Wednesday, finished a short comedy, celebrated an anniversary with his third wife. In the small hours of Thursday morning he went to his room, to bed, there died, a victim of angina pectoris, the star, on the verge of probable relighting, now finally, completely extinguished. . . .

CALLING CARD

Unique, effective, was the publicity obtained by the Fox theatre in Tucson, Arizona, of Fox West Coast Theatres Circuit, as a result of a recent "most popular boy and girl" contest sponsored at the local house by J. P. H. Chandler. Each winner was awarded a vacation at a New England camp. Each marched forth, armed with a unique greeting card for the governor and mayor of each state and city through which the winner passed. The card: a large sheet of copper, no thicker than paper, on which was printed greetings to sundry executives; the Fox theatre, Fox West Coast prominently noted. Pleased and proud was Thomas D. Soriero, Fox Arizona division manager, at the coup, done minus cost to the theatre. . . .

DEATH, DEBTS

When death last July came to the great impresario, glorifier of the American girl, Florenz "Flo" Ziegfeld, general uninformed, hence believed accurate opinion had his estate of grandiloquent proportions. With the filing last week of the transfer tax appraisal on the estate of Daniel C. Curry, Mr. Ziegfeld's manager, who died 17 days before his "boss," it was revealed, startlingly, that not only was "Flo" insolvent at the time of his death, but was in debt perhaps to the extent of $1,000,000. Once more comes proof of a commonplace, often in the theatre: "easy come—easy go." . . .

PROXY'S STRENGTH

With that interesting instrumentality of modern big business, the proxy, apparently well in hand to permit the approval by stockholders of its important refinancing plan, Fox Film was last weekend prepared to present its plan to stockholders. Until July 21-22, however, was the vital stockholder session postponed by sudden order of Supreme Court Justice Bernard L. Shientag. From Stockholder James M. Cleary came the request for such action, on the ground that the notices of the meeting were unfair, gave insufficient information. The court agreed, hence postponement. Said to be already on hand are proxies ample to insure adoption. . . .

MUSIC'S RETURN

To Hollywood musicians, vaudeville performers has come good news in the form of increased utilization by downtown and neighborhood theatres of the stage show, stage band as an adjunct to the picture attraction. Noticeable, is termed the increase in a field which, since the advent of the talking technique, has suffered serious lapse. With Fox West Coast and Warner, Hollywood's Musicians' Mutual Protective Association has concluded a deal, involving wage cuts, but paving the way for increased employment. . . .

SELLING SPACE

Radio, electric refrigerator, automobiles, permanent waves, hotels, rug cleaning, swimming pools, restaurants, all are salable merchandise, and must be advertised. Not altogether asleep are the promoters of Radio City's two houses, Roxy, Music Hall. Into their weekly publication, Radio City News, sold to patrons of the theatres in the lobbies, they have contrived to throw miscellaneous, perhaps interesting yarns on material designed to intrigue the patron. Also, however, is a generous portion of general advertising. Of a recent issue, running 16 pages, eight were paid advertising space. The theatre, then, has its occasionally profitable sidelines. . . .

DOUBLE FEATURING MAY BE ENDED WITH OPENING OF THE NEW SEASON

Twin Billing Barred in Tentative Codes of Exhibitors and Large Distributors; Independents Drop Clause, Question Open

[Details of the double feature situation, arranged by cities, will be found on page 21.]

The showing of two motion pictures on a single program, long a controversial subject, may be stopped as a nationwide practice beginning with the new 1933-34 season. Some theatre owners and several large distributors are seeking to put a permanent end to double-featuring. The agitation against this practice, which has made definite progress over a period of two years, is fast reaching a climax, though there is still considerable opposition to the single feature program.

Defense of double featuring has come chiefly from independent producers and distributors who thus have been able to book much of their product in larger theatres. To offset this situation many of them are reported to be preparing to enhance the quality of their pictures on a large scale to merit top billing in key cities.

Barred in Both Codes

Nationwide banning of double bills virtually will be a certainty beginning in the autumn if the industry adopts the double feature clauses in the codes now being written by distribution and exhibition factors for incorporation in the entire industry code under the National Recovery Act.

In the tentative code for exhibition, drawn up two weeks ago by major distributor and exhibitor representatives, there appeared two clauses dealing with the double feature situation. The first is as follows:

No exhibitor shall (except in territories where under the provisions of an adopted maximum clearance and zoning schedule double features are expressly permitted) exhibit two or more feature pictures on the same program.

The second clause urged that distributors refuse to permit the exhibition of their pictures on double feature programs in towns or communities where a majority of the exhibitors are opposed to the practice.

Specifically, these two clauses throw the matter into the hands of the exhibitors themselves and, as is the case with the adoption of a final code of fair competition under the Recovery Act, the majority, or 75 per cent of an industry, will rule.

Large distributors are opposed to the double bill because it automatically reduces their rentals, for when the exhibitor plays two feature pictures on the same program he must of necessity pay a lower rental for each of the two than he would for one.

Independents Drop Ban Proposal

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, composed of independent producers and distributors and headed by P. S. Harrison, last week drew up its own code of production, distribution and exhibition. Among the 38 "unfair industry practices" listed was the double feature, and a clause pertaining to it urged its immediate abolition. On Friday, however, the clause was stricken from the code on the theory that the organization should not interfere with theatre policies "which must be exclusively decided by exhibitors." It was declared that the desire of major companies to eliminate double features is inspired by the hope of obtaining more playing time for their short subjects.

Independent distribution executives, who have conferred with major company representatives at the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America over the drawing up of an industry code, are still formulating proposals, for inclusion in the final draft, which will be satisfactory to all concerned. They also are attempting to iron out disagreements over certain phases of the original tentative drafts, particularly the two clauses mentioned in the foregoing, and they are said to be in favor of a code which either ignores completely the situation, or leaves it to be decided by public patronage.

Throughout the Middlewest a feeling of optimism is said to prevail among salesmen in the field and the consensus is that with the continual decline of double bills the booking of short subjects is on the increase. At the Fox convention in Atlantic City last week, W. J. Kupper, Fox Western sales manager, pointed out that if the clause banning double-featuring is ultimately adopted an immediate improvement in the short subject field will develop. In urging Fox salesmen selling Educational product to boost short subjects, he indicated by figures his conviction that if the proper stimulus is placed behind shorts the revenue coming from them could easily be between 30 and 40 per cent of the gross rolled up by feature sales.

MGM Against Duals

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's sales policy for the new season is definitely set against double billing, it was announced in Kansas City last week at a convention session.

Throughout the nation the sentiment is preponderantly against double features. In some sections, however, the practice has become firmly entrenched. In New England, particularly around Boston and Providence, the public demands "all it can get for its money." Programs running four hours and more are not uncommon in that section and exhibitors say they are helpless in the face of the public demand.

On the other hand, this week sees the end of dual bills in Milwaukee county in Wisconsin, with approximately 60 theatres lined up against the practice. Chicago, once one of the most flagrant "offenders" in twin bills, has now operated successfully for over a year without resorting to the double feature to stimulate trade.

The opinions of many independent producers and distributors have been asked, and while most of them are in favor of continuance of the dual policy, there is a gradual turning away from it.

M. H. Hoffman, president of Allied Pictures and the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association, declared that regardless of whether double bills are good or bad, the public has become accustomed to them. "Patrons are shopping and are patronizing theatres where they get the most for their money," he said. "The double bill has advantages in that it permits the exhibitor to arrange programs with a diversified appeal. Naturally the producer-controlled theatre favors single bills featuring their own product."

Trem Carr Favors Doubles

Decrease of double bills means fewer pictures and consequently fewer sales for the independent, according to Trem Carr, vice-president in charge of Monogram production. "For this reason the independent producer has to make a better grade product in order to compete on equitable footing," he said.

Ken Goldsmith, head of Goldsmith Productions, admonished the independent exhibitor not to let the single bill trend blind him to the fact that this is the last move of the producer-controlled circuits "in their fight for life."

Speaking more or less from the "opposite side of the fence," Nat Levine, president of Mascot Pictures, said, "The gradual elimination of the double bill policy, which is forcing exhibitors to use one good picture, is doing much to stimulate public interest in motion pictures. It is obvious that the independent producer, in order to get business, must make better pictures."

W. Ray Johnston, Monogram president, said recently, "Elimination of double features will undoubtedly harm a great many independents, but Monogram is not particularly concerned because of our new policy which calls for Class 'A' pictures."

H. M. Richey, president of the Allied of Michigan, representing a large number of independent theatre men, said his organization proposed to ban double features and to enforce the ban by asking protection for first-runs over houses offering double bills.

Jack Bellman, independent distributor of New York, while attending the NAMPI conference Wednesday night, said regarding double features:

"I suggest that the clause be eliminated and that the matter of using two features or more should be left to the discretion of the exhibitor."

P. S. Harrison offered as an alternative a clause which would make a violation any decision by distributors to refuse through exhibition contract or otherwise to sell direct to theatres showing double bills.

Paramount Productions' $1,000,000 Deficit Cleared

A deficit of slightly more than $1,000,000 for Paramount Productions, Inc., has been wiped out since January 28, the date on which Paramount Publix, parent corporation, went into receivership. A substantial profit also has been established since that time, Ralph A. Kohn, Paramount treasurer, told a creditors' meeting before Referee Harry K. Davis Wednesday.

ERPI PARTS CLAUSE IS SUSPENDED BY RULING

Temporary Injunction Is Granted Stanley Co., General Talking Pictures and Duovac Radio Tube, in Long Court Battle

Another round in the long-drawn-out court difficulties between the Warners and Western Electric was concluded late last week when Judge John P. Nields, in U. S. district court, Wilmington, granted petitions for a temporary injunction sought by Stanley Company of America (Warner circuit subsidiary); General Talking Pictures (Schlesinger interests), and Duovac Radio Tube, against American Telephone and Telegraph and its two subsidiaries, Western Electric and Electrical Research.

The injunctions temporarily will restrain the defendants from enforcing tying contracts compelling exhibitors to obtain exclusively from them all repair and replacement parts for the Erpi theatre sound reproduction system.

Removes Risk of Violation

In effect, the decision removes temporarily, until a final decision in the suit is rendered, any risk of violation of contract that exhibitors previously were held to be incurring when they bought tubes and parts for replacement in the Erpi equipment in the open market. This practice has been pursued in many sections of the exhibition field. Thus far, however, no legal action has been brought by the Erpi interests against any of its theatre licensees who have gone into the open market for supplies. Meanwhile, a definite decision on a permanent injunction still rests with the Wilmington court and will follow a trial of the suit in that branch of the federal court.

An Erpi spokesman said last week that, despite reports, the temporary decision does not in any way affect servicing charges for its theatre equipment. The company later said officially that "the opinion filed does not indicate whether the temporary decree will be entered absolutely or on bond or on other conditions."

Temporary Injunction Ordered

Judge Nields' opinion in part, follows:

Motions for preliminary injunctions are made on behalf of the plaintiffs in three equity suits brought under section 16 of the Clayton Act to restrain defendants from alleged violation of section 3 of that act and of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

"It is therefore submitted that an injunction pendente lite should issue herein in all three cases enjoining and restraining the defendants from enforcing directly or indirectly the restrictive clauses of the so-called leasing or reproducing equipments, whereby the exhibitors are required to obtain exclusively from Electrical Research Products all repair and replacement parts for said equipments and to permit Products to inspect the same, and charge the exhibitors therefore, under the guise of rendering service thereto. In addition, in the suit of Duovac Company an injunction should issue pendente lite enjoining and restraining the defendants from directly or indirectly enforcing any of the provisions of the producing license agreements whereby the producing licensees of Erpi are required to obtain exclusively from Erpi repair and replacement parts for producing apparatus."

The motions deal with covenant in agreements the effect of which may be to substantially lessen competition in interstate commerce in the sound parts field of talking motion picture business.

Restrictive Agreements

According to the court, an examination of the numerous affidavits and voluminous exhibits filed on this motion shows that certain restrictive agreements contained in the licenses or leases made by Erpi are inherently illegal. These restrictive agreements are:

(1) The "Tying Agreements" in the licenses or leases of Erpi to exhibitors, whereby exhibitors agree to purchase from Erpi all repair and replacement parts for the reproducing apparatus and equipment leased by Erpi.

(2) The "Exclusive Agreements" in the contractual letters accompanying the leases of Erpi to producers whereby producers agree to distribute films produced on the producing apparatus only to exhibitors supplied with Erpi reproducing apparatus and equipment.

These tying agreements found in the licenses or leases of reproducing apparatus and equipment made by Erpi to exhibitors are rendered more effective and burdensome by additional sections of licenses, said the court.

The exclusive agreements in the contractual letters accompanying licenses from Erpi to producers are illustrated in the contractual letter of Erpi to Paramount-Famous Lasky Corporation, dated May 11, 1928. (Plaintiff's Exhibit 18.) Similar exclusive agreements are in the contractual letters of Erpi to other producers and are indorsed "Accepted" by the producers. These letters accompany the licenses (Recording License Agreements) of producing apparatus and equipment of Erpi to the producers. The licenses are for 16 years.

Calls Agreements in Restraint

The exclusive agreements in the contractual letters require producers to refrain from distributing their talking motion pictures to theatres and exhibitors who have not acquired reproducing equipment from Erpi. As the result of these exclusive agreements the supply of talking motion pictures would be substantially closed to exhibitors who did not install reproducing apparatus and equipment purchased from Erpi. These exclusive agreements are bound to restrain exhibitors from using or dealing in goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of Erpi, according to Judge Nields. (Note: This "exclusive agreement" clause, which says that producers who are licensees of Erpi cannot distribute their product to non-Erpi equipped theatres, is no longer a trade problem, as it was in the early days of sound. Known as "interchangeability," the question occupied the attention of the entire industry, and, finally, about four years ago, John E. Otterson, president of Erpi, clarified the situation, and ended the difficulties caused thereby, when he said: "As long as the producers of talking pictures are satisfied with the quality of reproduction they receive, we shall interpose no objection" to interchangeability.)

Says Competition Was Lessened

Continuing, the court said: "I find from the proof submitted in support of the motions for preliminary injunction that the tying agreements contained in the licenses of reproducing equipment by Products to exhibitors and the exclusive agreements in the contractual letters of Products to producers, in fact, have substantially lessened competition in interstate commerce and will so continue unless defendants are restrained.

"I have not listed the particular licenses and contractual letters of Products containing the illegal agreements dealt with in this opinion because they are numerous and substantially alike. The decree for preliminary injunction may be so drawn as to cover them," said Judge Nields.

Meanwhile another opinion denying the application of Erpi for modification of a restraining order issued against it in the suit filed by the Vitaphone Corporation, was also filed last week by Chief Justice James Pennewill, sitting in chancery court at Wilmington.

The defendants sought to have the order modified by striking out that portion which restrains it from taking any action other than in the present case, to prevent Vitaphone from prosecuting the suit and from taking any steps toward having arbitration proceedings referred to in the suit, reopened.

Recently the chief justice overruled a plea filed by the defense which contended the complainant is barred from bringing the suit by reason of an arbitration agreement. The plea was reargued and the court once again has entered a decree overruling the plea as being insufficient in law.

Film Stocks Show Gain of $12,902,431 During June

With Loew's, RKO and Warner stocks showing gains on the market during June, the New York Times monthly index states that the three companies' gains totaled $12,902,431.

The Loew gain was estimated at $4,941,692, while Warner and RKO gained $7,602,688 and $358,051 respectively. Fox Film "A" declined $909,622.

Koplar Forecloses On St. Louis Theatre

Foreclosure on the St. Louis theatre in the Missouri city this week was made by the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation, controlled by Harry and Samuel Koplar, Emil Strauss and the estate of the late David Sommers, the holder of a second mortgage for $640,000. The property will be put up for sale July 22.

The St. Louis, now owned by the Orpheum Theatres Company, a subsidiary of RKO, will probably be bought in by the Koplar interests and used in conjunction with a contemplated deal for the St. Louis Amusement Company's suburban and neighborhood houses, it is understood.

Publix Reorganizing Its Theatre Circuit in Colorado

Publix is in the process of reorganizing its circuit in Colorado with J. H. Cooper of New York as partner. Headquarters of the circuit is in Denver. Most of the theatres taken over were formerly of the Mountain States Theatre Corporation, a Publix subsidiary. J. L. Finske, manager of the local division for Publix, will operate the group.

The Westland Theatres Corporation is also organizing in Colorado, having already built one house at Greeley, taken over the Burns-Paramount at Colorado Springs and the Colorado at Pueblo.

NAZI RACIAL BAR REACHES FILMS; GOLDWYN INVITES WORKERS TO U. S.

Law Excludes Jewish Creative Personnel from German Production and Prohibits Americans from Engaging Jews

Adolph Hitler's Nazi plan prohibiting Jews from appearing or participating in German motion picture production finally became a law Saturday. Immediately, Samuel Goldwyn broadcast from California an invitation to all those affected to come to Hollywood, which "will welcome with open arms the fine writers, artists, directors and producers who are being driven out of Germany." Mr. Goldwyn did not say whether the American quota restrictions on aliens would have some effect on his idea to transport German workers to Hollywood on the wholesale.

Wireless dispatches from Berlin over the weekend gave voice to the enactment of the new law, which not only excludes Jewish creative workers from any part in German production, but also prohibits American producers working in Germany from engaging Jews for films which they make in that country.

In the issue of June 10, MOTION PICTURE HERALD reported in detail the plan whereby absolute control by Adolph Hitler's government of all factors in and of the German film industry was about to become a fact. It was said that Hitler hopes government control will serve not only as a sorely needed "hypodermic" for a withering industry, but also will result in immediately establishing the film as an important means of propagating German culture, much in the same manner as Russia's productions, prepared under Soviet control, are used throughout the world as propaganda, likewise Italian films, produced under the eagle-eye of Mussolini, to further Fascism.

All Phases Governed

Incorporated in the Hitler control plan are clauses governing every phase of motion picture production, operation and management. Scenarios and casts are subject to special supervision under the following regulation:

> "The scenario and music of films must be based on German spiritual work. All films, even if they are destined for foreign distribution, must be penetrated with German spirit and culture. Text and music should therefore be German and German artists must be employed. Motion picture theatres should be places of entertainment and pleasure, but at the same time they should not neglect their task of cultural influence."

According to the new law, which will be administered by the Ministry of Popular Enlightenment and Propaganda, films admitted to exhibition privileges as German films must be produced by "Germans of German descent and nationality," or, under certain circumstances, "foreigners of German descent."

This is the usual formula of the socalled "Aryan" paragraph. The new law, however, provides one important exception, as noted in the weekend cables, which said: "For cultural or artistic reasons, the Reich Minister of Popular Enlightenment (Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels), may in individual cases, on the request of the producer of a picture, permit the employment of foreigners." Although this provision still requires official interpretation in Berlin, it is taken by the New York press to mean that Jewish artists may be admitted under it.

The present kontingent limitation of imports of American and other foreign films is left unchanged. The Minister of Propaganda, however, is authorized to admit additional films above the present quota if this seems advisable for "political or cultural reasons."

Samuel Goldwyn's organization of a movement to provide employment in Hollywood for all the "able" figures who will be excluded from the German film industry because of race or nationality, was made known Sunday in the following statement, telegraphed to the press in New York:

"I plan to inaugurate a movement here in Hollywood immediately to welcome to our motion picture ranks those artists, producers, writers and directors, who, because of their Jewish heritage, are being deprived of a means of livelihood and an outlet for their talent. We not only invite them here, but what is more important, we need them. Despite the great strides motion pictures have made here, I still believe we are undermanned.

"Many of the people who have been engaged in making pictures in Germany are among the most capable in the world, and the German government cannot but suffer a grievous loss because of the steps it has taken."

The Nazi Industry Control Plan

The motion picture industry in Germany evidently now has, or eventually will have little to say in the application of the plan of the Nazis to control German films. Some of the highlights are:

Reorganization of every branch of the German film industry.

Complete subsidization and stabilization, creatively, financially and otherwise.

Creation of sufficient product for German theatres.

Establishment of a distribution trust.

Institution of a film financing bank.

Compulsory adherence of every trade member to the plan, under penalties.

Establishment of an arbitration board for all disputes, in all branches.

Boycotting of exhibitors violating rental or contractual agreements.

Control of admission scales and theatre policies is vested in distribution trust.

Trust given power to control the business of any distributor member, at his expense.

Termination of picture cycles.

Control of quality and quantity of product vested in central organization.

Reduction in production, distribution and exhibition overhead; salaries included.

Scenario, story and cast must be all-German, including films for export. Imported films of Germans who migrated to Hollywood or elsewhere will probably be banned.

Theatres, producers and film executives will probably be licensed.

New quota law for foreign films will control imports.

According to the British press, Tony Van Eyck, young screen actress, will pass on the eligibility of those capable of working in German films. "The decisions are controlled, for all practical purposes, by an inner council of three, consisting of Miss Van Eyck, Heinrich George and Johannes Reihmann," according to the report.

Meanwhile, additional cable reports to New York from Berlin indicated Monday that a new law definitely barring all Jews or persons with Jewish family affiliations from holding any kind of office in Germany has just been promulgated. Under this law, no person of "non-Aryan descent" shall be eligible for appointment as an official of the Reich, the States, municipalities, or municipal associations, or any other kind of public or legal corporation, institution or endowment. The same prohibition applies to persons of Aryan descent who are married to persons of non-Aryan descent.

The New York Times, in a special wireless dispatch, said this week:

"Germany's industrial position is bettering, but anxiety prevails among manufacturers over the disappearance from the cabinet of Dr. Alfred Hugenberg, minister of agriculture and economics, who acted as a brake on Nazi radicalism. There are signs of a new campaign against department stores and cooperatives, besides other erratic experiments.

"The Institute for Studying Trade Fluctuations has calculated that industry has already made good one-tenth of the setback of the preceding year."

Huebsch Declares Hitlerites Oppose Political Pictures

Interesting, and probably politically significant, is a letter from A. E. Huebsch, of the Transocean Film Company of Berlin, widely and favorably known in the American film trade, addressed to Colvin Brown, general manager of Quigley Publications, discussing the current situation in the motion picture industry in Germany and a recent article in MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Mr. Huebsch rather violently disputes the HERALD'S presentation in the issue of June 10, headed: "Nazis Finally Take Over German Film Industry Reorganization."

The HERALD'S article in question was prepared by its Washington Bureau from data made available by sources unquestionably authentic and impartial. We also present, for the readers' own judgment, the ardata made available by sources we believe unquestionably authentic and impartial.

Mr. Huebsch's letter to Mr. Brown follows:

I notice in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of June 10th, page 7, Vol. III, No. II, an article headed "Hitler Uber Alles." Whatever is intimated in this article is as far from the truth and facts as possible. The writer of this article may just as well try to make the people believe that the moon is a green cheese.

The true fact is that the Government officials, who have a say with regard to film pro-

LONDON HEARS THAT FILM QUOTAS MAY BE DISCUSSED AT CONFERENCE

Sees Return to Original Broad Purposes as Result of Roosevelt's "Thumbs Down" on Gold Bloc's Proposals

by BERNARD CHARMAN
of London Correspondent Staff

The motion picture trade at London has started already to talk about the possibility of the film industry being among the subjects for discussion by the World Economic Conference. President Roosevelt's blast of Monday, in which he flatly rejected the proposals of France and other countries in the gold bloc for temporary currency stabilization, may have some effect in returning the conference to its original broad economic purposes, including tariffs and quotas, and the motion picture trade at London believes an attempt is to be made to obtain repeal of the British quota legislation whereby importation of American and other foreign films are restricted. Germany, France and several additional important European powers likewise restrict the flow of American films. Action by the Conference is, of course, contingent upon continuance of the session, to be decided Thursday.

Quota Has Outlived Value

While the news may be disturbing to certain prominent British interests in the business, there is no doubt that it will be received with enthusiasm by many a small English exhibitor, who has found his choice of programs restricted by the demands of the law. My opinion is, and has been for some time past, that the Quota Act operating in this country has outlived its period of value to the British film trade, and that its withdrawal would be to the advantage of the industry—or at any rate to the showman.

When the Act was first applied, its purpose was to give an impetus to production of English films, by ensuring that its product should have a market. This it did; the studios made their pictures secure in the knowledge that they were guaranteed a showing. They got their money back, with interest, and on the strength of it were enabled to develop and expand so that they could bring their facilities more into line with those of their great Hollywood rivals. Today, by common consent, the major production plants in the United Kingdom are as fully equipped as those of the West Coast and, on recent showing, are as capable of turning out beautifully-made pictures as Hollywood. The point is that they now have every chance of competing with Hollywood on an equal footing.

Improvement in the pictures made by British studios has been so marked that, whereas a few years ago the public would stay away if a home produced film were advertised, today it is the average American program offering that gets the razzberry. English films are now guaranteed showing on their own merits, not by any benefit of Quota Act.

The concerns that do obtain advantage by the law are the minor companies who shoot "quickies" for low-priced sale to the American distributing organizations operating here, which in their turn are obliged to handle a certain percentage of pictures made in this country. The only sale for such product is among the small theatres, barred from screening good home films because all those are absorbed by the circuit houses operated in conjunction with the big British production concerns, who still are obliged to play ducks and drakes with their own reputation in the eyes of their customers in order to stay within the law.

Gala Presentation July 12

While the delegates to the Economic Conference are discussing films within the council chamber, a move has been started outside to give them a free evening's entertainment of this very nature. The Federation of British Industries, through its Film Group, has fixed a gala presentation of British films for July 12, when the audience will consist entirely of distinguished personalities in the political and economic sphere, and all the eminent foreigners in our midst.

Mr. Cordell Hull probably will have a front seat.

All British producing companies have been invited to submit pictures from which a selection will be made by a committee consisting entirely of persons not directly connected with the film industry.

Before going to the selected theatre—the New Victoria (one of the Gaumont-British show houses) is favorite at the moment—many of the distinguished guests will be entertained by the film industry at a dinner in honor of the world press representatives attending the Conference.

Taciturn Harry Cohn

Harry Cohn, Columbia chief, at present in London in connection with his company's plan for establishing its own producing and distributing organization here, is keeping close inside his shell, and so far has only put out statements of a general nature. To poor harassed journalists he presents very much of a problem, and a colleague of mine recently spent a whole day diving up and down the lift shaft of a hotel in a fruitless effort to get his man.

We do know, however, that his first picture here, a sort of test picture, will star Leslie Howard, and that Lewis Milestone and Frank Capra are candidates for a directorial position here.

MacDonald-Marshall Film Shelved

British & Dominions has temporarily shelved its projected Jeannette MacDonald-Herbert Marshall joint starring picture, and the unit has been broken up for the time being. The reason is that both stars have Hollywood contracts to fulfil, and Herbert Wilcox, production chief of B & D, figures that to rush the film through to let the stars out quickly would be fatal. The production is to be a musical on the grand scale.

A batch of well known American film folk already had come over to work on the picture. There were Sam Taylor, director, who probably will stay to handle another subject, Edward Cronjager, cameraman, Samson Raphaelson, scenarist, and others.

MORE POWER TO WILBY, SAYS HOUGH

To the Editor of the HERALD:

Have been following closely Mr. R. B. Wilby's statements published in the HERALD and must say that we, the exhibitors, quite agree with his idea.

The time must come when more thought will be given to the exhibitors and less to distributors. After all, the money is made at this end of the business and at this end all thought must be given. If the distributors continue to let second-run engagements curb their net from first run engagements, how then can the producers maintain the picture standard set in the previous years? After all, I give credit to the present slump in this industry to the neglect of distributors to protect THEIRS as well as exhibitors, from second-run business; the bulk is made on 40c admissions.

We are very thankful for having a man like Mr. Wilby to voice the New Deal to Show Business. And more power to him. — EDWIN C. HOUGH, Rivoli Theatre, Greenville, S. C.

United Artists Overruled By Wisconsin Circuit Court

C. M. Davison, Madison, Wis., circuit judge whose decision in the case of the United Artists Corporation against the Odeon Building, Inc., Beaver Dam, was affirmed by Justice George B. Nelson in the Wisconsin supreme court, overruled the United Artists demurrer to the defendants answer which alleged that the contract was void for three reasons.

The court held, first, that they had been obtained by duress and compulsion, United Artists conspiring with other producers to refuse to lease any of their output unless these seven pictures also were contracted for. The decision held further that this conspiracy violated the state and federal laws concerning unlawful conspiracy and restraint of trade, and also that the contracts contained an "arbitration clause" which the United States Supreme Court held unconstitutional.

SCREEN CAN MAKE OPERA PAY IF—

Musical and Dramatic Materials Are Interwoven Into Really Moving Film, Says O'Sullivan

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

ANNOUNCEMENT THAT ONE OF THE MAJOR companies is contemplating production of grand opera on the screen is interesting and significant.

It is interesting to those who have at heart the progress of the musical element in motion pictures, and who have been keenly disappointed in the lack of initiative and vision—call it adventurous spirit, if you will—of those who control the destiny of the audible screen.

The significance of the announcement lies in the fact that one of the most progressive of the big companies is giving serious consideration to the needs of a public—a public far vaster than the moguls of the industry realize—that has been weaned away from the motion picture theatre since the make-believe world created by the old silent screen has been dissipated by the often prosy, and at times grim, realities of the usual dialogue screen production.

TO ONE WHO HAS HAD SOME EXPERIENCE IN the production of grand opera and has supplemented that experience with the musical scoring of motion pictures and the sales promotion of screen product, it is apparent that this major company is adventuring into a domain of unlimited opportunities for broadening the scope of screen entertainment and recruiting to the motion picture theatre a new and desirable audience.

It has become increasingly evident to close observers that some radical departures from conventional modes of screen treatment must be made if the motion picture is to keep pace with the enriched and developed taste of the intelligent public—and in this day all patrons of the theatre are intelligent in their ability to discriminate between the original and the obvious, the novel and the trite, the meaningful and the inane. Such discrimination is the direct result of the education of the motion picture itself, which has advanced further in a generation than the stage did in a hundred years. It is not strange, therefore, that there is a public that cannot be satisfied with literal imitations of the legitimate stage, or simply stories told in pictures and dialogue. This public looks to the audible screen for an amplification of the media which are its birthright—something new, something different, something that will transcend any product of the strictly dramatic, musical, or rhythmic vehicle, while combining the salient features of each.

While the project of producing grand opera on the screen is an alluring one, both from an artistic and a commercial standpoint, there are several pertinent facts that cannot be ignored by the producer who expects to realize adequate returns from such a laudable enterprise. The conclusion to be drawn from these facts is—that grand opera, as produced on the stage in this country, has never been a paying venture. With every major opera company in the United States (the Metropolitan excepted) compelled to suspend during the past season, due to the lack of ready cash available to the financial backers of these great organizations; and with only one (the Metropolitan) proving self-sustaining during the past score of years, it is obvious that, as a business, grand opera is an expensive luxury.

WRITING ON THE SUBJECT OF "OPERA: A Neglected Film Source," in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of Oct. 15, 1932, I stated: "As there is an impression to the effect that motion pictures are produced primarily for money-making purposes, it is obvious that opera as opera will never come to the screen. * * * Grand opera, adequately produced, has never been profitable on the stage; and there is no reason to assume that even with the distribution and mass reduplication facilities, film opera as opera would pay."

NOW COMES SUCH AN EMINENT AUTHORITY on grand opera as Deems Taylor, who, in an analysis of "What's Wrong With Opera?" in the Saturday Evening Post of June 3, sounds an optimistic note for the future of opera in this country, if, and when, it should be produced in a sane and intelligent manner. Mr. Taylor knows whereof he speaks. He is a critic of keen judgment, a writer of brilliant gifts, and a composer of note who has achieved the distinction of having two operas of his own produced by the Metropolitan Opera Company.

"There is just one important reason why the American opera audience is so small," says Mr. Taylor. "It is the fact that opera, as produced in this country, is sung in virtually every language except that of the inhabitants of this country. There is one other country in which this is done—England. And England and America are the two highly civilized countries in the world where opera has never taken root."

What has this to do with opera on the screen? The answer can be found in Mr. Taylor's conclusion that opera can be sold to America, but "the only way to do that is to make it take opera and like it. And the only way to do that is to produce opera, somewhere, strictly for an American audience, and wholly from the American point of view."

So, too, film opera, in order to be sold to our public, must be produced "strictly for an American audience, and wholly from the American point of view."

MAKING SCREEN VERSIONS OF GRAND OPERA that will conform to the American point of view covers a lot of territory. Strictly speaking, there is no American point of view for opera sung in English, as less than one-half of one per cent of American opera-goers ever hear opera sung in a language they understand. The major opera companies in the United States produce opera in every language except that of the people.

If grand opera on the stage can be brought out of its moribund condition by having it sung in English translations attuned to the American idea, cast with singers who can really act as well as sing, and generally be made to conform to the American point of view in presentation, the motion picture producers of film-opera need have no fear of the outcome, provided they develop and apply the unlimited resources of the audible screen in making film-opera that moves.

When the musical and dramatic materials of the grand operas are dexterously co-related and merged in screen productions—not as opera in the stage sense, but as photo-music-drama in which the various technical means that can reconcile and express all the arts are brought into play—there will be found a vast new audience for the screen.

Such productions would conform to the American point of view. Shorn of the set formulas of operatic traditions; revealing in a vital and moving manner the story and the drama of the great lyrical works that for generations have been lurking behind strange tongues, photo-music-drama based on grand opera will be an inspiring adventure—and a profitable one.

SCHENCK DENIES RAID FOR 20TH CENTURY

But Declares That New Company Must Be Free to Negotiate for Players in Spirit of Open Market

United Artists issued the following statement to the industry late last week, from its headquarters in New York:

"Twentieth Century Pictures is not a signatory to any agreement restricting the signing of screen stars under contract to other studios, and therefore will not hesitate to negotiate for those stars when their existing contracts are expiring.

"This open declaration of policy has been made by Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Twentieth Century company which he recently organized with Darryl F. Zanuck.

"In disclosing intention to follow the policy which has made Twentieth Century the storm center and the most talked-of major company in Hollywood, Mr. Schenck also took occasion to deny rumors of any secret affiliation or agreement with any other film concern.

Three Stars Signed

"Twentieth Century has already signed George Arliss, Constance Bennett and Loretta Young, players whose contracts with other companies were on the point of expiring or had expired. By the terms of an arbitration agreement subscribed to by members of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, member studios are enjoined from negotiating with contract players until a stipulated time before expiration of their contracts, unless notifying the player's studio of such negotiations and the salary offered.

" 'We intend to deal with anyone with whom we see fit whose contract is within a month or six weeks of expiration,' said Mr. Schenck.

" 'We will be ethical and honorable in our actions and will neither try to foment dissatisfaction among players belonging to other studios, nor attempt to lure them away at a time when their existent contracts have any considerable time to run.

" 'But we are a new company, and in order to succeed in competition with older companies we must be free and able to negotiate for players in the same spirit of an open market that other industries compete for business. We also reserve the right to conduct our negotiations in strict business secrecy, without the obligation of notifying other studios.

" 'When I was president of the Producers' Association some several years ago, I had put in effect an agreement by which producers could not negotiate with creative talent under contract three months prior to the expiration of such contract. Harry Warner at that time "kicked over the traces" and declared he "could not cast his pictures without dealing with players," on the plea that they were a small studio and needed players in order to meet competition with the larger companies.

Denies "Raiding" Companies

" 'At that time they negotiated with and placed under contract players who, in at least one instance, had three or four more pictures to be made before expiration of a contract with the other company.

" 'Twentieth Century Pictures have not raided the companies from which they signed players, since none of the players we signed had more than one picture to make before each contract expired, and we did not therefore interrupt any production plans or schedules.

" 'The Warner Brothers are complaining now, however, because they feel that, through arbitration, they would get the better of it. They are a rich company, with a great deal of money and power. We, on the other hand, are beginning our fight for existence.

" 'We will, however, continue to act in harmonious accord with the Hays office, because that organization has done creditable work for the industry, and although Twentieth Century is not a member of the Producers' Association except for the indirect relationship existing through our releasing agreement with United Artist, Twentieth Century intends to pay its proportionate share of the Hays office cost, since the benefits of the Producers' Association's activities accrue to the whole industry.'

"Mr. Schenck denied that his affiliation with Darryl Zanuck in forming Twentieth Century Pictures was in any way connected with any other individual or organization.

" 'I had no contact with Mr. Zanuck before his resignation from Warners Brothers, other than a close friendship of long standing. The first word I had with him was when he came to me for advice, saying he had offers from other companies, including Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount and Universal, and wanted my opinion as to which would be best for him. During our talk the idea evolved for forming our own company. We drew up our partnership agreement then and there, without even so much as legal consultation.

" 'There is absolutely no truth to rumors that M-G-M, Louis B. Mayer, or any company or individual has any connection, affiliation or secret financial understanding with Twentieth Century, either as to ownership or the borrowing of players.

" 'There was no secret influence in our securing the loan of Wallace Beery for "The Bowery." We had started negotiations to sign Mr. Beery to a term contract, since his M-G-M contract was about to expire. Mr. Mayer came to us, however, and agreed to let us see Beery on condition that we would not sign him, and that is how the arrangement was made.' "

New York Exhibitor Group Taking Members to July 15

The Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York exhibitor group, has adopted a new plan whereby exhibitors served by local exchanges may be admitted to membership until July 15. Following that date an initiation fee will be imposed.

The unit has reached a decision not to negotiate with either Local 306 or the Empire State union, projectionists' organizations. Members will negotiate for themselves. In the six weeks since its establishment, the exhibitor organization has increased its membership from 60 to 130 theatres.

Massachusetts Allied Group In Annual Outing at Plymouth

Managers of the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, Inc., held their annual outing at the Hotel Mayflower, Plymouth, Mass., last week, coming by motor from Boston with special police motorcycle escort. Golf, field sports, a luncheon at noon and a shore dinner at night comprised the day's program. The committee in charge included: Joseph H. Brennan of Loew's State, Stanley H. Sumner of the University and James J. McGuinness, with Al Somerby serving as treasurer.

Courts Restrain Kansas City Locals

Two Kansas City theatre owners have obtained, within one week, temporary injunctions against local operators' units of the IATSE, restraining the organizations from picketing. Petitions in both cases are pending to make the injunctions permanent. In the first case A. L. Dare, owner of the Rosedale theatre, was granted the writ over the protest of union counsel by Judge E. L. Fischer. Defendants are Local 498, several officers of the union and a number of members.

In the other case an injunction was granted E. S. Young, owner of the Central, by Judge Ben Terte in circuit court, restraining Local 170 from picketing. Named in the injunction are William H. Higgins, president of the local; Robert R. Dillon, business agent, and "all members and sympathizers." The restrainer enjoins molesting and directly or indirectly interfering with operators of the Central. This is the third action filed by Mr. Young against the union. In one case he obtained a stench bombing conviction against John George.

Hoot Gibson Crashes At National Air Races

Hoot Gibson, well-known cowboy star, took to the air Monday at the National Air Races in Los Angeles and ended his flight in a hospital with concussion of the brain or a possible skull fracture suffered in a crash witnessed by 25,000 spectators. Mr. Gibson was competing in a special match race against Ken Maynard for a trophy donated by Will Rogers.

He was unconscious when ambulance attendants dragged him from the ship, from which Gibson had been catapulted as it struck the ground, but recovered quickly and, with the aid of nurses at an emergency hospital, walked into a dressing room. The plane was destroyed. Maynard, seeing the crash, landed quickly and helped to rescue Gibson.

Referee Terminates Leases On Mountain State Circuit

The referee in bankruptcy has terminated all leases of the houses of Mountain States Theatre Corporation, Colorado Publix subsidiary, since the company and the owners could not agree on rentals for the period of the receivership.

Wilbur Newton, receiver, had paid landlords 50 per cent of the rentals during the past three months, leaving additional payments to the discretion of the court. Unless Publix organizes another company to operate the houses on new leases, the owners will probably install managers and operate the houses themselves. Theatres in Denver, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Grand Junction and Greeley are included.

Westinghouse Increases Pay

Notice of an immediate raise of five per cent in salaries and wages has been received in all offices, works and subsidiary companies of Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, effective July 1. This applies to both salary roll and hourly roll rates.

KUYKENDALL ASKS ROTARIANS' AID FOR THEATRES IN EACH COMMUNITY

Urges Civic Units To Help Exhibitors to Get the Type of Pictures the Public Wants; Asks Intelligent Aid

by ED KUYKENDALL

President of MPTOA, in Address before International Rotarians

In furtherance of one of his major objectives as president of the MPTOA —to obtain the public's understanding of the industry—Mr. Ed Kuykendall, of Columbus, Miss., has set for himself the function of spreading goodwill for the motion picture before various important groups outside the business. Mr. Kuykendall, who was elected president of the national exhibitors' organization a few weeks ago, believes the public, civic leaders and community agencies seeking higher film standards need to be informed of means of cooperating with the industry. His campaign will emphasize that the only way to bring about higher standards is not mere lip-service, but actual support at the box office. Mr. Kuykendall's latest moves along these lines were in connection with the Rotary International Convention, at Boston, where he was a principal speaker. His address provides material for other exhibitors called upon to address local civic units.

I come to ask your cooperation in a task that all of us are equally interested in, because you as a Rotarian would naturally be interested in your community, your state and nation. It is about the motion picture theatre—its community, state and national obligation.

The motion picture theatre is playing a most important part in your domestic and economic life. It moulds public sentiment, brings messages to governments, the arts, the science and drama as well as customs and habits of foreign people, to all of the people of this country, from the most remote hamlet to the largest cities. It also carries our American customs and habits to all civilized nations of the world, and in doing that the motion picture industry, like Rotary, is playing its part in bringing about a better and happier understanding between the nations of the world.

Its language is universal. It is participating like Rotary in community life and the smaller the community the more important is the theatre, because it is the accepted community gathering place.

Responds in Crises

In every national crisis, the theatres and the motion picture industry as a whole have responded. Our theatres are yours to command for anything that is for the common good, whether it be a task of raising funds or carrying a message on our screen. . . . I realize more and more the necessity for tolerant helpful interest towards the motion picture industry by Rotarians because we of the motion picture industry who are striving for the higher standards of production and ethics in our industry realize that without help of those who make up Rotary, and other organizations of similar public spirited type, we can never obtain our objective.

I appeal to you as a Rotarian, and president of the Motion Picture Theatre owners of America, to take a deeper interest in your theatre, to encourage your manager to run his theatre as you would have it run, to bring those finer things that you say you want shown, and encourage attendance when they come, so that they may not be the financial loss that they usually are. The theatre is not essentially a religious institution—it must depict life in all its phases to survive, but in doing this it must also stick to the fundamentals of common decency. You, by your patronage, can and will regulate this. The theatre cannot cater exclusively to the child or minor mind. It must entertain all ages and all types and classes. It is essentially the entertainment of the masses. Bacause of this, a movement for establishing certain days of the week to be designated as "family day" is becoming very popular in the theatres of this country.

Worthy of Help

Surely this thing called the motion picture, with its patronage of millions and the tremendous influence it wields, is worthy of your help and guidance, not only as a Rotarian, but as a citizen interested in public welfare. The motion picture is a great salesman—a visual salesman. It creates in the mind of the theatre patron the desire for better homes, better clothes; it takes a message of better living into every hamlet, thereby creating trade relations and stimulating industry in an educational way. The motion picture theatre is an essential industry entitled to all the consideration that any legitimate business gets; it should not be discriminated against in taxes or regulations. We are working now on an industry code to be submitted to the government in line with the industry control bill just enacted. We know that we are not perfect and our faults are many, but we are sincerely and earnestly working to correct them. With your help we will accomplish that.

I present to you the motion picture, not as a luxury, not as a mere pastime, but as an international and economic necessity. It has become the world's most important social safety valve. To the temples of the film a weary world betakes itself and comes forth refreshed, provided, of course, that the picture seen successfully beguiles us into a flight from reality, and escape from our work-a-day world. That is our problem, to make and to give you in our theatres a universally entertaining product.

Our success depends upon your willingness to vote intelligently for the type of entertainment you want. The ballot is not limited to adults, children are full fledged citizens in the daily motion picture poll of the box office. If they are unqualified to vote intelligently, to discriminate between entertainment that is not suitable for them to see and that which is, the responsibility is primarily a parental one. It cannot be discharged either by the producers or the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. All of us, including the school and the church, must share in that responsibility. Take, rather than send, your children to the motion picture theatre. And in being selective—shopping, if you please, for their pictures—you will find every theatre owner in America anxious to assist you.

Help us to make of the theatre the great constructive force and international factor for good it should be.

Recovery Is Also Film Job: Cullman

The motion picture industry cannot and must not consider itself immune from the task of re-creating employment and helping to increase the purchasing power of the American family under the terms of the National Recovery Act, according to Howard S. Cullman, operating receiver of the Roxy theatre in New York. So far as this industry is concerned, the need for an attitude of unselfish cooperation is plain, he said this week.

"Almost inevitably we will be besieged by protests that this industry is different, that it cannot follow the standardized pattern prescribed for textile or steel manufacture, that the motion picture industry is art.

"It is my firm belief, however, that every field, from mining to the theatre, must accept the new social trend," Mr. Cullman said. "Therefore, this industry must fall in line with the principles now expounded in Washington."

Mr. Cullman declared that the decreased purchasing power of the public has placed production, distribution and exhibition in a position where it will be more difficult to formulate a fair code of competition than it might have been a few years ago.

"None the less," he said, "there is no reason why the enormous discrepancies in salaries, which have always prevailed in the industry, cannot today be brought to some reasonable balance. In my opinion, the industry has always been guilty of exaggerated opulence to all employees at the top of the list, including specialized relatives, and an unpardonable niggardliness toward the average employee. Only when decent conditions become universal in the industry can magnificent honoraria for any of its members be at all justified."

John Flinn Is Nominated As President of the AMPA

John C. Flinn was named last week by the AMPA nominating committee as candidate for president at the association's election to be held September 14.

Other prospective officers are: Rutgers Nielson, for vice president; Paul Benjamin, for treasurer, and Al Sherman, for secretary. The new board of directors includes: Hal Horne, Marvin Kirsch, S. Charles Einfeld, William Ferguson, Paul Gulick, Gabe York and Ed Finney.

Lightman on MPTOA Board

M. A. Lightman, former president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has been appointed a member of the board of directors of the organization, succeeding E. Van Hyning, former head of the Missouri MPTO, who resigned from the board when the Missouri unit left the MPTOA recently.

HAYS STUDIES HOLLYWOOD DEMAND FOR "HONEST COUNT" IN FILM SELLING

Academy Seeking Reduction of Unemployment and Agreements on Talent Loans; Sending Questionnaire to Exhibitors

Declaring that the motion picture business is "several jumps ahead of general industry," Will H. Hays arrived on the Coast this week to take up with production and studio labor representatives the drafting of a production code in accordance with President Roosevelt's Industrial Recovery Act. Immediately Mr. Hays went into conference with Louis B. Mayer, Adolph Zukor and B. B. Kahane. He will confer with all production executives of MPPDA member companies, as well as with representatives of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Hollywood feels that the studio folk are, possibly for the first time, taking a real interest in selling and distribution. That instead of it being solely a New York problem, methods of the past have brought selling into a routine rut, resulting in dangerous, expensive and faulty practices permitted to continue in the studios, handicapping capable persons who give their best. It is regarded as certain that this phase will be gone into carefully in conference with Mr. Hays, and that Hollywood will get a development which will bring about individualized selling and an "honest count" so that it can be proved who is good or incompetent in both production and distribution. More than ever before Hollywood is concerned with box-office returns because so many, directors, writers and actors alike, are working on a percentage basis.

Seeks Talent Loan Pact

The Academy is reported to be seeking to have two special features incorporated in the industry code. One of these is the reduction of unemployment and the other, agreements on the lending of talent from one studio to another. The Academy also has decided to send questionnaires to important exhibitors asking their opinions on block-booking, name draws, production values, percentage bookings, producer-distributor ownership of theatres and clearance.

The seven large distributors who have approved the new standard contract will continue to make it available in connection with 1933-34 selling, pending final ratification of an industry code, it was learned last week.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, returned to his home at Columbus, Miss., Friday, after several weeks in New York.

"The executive committee has been in constant conference with exhibitors and distributors on a code," he said. "Practically every day some difficulties have been ironed out, and, although the draft still is in tentative form, we believe that its basic fundamentals are right. The exhibition code will not be definitely adopted until all exhibitors have had every opportunity to study it and make suggestions for it, and for this purpose we will again meet at the Congress hotel in Chicago July 11.

"While we were in conference, there were made various criticisms and suggestions about and for an exhibition code. These have all been suppositions. At no time has any one been able to offer fundamental changes.

"Our committee will continue to work as long as possible with the producer-distributors in rounding out the various phases of our tentative code, but we stand ready to take our code to Washington after we have exhausted all means of continuing amicable discussions. We are extremely hopeful that it will not be necessary to take such action."

Iowa-Nebraska Code Plan

Allied States Association this week presented recommendations of Allied of Iowa and Nebraska and the MPTO unit for a proposed code for independent theatres in those territories. Thirty-four specific recommendations were made, including clauses covering arbitration; standard exhibition contracts; requirement of exhibitors to play or pay for pictures in violation of the Code of Ethics in production of motion pictures (this section including the bulk of the Hays advertising code); equitable zoning and clearance; withholding pictures from exhibitors; fixing admission prices; gratuities or bribes; double featuring (called by them an unfair method of competition); inducement to breach of contract; overbuying; block booking; give-aways, two-for-one admission; delay in returning itemized box-office receipts; exhibitors refusing to maintain minimum admission prices set forth in licensing contracts, or who reduce admission below fair competitive levels by means of give-aways, etc., or who double feature, shall be refused contracts by distributors; transfer of ownership or possession of a theatre; unauthorized exhibition; no guarantee on straight percentage pictures; selling of shorts as condition of contracting for features; selection of limited number of pictures as released, option to provide for their cancellation after 14 days from release; re-issue and foreign-made pictures need not be played unless they are specified as such by distributor in issuing group license; no score charges; no special days to be required for exhibitors; non-theatrical accounts as unfair competition; refusal of distributors to date feature pictures; commercial advertising in pictures; number of percentage pictures not to exceed 10 per cent of any group; deviation from national sales policy; accounting to exhibitor on pro rata basis for all features; radio appearances of stars as unfair competition; discrimination in favor of chain theatres; granting of exhibition rights for more than one year, not limiting such rights to particular theatres, granting of rights without specifying film rental to be paid with respect to each theatre and where right is conferred on licensee to substitute other theatres; threats and intimidation; distributor employee financial interest in any theatre in his territory, and rights of collective bargaining.

A committee representing the MPTO and Allied Theatre Owners, Inc., drew up the recommendations and Allied members in the Omaha territory are now studying them.

Iowa-Nebraska Allied, MPTO Unit Propose Code for Local Independent Theatres; Submitted to Other Allied Groups

Independent distribution executives are still formulating proposals for inclusion in the industry distribution code drawn up by major sales companies and presented to the independents 10 days ago. Code restrictions on the double feature remain the chief concern of the independents, who favor either a code which ignores it completely or leaves the policy to be decided by public patronage.

Independents Active

The newly organized Independent Theatre Owners' Association, headed by Harry Brandt, will ask the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce to support the exhibition code which it plans to draw for independent exhibitors of Greater New York.

Organizing work for the Motion Picture Laboratory Association, of which H. J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film, is temporary chairman, will be completed early next week, it is understood.

Leaders in all branches of American industry this week were rapidly completing the formation of individual codes. N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc., one of the largest advertising firms, was organizing leaders and 56 associations and independent companies were invited by Wilfred W. Fry, president of N. W. Ayer, to draw up a code.

Meanwhile business generally continued on the upturn. Monday in New York saw one of the biggest days on the New York Stock Exchange, with a turnover of more than 6,000,000, establishing a new high for 1933. Western Union started the month off by restoring a 10 per cent wage cut for some 66,000 persons. Exports in May surpassed the value of those in April in the case of 23 of the 40 principal foreign markets, and prices everywhere were up.

Harold B. Franklin, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, announced Wednesday that Herschel Stuart's executive position had been eliminated and that Mr. Stuart's duties will be taken over by the circuit's home office executive staff.

Mr. Stuart said: "I know nothing about it."

It is important that you get a copy for two reasons.

First, it is the only advance summary of our forthcoming product that you will see before the new season begins and secondly, it is an answer to a frequent question in this industry, "Can motion picture producers ever learn to sell a film in a sincere merchandising manner?"

In this book you will find few superlatives and no figments of the imagination.

But we will repeat that our studio, under the direction of Merian C. Cooper, is committed to a plan to surpass that enviable record in 1933-34.

The frequency with which this company turned out successes is proof that they were not accident, but the product of an organization geared to the production of successful shows, with the genius to conceive and the resources to produce with intelligence.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

MANAGER Hardi Meakins succeeded in having psychic Gene Dennis invited to a White House party, during her engagement at his RKO-Keith theatre in Washington. The occasion was the first big "shindig" given the press by the new administration. President Roosevelt knows that the reporters on Capitol Hill have a hand in moulding public opinion. He treats them kindly.

Miss Dennis was busy obliging the newsmen with predictions and more predictions. The President was an interested observer, until he remembered an incident in New Orleans some nine years ago, when Miss Dennis told him that he had great things in store. At the White House, Mr. Roosevelt decided that he wanted to hear more. He steered the psychic lady into an anteroom and prodded her with questions, probably about the future of his administration, business recovery, the foreign situation, inflation, his New England cruise. "Miss Dennis," he asked, "will we have good weather on our coming cruise?"

"Yes," she replied, "you will have good weather on your cruise."

A pea-soup fog blocked the course of the Presidential cruiser, Amberjack II, almost from the start.

One of old Richardson's theories was that women were inferior to men. Demonstrating this view, he forced his wife to walk behind him. Once he sawed off the legs of a chair she used, declaring that she was not entitled to sit as high as he. Mrs. Richardson became indignant and sued for divorce.

Born in Russia, Yasha was a pupil at the Petrograd Imperial Controversy, and a protege of Glazounow, famous composer. When the War broke out, he joined the army, but too many revolutions made him a wanderer and he crossed the enemy lines, reaching Constantinople. U. S. THOUGH FEW of the Hollywood film colony are aware of its existence, there is an exhibit right in their own back yard in the Los Angeles Museum, which bares to the world all of the studio center's public and much of its private life. In the files of Earl Theisen, honorary curator of the exhibit, may be found the cast of every motion picture that has ever been made. It houses the first press book, printed in 1898, the first fan magazine, vintage of 1906, the first scenarios, which were handwritten.

On the back of one of D. W. Griffith's earliest scenarios, "An Indian Pastoral," written by himself in 1909, D. W. jotted down the expense of the picture, totaling $99.75. (The bankers would turn hand-springs for a recurrence of those days.) Among the items listed are: 1 horse boy, 75 cents; 2 drinks of alcohol, 50 cents; 1 player (James Kirkwood), $5; 1 star (Florence Lawrence), $40 for the week.

Interesting is one item among the late Valentino's relics, an application for membership in the Masons, which seems to deny his much publicized religious beliefs.

HEADLINE SHOOTERS

Radio

A timely, colorful romance drama glorifying the newsreel cameraman. Strictly up-to-date and in line with the popular trend for vivid action and spectacle, the Agnes Christian Johnson-Allen Rivkin screen play is geared to a fast tempo under Otto Brower's direction. The cast is loaded with well known names, William Gargan, Frances Dee, Ralph Bellamy, Jack LaRue, Gregory Ratoff, Wallace Ford, Purnell Pratt, H. B. Walthall, Franklin Pangborn and Mary MacLaren, whose recent activities are well known to both the exhibitors and the fans.

Spectacle vies with romance for interest, with the use of clips of earthquakes, bathing beauty contests, fires, floods, noted recent news events providing the punch. Miniature effects accentuate this color.

Gargan, ace newsreel man, falls in love with sob-sister Frances Dee, while covering an earthquake disaster. Together they traipse all over the country covering big events. Frances, spurning the rough and ready Gargan when he suggests matrimony, goes back to her old southern home and fiancé Bellamy. A Mississippi River flood brings them together again. Disaster is caused by a faultily constructed dam which Gargan is fortunate enough to shoot as it breaks. The builder is a pal of Bellamy and Gargan promises to kill the film. Producer Gregory can't overlook such a bet, and with Gargan burning because Frances cold-shoulders him, it's released. The story turns gangster as LaRue kidnaps Frances in New York. Gargan frames LaRue to learn her whereabouts and the two lovers risk their lives in attempting to beat police to her rescue. Frances decides that Gargan is the boy for her, marries him, and they both set off in search of headline features to shoot and write about.

IN THE FOG

(Title to be changed)

Radio

Mystery melodrama, with a strong romantic twist, laden with plenty of weird thrills. The original and screen play is by Ruth Rose and is directed by E. B. Schoedsack. Additional dialogue is contributed by Robert Benchley, adding to the spontaneity of the contrasting comedy. The cast is particularly impressive, including Robert Armstrong, Roland Young, Laura Hope Crews, Helen Mack, John Miljan, Ralph Bellamy, Beryl Mercer, George K. Arthur, Henry Stephenson and Marjorie Gateson.

The locale is the Limehouse section of London. Armstrong, a visiting American, gets lost in the fog, wanders into a house and discovers a dead man. Rushing to notify the police, he returns to find the corpse gone and a typical British family, Stephenson, Gateson and Helen Mack, in its place. The cops and family think Armstrong is batty until he sees the supposedly dead man, Bellamy, signaling him. It develops that Bellamy is a spy trying to steal military secrets from Stephenson and an army officer. The yarn races all over fog-bound Limehouse with Bellamy and his gang getting hot and Armstrong in love with Helen Mack. The pair fall into his clutches, but Armstrong frames a story that leads Bellamy to believe that his pal, Miljan, is double-crossing him. A big fight ensues, and the fadeout has Miss Mack deciding that she'd rather live in America than fog-bound London.

The cast of this picture being pretty well known, the script has the stuff for all to turn in characteristic performances, but Benchley's material has given Roland Young and Laura Hope Crews lines and situations that are quite likely to hand audiences a real surprise.

FLAMING GOLD

Radio

A he-man, action thrill drama. The story is an original by Huston Branch, scenario by Malcolm Stuart Boylan and John Goodrich, and direction by Ralph Ince. All have been associated with the development of this kind of story and the cast which includes Bill Boyd, Mae Clarke, Pat O'Brien, Helen Ware and Rollo Lloyd.

The story is located in Mexican oil fields. Boyd and O'Brien, partners in developing independent wells, strike a gusher which is dynamited by Lloyd, agent of the big company combine. In New York to get additional finances, Boyd meets and weds Mae Clarke, a honky tonk dancer. Back in Mexico, the girl causes a rift between the pals, but Mae, really in love with Boyd, confesses her past to O'Brien. A fight is interrupted by another well coming in. Lloyd goes villainous again and fires the gusher, and the flames spread to the entire field. The pals are reunited in the efforts to quench the inferno, with love and complete understanding constituting the fade-out.

The burning oil fields will provide plenty of spectacle and thrill. The story indicates action will be fast and furious and the romance is calculated to fix audience sympathy on the girl. The title is particularly impressive.

FOOTLIGHT

Warner Bros.

Despite the title's sound, "Footlight Parade" is much different in theme idea and presentation technique than "42nd Street" or "Gold Diggers." Principally, the yarn is a fast moving comedy romance with a theatrical background for atmosphere. Music, other than scoring, is of little importance, save where it colors effects.

The cast is extensive, including a host of well known names in support of Cagney and Joan Blondell, numbering among others Ruby Keeler, Stanley Smith, Hugh Herbert, Frank McHugh, Arthur Hohl, Claire Dodd, Herman Bing, Paul Porcasi and Guy Kibbee.

Cagney, a hoofer, is made jobless by the coming of talkies. He ties up with a couple of fellows to produce prologues along the Roxy, Grauman, Fanchon-Marco line. The partners trick Cagney, steal his ideas and generally leave him holding the sack with typical Cagney reactions.

He finally makes the grade by producing a gigantic spectacle which, conceived and directed by Busby Berkeley, promises to be one of the most spectacular sequences ever incorporated in a picture. About 150 girls are included in the spectacle, which is shot in a big tank and features some new swimming-dance numbers that should have the patrons talking for months. So closely are Warner Bros. guarding the secret of this feature that no one is permitted on the set.

Comedy, mainly set in theatrical offices, predominates the Manuel Seff-James Seymour screen play which is being directed by Lloyd Bacon and Berkeley. The show looks to be pretentious and glamorous, with Cagney delivering the possibilities in both script and action.

THE DELUGE

Radio-KBS

In this picture, mechanical effects are of much more importance than either story or cast. Based on S. Fowler Wright's book of the same title, "The Deluge," in the John Goodrich Warren Duff screen play, directed by Felix E. Feist, narrates the imaginary destruction of the world. Miniatures by Ned Mann; Russell Lawson and Richard Cosgrove actually make the yarn. For showmanship purposes, the production values are of apparently much more importance than the cast, which includes Peggy Shannon, Lois Wilson, Sidney Blackmer, Matt Moore, Fred Kohler, Ralf Harolde, Edward Van Sleen and Samuel Hind.

In New York Peggy Shannon is about to start an around-Manhattan swim. News begins to trickle in that the world has been struck by a great disaster; the population is in panic. Earthquakes sink the Coast into the Pacific; the Great Lakes and the Gulf submerge the Middlewest; Europe has disappeared. New York alone seems to have escaped. Then the storm strikes. Winds and earthquakes topple skyscrapers. A tidal wave finishes the job. In the meantime, Blackmer has landed on an island, where Kohler and Harolde are fighting over Peggy. Martin protects her from the surviving Kohler. Falling in love, believing his own wife and family wiped out, they were rescued by Moore and brought to an island where Helen and the children are alive. The dramatic triangle ensues with Clair finally making the sacrifice, swimming away to leave Martin with his family.

Thrill of a different, imagination-stirring kind is the backbone of this show. The romance is ordinary; the mechanical effects and excitement engendered by disasters give it the novelty that predestines it as one of the most unusually spectacular films of the year.

RED MEAT

First National

This yarn has all the earmarks of being the "Silver Dollar" of the packing industry. The Charles Kenyon-Sidney Sutherland screen play is based on a story by David Karsner, who authored "Silver Dollar," and is directed by Al Green, who made that picture. Edward G. Robinson and Kay Francis are starred; the supporting cast includes Genevieve Tobin, Robert Barratt, Robert McWade, J. Farrell MacDonald, Henry Kolker and Paul Porcasi among the better known names.

Powerfully dramatic in conception and presentation, "Red Meat" is the story of an idealistic, artistic man (Robinson), who is pitchforked into running a big packing industry upon the death of his father. In the story of his career he metamorphoses into a hard-boiled, avaricious, ruthless business man, whose only soft spot is a love for the grand opera singer, Kay Francis.

Supplementing the Robinson action, which is as atmospheric as the title, one of the big features is the President Theodore Roosevelt prosecution of the notorious Spanish War tainted meat scandals that concentrated such terrific interest on old Chicago packing house methods and resulted in such great reforms.

Lichtenstein Dead on Coast

I. H. Lichtenstein, pioneer of the industry in the west, died at the home of a daughter in Los Angeles last week. He was president of the Western Poster Company, San Francisco, for years.

MOST SECTIONS TURNING ON DOUBLES

That a distinct sentiment against the double bill is predominant throughout the country is evidenced by reports from all sections. In many places bans against them are going into effect immediately, notably in Milwaukee. By the time the new selling season gets actively under way, it is expected that most sections will have shown a decided preference for running only one feature at a time. A detailed resume, by city, follows:

Alhambra Houses Ban Dual Bills

After a period of hectic argument over single billing and price cutting, the eight theatres in Alhambra, Cal., have agreed to end double features. They have also agreed on a minimum price of 20 cents for second-runs and 25 cents for first-runs.

Doubles Not a Problem

Double featuring in the Atlanta territory never has been a problem. The practice has been followed in only a few isolated cases and the same is true in Florida, in no instance in key cities.

Baltimore Against Duals

Exhibitors in Baltimore are generally against double feature programs, except in several small theatres in the residential sections.

Birmingham Drops Doubles

Five theatres recently signed agreements not to run double features and it is understood a number of other houses have signed. Only one downtown house has not participated. Leading first-runs never have shown them. Several second and subsequent run houses recently have added vaudeville to replace one of the features of the screen bill.

Buffalo Trend Toward Singles

Though all first-runs in Buffalo have been double-featuring for two years, the trend is now toward elimination. Shea's Hippodrome, the last downtown theatre to adopt twin bills, has discarded them in favor of more pretentious films at popular prices. Many neighborhood houses have experimented with one picture and have found no falling-off at the box-office, first consideration in the trend toward normal shows.

Chicago Bans Duals

Chicago, once the hot-bed of double features, shook off the twin bill yoke more than a year ago and exhibitors generally have been satisfied. The elimination of double features has resulted in a marked increase in the number of shorts, and theatres are giving much newspaper space to them.

Speeds Dual Move

To speed elimination of double features and to boost price scales, Cleveland has been divided into 10 districts, each of which will determine upon a plan of action. Nat Wolf, Warner theatre zone manager, recently said all his theatres play single features with assorted short subjects and that business generally has been improved. Many houses, however, are still continuing the policy.

Exhibitors are unanimous in condemning the double feature policy now in general practice locally. Meetings of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association have been held within the past month in an effort to eliminate duals by a gradual process of reducing the number shown over a period of weeks, after which further reductions will be made until they are entirely eliminated.

Columbus Against Doubles

Except for a few isolated spots, double featuring is not practiced to a very great extent in the southern Ohio and Columbus territory. Exhibitors generally, though saying such a policy has a tendency to increase patronage, are not committed to it because it increases overhead out of proportion to the additional revenue derived, and it prevents quick audience turnover. In some spots, however, dual bills continue as in the case of Loew's Columbus Broad, on a full week basis, and the RKO Majestic, four weekly on a split week policy. Independent theatres have formulated a tentative agreement with the first-runs to ban duals, effective July 15, provided all exhibitors shall have become a party to the pact by that time. Under this agreement it is proposed to limit dual features to one day a week, Sundays excepted, and two bills for the price of one are to be discontinued. Subsequent run exhibitors are not to show double features under any circumstances and agree to eliminate all previews unless as a special performance where the regular admission scale is charged. Columbus is the only Ohio city in which double-featuring has been practiced to this competitive extent.

Duals Continue in Des Moines

Theatres in Des Moines are continuing double featuring and several houses have sent reports to home offices showing substantial profits. The Paramount last week reported a 40 per cent increase with a double bill.

Duals Regular Practice

The nationwide trend toward elimination of doubles has not yet been felt in Detroit. It is a regular practice in all but the big downtown houses, although until recently, the Michigan, Publix first-run, was double-billing in lieu of stage shows. Allied has carried on a stiff fight against the double feature.

Singles Losing on Coast

On the Coast several theatres have closed their doors because of a drop in patronage since the elimination of double-billing in California. Independents lined up en masse against the single policy; affiliated theatres and major producers reported great improvement since the elimination of duals. Many sources have reported an increase of business amounting to 40 per cent for those houses running under the single feature policy. The market for short subjects is reported to have increased materially.

Many theatres in the Los Angeles area are appealing in vain to the Film Board to keep theatres in line on single features by "policing."

No Duals in Houston

Houston never has had the double feature problem. The one first-run exception was the RKO theatre with doubling in two of its pictures, a policy which the company adopted throughout the country for those two films.

Move To End Duals

Indianapolis exhibitors named a committee of local exhibitors to develop a plan of zoning so that any exhibitor using double features will be set back in playing dates. This plan is also in use in Chicago and throughout Minnesota.

Exhibitor Regulation Fails

Exhibitor regulation of double features has failed in Kansas City and the practice is firmly entrenched. Most exhibitors in Kansas City and Missouri territory are said to be averse to double featuring and excuse their continuance of it by saying they are forced to overbuy and that double billing is the only available outlet. Short subjects are generally regarded as an important part of any program. In Kansas City double billing is confined to two downtown "grind" houses and to all subsequent and suburban theatres with the exception of two Fox neighborhood houses of the de luxe type. Early in June two first-run theatres experimented with the double bill successfully.

Louisville Has No Problem

The only Louisville first-run house showing double features is the Brown, which on Friday nights, at the conclusion of its regular week's run, provides patrons with a preview of the Saturday picture. This makes for better than normal Friday night attendance. Otherwise the double feature program is chiefly confined to suburban houses, in combination with two-for-one admission attractions on other nights.

Duals Invade Miami

Miami's first double feature bill was offered at the Rex two weeks ago. It was in the nature of an experiment.

Milwaukee Ends Duals

Double-featuring in Milwaukee county officially was ended this week, with over two-thirds of the exhibitors declaring themselves opposed to the practice. Directors of the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan have been striving for over two months to set up a uniform zoning and protection plan for Milwaukee county. With the dual bill policy fairly firmly entrenched in a dozen of the larger cities of Wisconsin the short subject has been having a pretty hard road to travel. Practically all second-run houses in Milwaukee and on many occasions a first-run had been playing double bills from time to time. Now, however, with a definite ban in Milwaukee, exchanges have voiced the hope that other cities will follow Milwaukee's lead and terminate the practice. Sixty Milwaukee theatres are participating in the dropping of duals.

Doubles End in Jersey

Elimination of duals, to be accompanied by an increase in admissions, is planned for all Warner theatres in New Jersey. Approximately 40 houses will be affected.

New Orleans Divided

Double-featuring has its champions and opponents in New Orleans, evenly divided. The Saenger theatres do not double feature nor does Loew's State. Several other first-run theatres which inaugurated double billing a few months ago found it profitable.

Duals Firm in Omaha

While double-featuring is on the wane in many key cities, the dual policy is as firmly entrenched in Omaha as it is in Kansas City. The latest first-run theatre to fall in line is the Orpheum under management of A. H. Blank. For the past year double features have admittedly "clicked" at the World, also a Blank house. The consensus is that the majority of film product cannot stand alone.

Doubles Frowned On

The double feature idea has been frowned on consistently in the Philadelphia territory. The Stanley-Warner circuit does not use it, and the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania,

Says Nazis Oppose Political Pictures

ductions, are dead against the so called political or patriotic film or films, which have the glorification of the Nazi movement or its ideals for a subject.

Several producers who submitted such manuscripts to the censor for his O.K. were quite clearly told that such films were not desired and would not be passed by the censor if made, unless they can actually be called valuable from an artistic point of view.

At the beginning of the year several so called patriotic films had been started to be made and have now been released or are being released shortly. These were largely passed by the censor in order to avoid losses or in the one or other instance bankruptcy of the producer.

My firm, for instance, wanted to produce together with Ariel (Harry Piel) "The Life of Von Richthofen." Udet was supposed to be the star. Ariel advertised this picture in the Film Kurier, as production being started shortly. Piel was, however, told personally that for the moment such a film was undesirable but that perhaps next year there may be a chance that the censor would give his O.K. to it.

I enclose copy of a page from the Film Kurier No. 140 of June 17th and of the Lichtbildbühne No. 141 of the same date for your kind perusal. Similar articles have appeared the last few weeks in these and other trade and daily papers.

As a matter of fact these official warnings are justified by the poor box-office receipts of these socalled patriotic films.

When I read the article in Motion Picture Herald, I thought that it might interest you to hear the true facts direct from Germany. One thing is quite certain and that is the German people have never felt so secure and seen such order and quietness for the last 10 years, as we can observe and enjoy now.

I can assure you that the whole film trade including the Jewish elements, who are still in the trade, agree with us that it was high time that certain elements who brought the whole German film trade in disregard to foreign buyers, have now left the country. You know me well enough that I would not say such a thing if I did not think that I could tell you the actual truth. I would rather not write about such a subject at all. I am, of course, quite aware that also a few men have left with an absolute clean shirt, but these are only a few and I feel convinced that we will soon see those people back again at work.

The article in Film Kurier of June 17, to which Mr. Heubsch refers, says, under the heading "New Film-Credit Bank Working":

The new German Film-Credit-Bank, recently organized under co-operation of the Government, the film industry and the big banks, has commenced its activities at the headquarters of the "Spio," Berlin W 35, Bendlerstrasse 33. The board of supervising directors has appointed Dr. Reicherts as manager of the enterprise. Another executive director is to be appointed in the near future, while Dr. Paetel was engaged as assistant manager.

The purpose of the bank is the financing of the German film production and to place the entire industry on a financially sound basis.

The following conditions must be fulfilled by the applicants for production loans: The producer turns over to the bank his complete scenario and continuity with all rights thereto. He also submits satisfactory proofs for the fact that a suitable cast is at his disposal. He also proves that he has made a renting contract for the film or films in question with a German renting firm or that the closing of such contract is assured.

All partners to every contract closed with the bank must belong to an organization which holds membership in the "Spio" (central organization of the German film industry).

Credits will be granted on the basis of a finance agreement in which the producers of raw stock, the renters of recording apparatus, the studio renters and the laboratories are participants. By means of co-operation between these parties, the producer will be given a credit of 70% of the amount needed for his production. The remaining 30% he has to provide for himself.

The moneys for this system of financing will be obtained on drafts from the Dresdner Bank, the German Bank, the Reichskredit-Gesellschaft and the Commerz and Privat-Bank. These banks have, for the beginning, set aside the amount of 10 million marks for film ventures of this sort.

In each case of granted credits, the bank will appoint especially trained trustees for the control of the amounts expended during production and those returning from the renting establishments. These trustees are to take active part in the production management so that the producer will not only save salary payments but also will be reasonably sure that, under the collaboration of trained experts, he will avoid every possible waste during actual production.

Scenario Advisory Board Busy

An interesting report on the activities of the Scenario Advisory bureau of the German film authorities is given by Martin Cremer, the chief of this new institution. According to this report, Mr. Cremer has read not less than 798 scenarios and continuities during the past two months, on which the bureau had to pass its decision. The film industry, i.e. the producers, had handed in only 76 manuscripts, the balance was submitted by "authors" of every kind, old, experienced film novelists and writers as well as shop girls, factory workers and tailors.

One need not be astonished, therefore, that of this latter class of scenarios 530 were rejected and only 107 passed, while of the total of manuscripts submitted by the film firms, 50 were passed and only 8 rejected, the balance being still under consideration.

These figures prove that the advisory bureau is working under full steam. Although only a small percentage of the scenarios submitted has been passed, the selected continuities would still be sufficient for a very large part of the coming German production.

It is interesting to note that amongst the submitted scenarios only a very limited number deals with political or patriotic themes. One has learned to recognize that it is very difficult to make a really good political film. The experiences made by the advisory board are fully bearing out the justification of the frequent warnings of the Government to avoid the production of films of this nature as much as possible.

Producers using the scenarios passed by the advisory bureau can be reasonably sure to run no risks in regard to final censorship, as long as the studio execution is not contradictory to the spirit of the continuity.

Supreme Plans New Trailers

Supreme Screen Service plans early announcement of a new group of trailer subjects, indicative of the company's belief that lengthy trailers defeat their own purpose, causing annoyance on the part of audiences. The company announces a deal is now pending with a major circuit.

Seeks Circuit Bankruptcy

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy has been filed in federal court in Tampa, Fla., against Peninsular Theatres, Inc., by Universal Pictures Corporation.

Houses Returning To Single Feature

Southern Jersey and Delaware, attack the idea vigorously at every appearance. Less than ten per cent are using dual programs.

Exhibitors Against Duals

The Portland, Ore., Motion Picture Club, composed of representative exhibitors and exchangemen, decided that double featuring would be a downward step. Practically no first or second run theatres are using them, and a few of the smaller houses blame block booking for the practice.

Providence For Doubles

"Where can we get the most for our money," is the slogan of theatregoers in Providence, and the Paramount and Majestic theatres, both first-runs, call the double feature a necessity. Long programs are in order as the industrial and collegiate population likes plenty of product for its 40-cent admission.

Virginia Immune from Duals

The state of Virginia has been free from the double feature. Many Virginia exhibitors, particularly those in Richmond, have declared themselves as opposed not only to duals, but to short subjects as well. Some will not run anything more than a newsreel beside the feature picture.

Move Fails in St. Louis

Double-featuring continues in St. Louis despite the efforts of Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, to end it. Mr. Wehrenberg has said that all the 49 independent exhibitors in this section, the receivers for the St. Louis Amusement Co., and the Skouras Brothers would be willing to eliminate duals, but that Warner Bros., owner of the Capitol and Lyric theatres, has refused to come into line. Warners contends that until the Missouri courts finally dispose of the receivership suits against the St. Louis Amusement Co. and Skouras Brothers Enterprises, both of which are controlled by Warners, the company will not be able to take any steps. Outside of St Louis, comparatively few double bills are presented by exhibitors.

Duals Denounced

Circuit theatres in Salt Lake City and a few other large theatres denounce the double feature bill, which is, however, adhered to by smaller houses.

No Foothold in San Antonio

While double bills have been given periodical tryouts in San Antonio, they never have managed to get a foothold. A few second runs show two features occasionally.

Ready for Duals Ban

The double feature plan seems to have but few friends in San Francisco, although a large percentage of theatres build their programs around the idea. Houses of the largest capacity, including the Fox, feature double bills, as well as houses of less than 300 capacity. Exhibitors have declared themselves but everyone is waiting for someone else to make the first move.

Seattle Falls in Line

Seattle exhibitors generally are falling in line with the nationwide attitude on double features. First runs have abolished the dual feature program entirely.

Tampa Situation

The double feature program is used in Tampa almost exclusively by second-run houses, and according to box-office reports they are more appreciated by the public than the single feature.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 180.—(A) What dangers are set up by "boosting" fuses? (B) Is fuse boosting justifiable under any conditions. (C) What should govern the fusing of ordinary circuits? (D) What two things must govern the fusing of motor circuits, and what provision for excess fuse capacity do underwriters' rules make in the matter of motor circuits?

Answer to Question No. 173

Bluebook School Question No. 173 was: (A) From what material is the best port fire shutter made? (B) What, in your opinion, provides the best and really the only protection from panic in motion picture theatres? (C) Give us your own idea as to how port shutters should be fused, and where the fuses should be located. (D) In a properly ventilated projection room having good port shutters so fused that they will fall automatically within one second of the starting of any film fire are audiences in danger from a film fire? (E) Can such a system be installed without prohibitive cost?

The number and excellence of acceptable answers were a surprise. From what I have seen in the matter of port shutter fusing, I had expected a considerable drop, but the following know what is best (let us hope they use it):

S. Evans and C. Rau; Dale Danielson; G. E. Doe; J. Wentworth; K. Dowling; W. Ostrum; T. Van Vaulkenburg; E. Parkenson; H. Edwards; J. W. Morrison; R. K. Wayland; L. VanBuskirk; B. Doe; O. Garling and B. Diglah; G. Lombard and J. Ahrenson; G. L. Grimes; T. L. Shelton and M. H. Sanders; A. E. Wyatt; D. N. Peters; B. R. Compton and B, Gaitsley; D. Donahue and L. Peterson; A. Bailey; R. L. Henderson; D. L. Solomon and P. Hadley; R. Sanders; M. Compton, L. N. Galley and D. E. Ellis; M. L. Wright; G. N. Wrail; P. N. Pundray; W. D. Adamson and L. Simmons; H. D. Cylor; G. E. Eddy and D. J. Bullett; T. D. Cudmore and J. L. Richards; J. L. Major and D. B. Bates; S. G. Goss and P. Lambert; T. R. Schultz; D. L. Bentley; R. D. Grimes and A. Lomberg; J. S. Henderson; L. S. Marksley and J. S. Bischoff; M. N. Daniels; L. I. Trigley; G. G. Breston; G. Ackerson and P. L. Talley; M. R. Jackson; B. T. Daniels; H. D. Davis; L. L. Lang; R. Dinmat and P. L. Algy; H. Steele and T. Potter; N. S. Darby and L. Thompson; D. Johnson and A. Lomberg; T. L. Shelton; D. U. Tomms, P. L. Mangan and G. Davis; M. R. Winning and N. Daniels; L. R. Toli and B. I. Summers; D. Lilley and G. Thompson; P. W. Edwards; G. M. Marksley; T. and M. S. O'Brien; M. R. Cass; G. M. Johnson; G. C. Hendrie and B. T. Sampson; H. B. Jenkins; H. M. Evans; M. Donahue; D. Holler and B. Ilers; T. R. MacAllen; N. Gault; F. O. Olliver; L. and C. D. Dodson; N. D. Sailer; P. W. Edwards; H. D. Schofield; F. D. Samuels.

We will let M. R. Jackson tell us about Section A. He says: "Port fire shutter material must have certain characteristics, namely: first, it must not be subject to warping or twisting out of perfectly flat shape or form; second, it must have sufficient weight to insure closure, even in spite of some possible slight binding (binding, of course, should not be, but 'things happen' in even the best regulated theatres); third, it must, of course, be able to resist the action of both heat and flame."

"Of materials most fully complying with these specifications, asbestos mill board and iron come first. Which may be selected makes little difference, provided each be of correct thickness. Asbestos millboard should be three-eighths of an inch thick. Iron plate should be not less than one-eighth of an inch thick. Three-sixteenths of an inch is, perhaps, somewhat to be preferred because of the added stiffness and weight and less possibility of warping under heat. If iron be selected, then it should fall upon shredded asbestos packed into the lower groove—this in order to deaden the sound of the fall."

(B) There were many excellent answers to this one, but I believe G. E. Doe has covered the matter a bit the best. He says, "Prevention of knowledge that a fire is in progress, which may be accomplished by instantaneous closing of the port shutters and providing for means of removal of smoke and gas as fast as it is formed by combustion. Thus an audience sees no evidence of fire and cannot know one is in progress."

(C) This section was, through oversight, a practical duplication of Section C, Question 172, which see.

(D) Lester Van Buskirk voices the opinion of every one by saying, "With a fireproof projection room equipped in accordance with the question as set forth, audiences would be in no danger whatsoever."

(E) S. Evans and C. Rau say, "Such a system may be installed without prohibitive cost. In fact it may be done very cheaply by means of a system of cords alone, the same containing proper fuses; or by a combination of an iron bar or rod and cords." To which Van Vaulkenburg adds, "Any man worthy of the title projectionist can, by consulting the Bluebook and using his brains, install such a system and do so at insignificant cost."

NOTE THESE CORRECTIONS

In F. H. Richardson's Comment, on pages 29 and 31, of the July 1*st issue of Better Theatres, there were two printers' errors which have probably caused readers a certain amount of confusion. These corrections will enable them to read properly the passages involved.*

At the bottom of the second column on page 29, a line of type was dropped in making a correction, so that the article does not continue properly to the next page. The entire passage should have read, ". . . . second, the breaking of the 'stick' circuit to any relay located to the right in the circuit; and, third, the connecting of the proper photocell output to the amplifier input."

On page 31, the second paragraph from the bottom of the single column appears as a part of the article, "Wire Heating and Dry Cell Design," due to an accidental elimination of several lines of type, including a heading and a short paragraph. This paragraph, together with the several that follow it (continuing over to page 32), refers to a recent meeting of the New York Section of the S. M. P. E.

'SOME DAY PRODUCER WILL WAKE UP'

PLEADS FOR FILMS OF RURAL LIFE

To the Editor of the Herald:

I note with considerable alarm that the producers are already planning to grind out just as many pictures next season as ever before. I believe both the producer and the exhibitor could profit greatly by a much diminished production. The only increase we need is in the production of pictures concerning small town and rural life—"simple stories about simple people!"

According to the last census, slightly more than one-half of all the people in the United States live in towns under 2,500 population, or on the farm. Scarcely a dozen pictures a year, of this type, are being produced. "State Fair" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" would qualify in this class, and are they box office! Some day, one (or more) of the producers will wake up, and produce a group of "rural" shows that will be a God-send to the producer, the exhibitor, and to the patron in all towns, large and small.

I expect to agitate along these lines for the next 20 or 30 years, if necessary. If a few hundred more exhibitors will do the same thing, perhaps we can accomplish something.—L. V. Bergtold, Manager, Opera House, Kasson, Minn.

FAN MAGAZINES AND AUDIENCES

To the Editor of the Herald:

The writer has been continuously an exhibitor of motion pictures since 1908 and for the past few years I have noticed quite a difference in the attitude of the general public toward pictures as well as a general falling off in the attendance of children.

Many good reasons are advanced for this condition, which is growing more alarming every day, but I believe there is one reason which has been generally overlooked, at least I have not heard it discussed, and that that reason is the socalled fan magazine. There are many of them filling the news stands and no doubt you are familiar with them.

For instance, I wish to call your attention to the June number of "Broadway and Hollywood Movies," and the story published therein entitled "What Price Decency?"

I am merely mentioning this particular item as an example; there are many such magazines and many such stories published. These have a wide circulation and tend to create a wrong impression of motion pictures and we can't blame conscientious mothers and dads for keeping the kids away from the theatre.

In addition to the fan magazines, we have criticisms on the pictures in daily newspapers and such magazines as Liberty which possibly may be well meant but there is entirely too much of it fed to the public, pictures providing good entertainment are often poorly rated and the public goes shopping only for the socalled four-star pictures.

I believe any exhibitor will agree that the attendances at the theatres have become rather irregular and spotty and while the depression has something to do with this, we cannot overlook the fact that the public now knows entirely too much in advance through the critics and fan magazines, and some of the general impressions they get are entirely wrong, tending to keep them away from average pictures which provide good entertainment.

There are of course a lot of really poor pictures made, but not so many as one might be led to think, and with the great number of fine short subjects, etc., which are available today it is possible to give the public a fine two-hour or even longer show even if the feature is not rated at four-star.

Personally I feel that the motion picture industry could get along nicely without the fan magazine.—John Guthrie, Guthrie and Majestic Theatres, Grove City, Pa.

ELIMINATIONS AND THE CODE

To the Editor of the Herald:

Bearing out all of the statements and arguments contained in your editorial "That Other Code," in last week's Herald, I submit below just a few of the eliminations made by the Ohio Censor Board last week:

1. Eliminate episode where couple are seated on settee and girl is singing—"In my cerebellum I feel a biological urge, etc.," and the man is singing—" . . . I feel in favor of a merger down the Old Ox Road." Eliminate speech where J and girl open closed door and look in and girl screams.

2. Eliminate following remark made by girl in classroom—"You can learn much more in an automobile than you can in a four-year course."

3. Eliminate following sung by girl—"With my biologic urge, I'd incorporate and merge, if 'twere only to perpetuate his kind."

4. Eliminate action of H presumably slapping girl on rear, back to counter. Also eliminate accompanying dialogue: Girl—"Hey, who do you call that?" H—"The Greeks hada worda for it." Eliminate line by H—"They didn't call it promenading when I was a boy." Eliminate line by girl—"If you're going to be good, who wants you?"

5. Eliminate following remark by man in reference to his number of children—"Father, you always wanted me to be ambitious," and reply by father—"Yes, but you overdid it."

6. Eliminate remarks: "It's nice work if you can get it." "Yeah, these stairs are killing me."

7. Eliminate remark by man at bar—"I'd say that J is handing out another of her souvenirs." Eliminate speech—"I've seen everything and I've done everything, eh, J?" Eliminate underlined words—"I'll accept your offer if you make it your room."

As you state, the screen dramatization of filth, vulgarity and obscenity has added nothing to the earnings at the box office.

Your article well points out that more than three years ago the industry professed to adopt a code pertaining to the production of pictures. As I can hardly believe that this code was adopted without the sanction of the leaders of the industry, it must be assumed that the latter are just as much to blame for violations of the code as are those who are directly responsible for the production of the objectionable pictures.

What we need in this business more than anything else is someone vested with sufficient authority who will be obeyed when he says "Thou shalt not."—P. J. Wood, Columbus, Ohio.

DRIVING OUT PATRONAGE

To the Editor of the Herald:

Reading in your columns the many protestations on the present method of making motion pictures, I find myself heartily in accord with many of these complaints.

The question is often asked, "What is the matter with show business?"

In my mind the producers will soon have us all wiped up.

They are driving the patronage from the theatre.

The maternal question is now being injected into mostly every picture that is produced.

In the minds of these producers, the public has degenerated to the level of animals.

The younger class is being kept away from the theatre through fear of being embarrassed and insulted by the constant use of such phrases as: "My wife is having a baby," "She can't, she's having a baby," and many other such unnecessary comments. These remarks have divorced the theatre almost entirely from the young people trade who formerly attended by couples or in crowds.

If there was any comedy, drama or some kind of entertainment derived from the use of such common remarks there might be some justifiable reason for the use of these phrases.

It might be that the producers come from the animal kingdom so dominated by the jackass that they hope to degenerate the minds of the later generation to their level. At least they are keeping many of the young generation away from the theatre through fear, and the older ones stay away through disgust.

A lady upon leaving the theatre the other day remarked that "The last four pictures she had seen had something unnecessary about a baby. I often hear the young girls say that they are almost afraid to attend a theatre with a young man for fear of being embarrassed. They are killing the show-business."

I have never favored censorship, believing the public capable of censoring their own amusements, and more than ever I now see that I have been right in my contention. They have about censored the theatre out of business through their non-attendance.

If the producers have become so calloused that thay have lost all sense of decency and respect for the public taste it is high time the exhibitor rise up and demand a strict censorship for the protection of the theatre as well as theatre-goers.—W. J. Wilke, Liberty Theatre, Graham, Texas.

309 FEATURES FROM SIX COMPANIES; PLAN TO START SEASONS IN JANUARY

Increase of 17 Pictures Over This Season Shown by Same Distributors; Decentralizing and Business Activity Factors

The second week of sales conventions of motion picture distributors brought to market an additional group of 102 features from Fox and Columbia, thereby increasing to 309 the total number of features scheduled by six large companies for 1933-34. This compares with 292 productions distributed by the same companies this season. The increase is notable because of previous discussions looking to curtailed production. Widened market possibilities as a result of decentralization of exhibition and a belief that all theatres shortly will benefit from improvements in the nation's business, influenced the increase.

At the same time, executives of the large companies took under advisement a preliminary plan to change the motion picture season to conform with the calendar year, releasing the first feature each year on January 1. If adopted, the idea would not be made effective until January, 1935.

Sales conventions were held during the week by Fox Films and by Columbia, and immediately the sales men of both companies joined those in the field of MGM, Paramount, Radio and Universal, in a highly competitive campaign to dispose of the new group of features and shorts. A comparison of releases scheduled by these companies follows:

SERIALS: 1932-33, Radio 1; Universal, 5. 1933-34, Universal, 5.

NEWSREELS: Each distributor, excepting Columbia, releases 104 newsreel issues annually.

An increase in production schedules of some 100 one-reel subjects above the current season was reported to have been prompted by the movement to terminate double bills, thus widening the market for all types of shorts. The distributors, however, evidently feel there will be more room next season for one-reelers than for two. Only United Artists and Warners are still to hold conventions. United Artists will meet July 17; Warners has not set a date.

MPPDA Members Discuss Changing Season

Some of the distributor members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America are said to be in accord with a proposal to change the film season to conform to the calendar year, a plan which has been the subject of much discussion at recent meetings in New York. Because of the banking situation which interfered with all businesses in the spring, the companies postponed this year's sales conventions from the usual May period, to July 1, thereby delaying the actual sales season two or three months. The new plan would be worked out through a similar mutual understanding among all MPPDA distributors. Instead of holding sales conventions in May and June, as heretofore, launching industrywide sales activities during the summer, with actual marketing commencing on September 1, the new idea would have meetings in September, with sales drives in the autumn and actual releasing starting January 1.

Principal reasons for such a change are said to be the advantages offered by selling during the livelier fall periods, instead of in the summer when business generally is uncertain at best. It also was pointed out that the present system is predicated on the old legitimate theatre idea, which is no longer applicable to the motion picture theatre because cooling systems now bridge the summer gap. Widespread use of cooling systems, and other factors in exhibition have resulted in keeping most of the country's large runs and the majority of other houses open during the summer.

Distributors Holding Out Releases

Convention announcements of new product during the week by Fox and Columbia detailed a definite number of titles and also a group untitled, in keeping with the new trend to withhold a number of feature selections in order to select the most timely subjects later. About 35 per cent of all pictures scheduled by the six companies which have held sales conventions to date, have not been determined. Another possible effect seen is the lessening of substitution difficulties with exhibitors. The

New product scheduled by MGM, Paramount, Radio and Universal was reported on last week in MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Additional new plans of distributors for 1933-34 and sales and convention activities of the week follow:

Alco Productions

Series of six one-reelers, "Secrets of the Hands," written by Dr. Wm. G. Benham, character analyst, will be made in New York at Fox studio, for independent distribution.

Allied

"One Year Later," was placed in work as the first of four features for 1933-34, E. Mason Hopper directing.

Animated Pictures

Ub Iwerks' company will produce two new cartoon series. Animated makes "Flip the Frog," for current Metro release.

British International

Columbia

The annual sales convention began Monday at Atlantic City, where the company announced 48 features, 26 two-reelers, seven series of one-reelers. The features:

SALES FORCES LAUNCH NEW SELLING SEASON AFTER FOX-EDUCATIONAL CONVENTION

FOX LIST INCREASED FROM 48 TO 54

Sidney R. Kent, as president of Fox Film Corporation, appeared late last week before the exhibitors of the country with the most ambitious program ever arranged for the company, embracing 54 features, 50 short subjects and 118 one and two-reelers from Educational Pictures, E. W. Hammons, president. Truman H. Talley's Movietone News, 104 issues, will be continued under its present policy.

John D. Clark, general manager of distribution, led some 225 members of the distribution division, both from home office and the field, to the Ambassador hotel in Atlantic City, where a three-day sales convention was held, beginning last Thursday morning, to discuss plans and policies, product and personalities in connection with the marketing of the combined Fox-Educational program for 1933-34.

Authors and playwrights of prize-winning novels and stage productions were announced as recruits to write or adapt the new product, much of which is the work of famous writers, principally J. B. Priestley, Rachel Crothers, Kathleen Norris, Peter B. Kyne, I. A. R. Wylie, James Gould Cozzens, John Balderston, Zane Grey, Will James, Alfred Savior, Margaret Kennedy, Richard Aldington, Preston Sturges, A. C. Cronin, Earl Derr Biggers, and others.

Increasing Features by Six

Increasing its feature output by six productions, the company outlined at the convention some 43 titles out of the scheduled 54. The difference will be made up during the season. The withholding of 11 titles is in keeping with the trend to select subjects of timely interest as they develop during the season.

Mr. Kent announced to the delegates the appointment of Charles B. Cochran, noted London theatrical producer, and Archibald Selwyn, well known American producer, as associate producers for Fox. Both Mr. Selwyn and Mr. Cochran will continue their activities in the theatre here and abroad in association with Fox. Winfield Sheehan, vice-president in charge of production, will come to New York shortly for conferences with Mr. Selwyn. Both will then travel to London for an exchange of ideas with Mr. Cochran, and to survey the field of Continental plays and players. The three will later go to Hollywood to observe actual production methods at the Movietone City. Both new associates will work with D. A. Doran, Fox story head, in searching for new talent and plays.

Jesse L. Lasky, independent producer, will contribute six features to the Fox program in 1933-34. Sol M. Wurtzel will supervise 20 and Al Rockett, 10. Three produced abroad by British Gaumont, and supervised by Erich Pommer, are included in the new group.

The company will concentrate heavier than ever before on star product, having already lined up Janet Gaynor for three, likewise James Dunn and Sally Eilers. Lilian Harvey will star in four; Henry Garat, in two musicals. The complete star roster for Fox's 1933-34 features includes:

Pictures for 1933-34

Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter, Clara Bow, Lilian Harvey, Henry Garat, Leslie Howard, Heather Angel, Sally Eilers, John Boles, Spencer Tracy, Colleen Moore, Marian Nixon, Elissa Landi, Lew Ayres, Norman Foster, James Dunn, Victor Jory, Myrna Loy, Adolphe Menjou, Henrietta Crosman, Henry Stephenson, Harvey Stephens, Preston Foster, Raul Roulien, Mimi Jordan, Warner Oland, Sid Silvers, Zasu Pitts, Madeleine Carroll, George O'Brien, Beryl Mercer, El Brendel, Herbert Mundin, Jessie Matthews, Louise Dresser, Conrad Veidt, Herbert Marshall, Philip Merivale.

The forthcoming pictures for 1933-34, will include:

"Pilgrimage," by I. A. R. Wylie, with Henrietta Crosman, Marian Nixon, Norman Foster, Heather Angel; directed by John Ford.

"My Lips Betray," Lilian Harvey's first starring picture in America, with John Boles and El Brendel; directed by John Blystone.

"Life's Worth Living," adaptation of "The Last Adam," by James Gould Cozzens, starring Will Rogers, featuring Louise Dresser, Vera Allen, Marian Nixon and Ralph Morgan; directed by John Ford.

"Berkeley Square," John Balderston's play, featuring Leslie Howard, Heather Angel, Valerie Taylor, Irene Browne; directed by Frank Lloyd.

Sales Policy Unchanged

The Fox sales policy for the 1933-34 season will remain unchanged, according to John D. Clark, general manager of distribution, who has instructed the field force to follow the same lines pursued during the season now reaching its close. Percentage deals will be closed whenever feasible and the salesmen were told that the ideal contract, in situations where the complete lineup of 54 pictures is sold, would be to sell a minimum of 16 on percentage and guarantees and the remainder flat.

Herman Wobber, Pacific Coast representative, announced plans for a Sidney R. Kent drive to get under way in September and to run 13 weeks.

Declaring that Fox's skies are now clearing, Mr. Kent on Friday told the convention that when he took over the presidency of the company last April he was faced with 75 major problems. Now, he said, there is only one remaining. He did not, however, make specific mention of this one problem, but it was generally thought at the time to be the reorganization plan of the company. The 75 major problems covered indebtedness involved in purchase of various companies here and abroad and law suits. Mr. Kent dealt specifically on three of them in order to show the magnitude of the difficulties confronted.

One of the three problems was the British-Gaumont situation, for which the company paid $20,000,000 for a 45 per cent interest. The theatre situation in which Fox became involved in Australia to the extent of $4,500,000 is now well in hand, Mr. Kent told the delegates. He also spoke of the internal factors in the Fox West Coast receivership.

Mr. Kent said that Fox now has in the bank $1,750,000 and would emerge with no debts and no bank loans.

Educational Well Represented

Educational was represented at the Fox convention by a group headed by E. W. Hammons, its president, who addressed the convention; Jack H. Skirball, general sales manager, and Sol R. Edwards, assistant sales manager. The following district managers were also in attendance:

J. J. Scully, Boston; David Dubin, Chicago; G. C. Blumenthal, San Francisco; Joseph Kaliski, Atlanta; H. R. Skirboll, Cleveland; J. A. Bachman, Philadelphia; Harlan Starr, Detroit; Gordon S. White, director of advertising and publicity, and Harvey Day, special sales representative, completed the group.

Fox's 272 short subjects will include 104 semi-weekly issues of Fox Movietone News; 26 reels of the Magic Carpet travel series, 12 reels of "Adventure of the Newsreel Cameraman", 12 reels of "Movie Tintypes" and 118 Educational subjects, including 52 two-reelers.

The Movie Tintypes are new to the Fox list, being a collection of old Edison photoplays. The "Newsreel Cameraman" reels are to be under the supervision of Truman Talley.

The Magic Carpet series of 26 one-reelers are especially photographed shorts made by a selected camera crew all over the world.

Fox will release 118 subjects made by Educational Pictures, the only major producers making short subjects exclusively. Of this number 52 are two-reel subjects including:

Six "Star Comedy Specials," produced as miniature comedies with a star as the lead of each.

Six musical comedies; in keeping with the new musical trend in films.

Eight Andy Clyde comedies.

Six Moran and Mack comedies; starring the "Two Black Crows."

Six Tom Howard comedies.

Six "Frolics of Youth"; a new series.

Eight Mermaid comedies; a series of "rough and tumble" comedies.

Six Coronet comedies; a series of sophisticated comedies.

In the remaining 66 one-reelers to be made by Educational and released by Fox, will be 26 Terry-Toons, animated cartoons; 6 Baby Burlesks, featuring baby stars; 6 Song Hit stories, dramatizations of popular songs; 10 Treasure Chest reels; 6 "As A Dog Thinks" reels, to be made by Robert C. Bruce; 6 "Battle For Life" releases, produced by Stacy Woodard, biologist, and 6 Romantic Journeys, made in Multicolor, with Claude Fleming as narrator.

Speakers at the convention, in addition to those already mentioned, included Clayton Sheehan, Fox general foreign manager; Truman H. Talley, vice-president of Fox Movietone News; Charles E. McCarthy, director of advertising and publicity; E. C. Grainger, Eastern division manager; W. C. Michel, executive vice-president, and Spyros Skouras, of the theatre division.

Fox-Educational

Sidney R. Kent, president and John D. Clark, general manager of distribution of Fox Film, and E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Pictures, which releases through Fox, officially launched their 1933-34 sales campaign last Thursday morning, when 225 home office executives, district and branch managers, salesmen and bookers from the company's 37 offices in the U. S. and Canada, assembled at Atlantic City and heard described in detail a program of 54 features and 168 short subjects for release in 1933-34. Titles and production data on the schedule and a report of the happenings at the convention, appear on pages 32 and 33.

Gibson Productions

Upon completion of his current western, Hoot Gibson will leave Allied Pictures and set out on his own to produce about six aviation adventures, for possible major release.

Goldsmith

Ken Goldsmith will make six features for 1933-34. Production costs will be increased over this season's budget.

Majestic

The company has decided to hold a second national sales conference later in the summer, in New York or Chicago.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Felix F. Feist, Howard Dietz, Silas Seadler, Edward Saunders, Tom Connors, Fred Quimby, and others of the home office distribution staff, led nearly 100 salesmen and managers of the field from Kansas City, where the second of two sales conventions was concluded late last week. The MGM feature program of 48 features, with 105 shorts, was outlined both to the Kansas City and previously to the Detroit delegates. Titles appeared in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week, page 30.

Highlights of the closing sessions, in addition to those already reported on last week, included definite action in expanding the sales force, in line with decentralization, and the announcement that double bills will not be company policy in the new season. Exclusive runs, too, will probably be out.

Monarch

Monarch has not yet decided upon an exact number ot releases for 1933-34, but the company appears to be intent upon producing only action films for family consumption.

Monogram

W. Ray Johnston, president, will preside at the first of three regional sales conventions, which opens Saturday, at the Park Central in New York, to be attended by about 40 franchise holders from the field, and Monogram executives. The second meeting will follow at Chicago July 15 and a third in Los Angeles on July 22. A meeting may be held in New Orleans, July 10.

Twenty features already have been definitely lined up, with distribution rights acquired, for New England, south, midwest and west, to eight westerns which Paul Malvern is now making with John Wayne. Also, a third series of 13 one-reel "Port O' Call" subjects have been acquired.

Paramount

Starting off with Dietrich's "Song of Songs," the company actually began releasing 1933-34 product, following regional conventions last week in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, this opening Wednesday, July 5. George Schaefer, in charge of distribution, presided at all of the conferences. Complete details of the 65 features and 125 shorts for 1933-34, which were outlined first at the New York meeting, appeared last week in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, page 31. Since publication, however, Charles Rogers has signed the Pickens Sisters, radio performers, to appear in a new feature.

George Schaefer told the Chicago delegates that a return to oldtime showmanship ideas and exploitation methods will be made by Paramount beginning with the new season. Neil Agnew and Stanley Waite, sales executives, also addressed the Chicago conference, where Mr. Schaefer outlined a quota of $1,000,000 for the various branches for the seven-day "Paramount Week," sales drive, starting September 3.

Photoplay Guild

Two musical shorts and a series of color novelties have been scheduled.

Radio Pictures

Elimination of westerns and a flexible production lineup were the important decisions made known at each of the three RKO sales conventions, held last week and this, at New York, Chicago and San Francisco, respectively. Fifty-two features and 106 shorts, announced first at New York, were discussed in last week's MOTION PICTURE HERALD, page 33.

About 150 field and home office delegates, headed by Ned Depinet, Jules Levy, Walter Futter and Fred McConnell, attended at Chicago, where the company met over the week-end. Robert F. Sisk and Bartlett McCormick spoke about advertising campaigns. The executives immediately entrained for San Francisco, where sessions start this Friday.

Meanwhile, Merian Cooper, in charge of Hollywood production, signed contracts with Ernest B. Schoedsack, to direct four, and John Cromwell, to direct a like number of the new features.

In the closing days of the New York meeting, salesmen were told that the company will probably start, in September, separate poster and accessory exchanges. Robert Sisk assured the delegates there would not be any more paring of RKO theatre advertising budgets, with all houses returned to normal expenditures in the fall.

At Chicago, the exchange staff of that city was presented with the Hays Trophy for the best fire prevention efforts during this season.

Resolute Pictures

Herbert R. Ebenstein is president of this new company, which announced 12 features for 1933-34, production in Hollywood under Alfred T. Mannon, vice-president. Alec Moss, formerly with Columbia, is second vice-president, in charge of publicity-advertising.

Starmark

"Unwanted Venus" was placed in work at Fort Lee, New Jersey, as the first of a series of six for 1933-34, Grover Lee directing, and Ernest Truex, Jean Arthur, Tom Howard featured.

Trop

Jack D. Trop resigned as vice-president of Remington Pictures, immediately forming J. D. Trop, Inc., to distribute and produce six features. Headquarters, 11 West 42nd St., New York.

United Artists

The company's executives in the east were concluding details of a program for 1933-34, and plans for the annual sales convention, which opens in Chicago on July 17. About 26 features are tentatively scheduled.

Al Lichtman, vice-president in charge of distribution, left New York July 5, for Los Angeles, where he will confer with Joseph M. Schenck, president; Darryl Francis Zanuck, Samuel Goldwin and other production officials, relative to the new schedule. Mr. Lichtman will then travel to Chicago to preside at the meeting, to be held at the Drake Hotel.

Universal

Carl Laemmle presided at Universal's first convention of the season, which opened late last week, at Chicago, where the field staff assembled and heard the Universal president outline 36 features, six westerns, 111 shorts, titles of which appeared in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, page 34.

Calling a halt to routines and ruts, Mr. Laemmle told the delegates that the company is striking out with a "new deal" for 1933-34. L. J. Schlaifer, sales manager, and others of the home office division, also addressed the convention. Later they left for Los Angeles to open the final conference, on Thursday.

Warners

Warners continued to concentrate on the completion of the current group, before making any definite plans regarding a convention, or drafting a feature program for the new season, during which the company will probably release 60 pictures.

The company this week signed Paul Muni to a five-year contract, starting with "The World Changes."

Fred Meyer Takes Over Alhambra in Milwaukee

Fred S. Meyer, Inc., has filed articles of incorporation at Milwaukee to take over operation of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee first run house, which was formerly operated by Universal.

Mr. Meyer, president of the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan and prominent in national exhibitor circles, is also operator of the State in Rhinelander, Wis. Al Kvool will continue to manage the Alhambra under the operation of Mr. Meyer.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Double Harness

(Radio)

Romantic Comedy

A show for today's audiences, "Double Harness" is zippy, intriguing, finely acted, elaborately mounted. Combining sophistication with comedy—one sequence of which descends to the slap-stick variety—with dialogue coloring the situations, the show puts a new complexion on the familiar husband-wife love story plot. Miss Harding coming up with a performance that pretty nearly pars her "Holiday" role and Powell matching her stride for stride, the show is ripe with those human interest elements that concentrate audience sympathy.

Joan, with her younger sister Valerie married, realizes that she had better stir herself unless she wants to be relegated to the old maid class. Setting her cap for John Fletcher, a rich man-play boy, she finds him hot for romance, but cool for matrimony. She works a ruse with Valerie that permits her father to catch his pajama-clad daughter in John's apartment. A wedding that has a shot-gun semblance is consummated. Joan is really in love, but John figures there's a nigger in the woodpile. Valerie angles a $1,000 check out of John only to have Joan tear it up. Valerie gives John the lowdown. He walks out to his old vamp flame, Monica. Things break tough for Joan, but she does not intend to lose him. She arranges a dinner for the postmaster general, which may result in the Fletcher Lines getting a mail-carrying contract. John refuses to come home. Joan makes all sorts of excuses, and lands the contract. Then for no explained reason, John walks in with a boquet of Joan's favorite flowers and everything is hotsytotsy.

While there is class to "Double-Harness," the near-hokum definitely brings it within the mass designation. Be smart with this show. Adapt fresh ideas in your advance campaign. Combine dignity with cleverness.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by John Cromwell. From the play by Edward Poor Montgomery. Screen play by Jane Murfin. Photographed by J. Roy Hunt, Kenneth Macgowan, associated producer. Running time, 74 minutes. Release date to be determined.

Her Bodyguard

(Paramount-Schulberg)

Comedy Romance

A preview audience responded to this production as a clever, smooth-rolling comedy at times verging on slapstick, with just enough romance to inspire love interest, also occasional bits of drama, all bound together with a catchy line of dialogue. Set in a theatrical atmosphere, the show never gets stagey save in the anti-climax when a quick elaborate girl-song-dance sequence, done in ultra modern style, serves mainly as an interlude.

Colorful characterizations, in roles suited to personalities, add a zippy charm to the punch in the unanticipated always happening. The novel twist given the basic plot permits the supporting players to carry a goodly share of the load, permitting Johnny Hines, Marjorie White and Fuzzy Knight to get in a little effective work of their own. Hines, as Ballyhoo, the madcap press agent who never fears to make a mountain out of an anthill, clicked with the previewers.

Margot, stage star and sweetie of Bitzer, is also the object of the arduous affections of the producer Cunningham. She decides she needs a bodyguard to protect her jewels. Enter Casey to take the job. A mug flat-foot with little imagination, he plays hob with the efforts of the suitors to get Margot alone. With Ballyhoo making the best and worst of this new bit of press agentry, Bunny demonstrating how classic musical compositions are stolen for ragtime, and Lita, the old vaudeville mate of Margot, leaping through the show, it arrives at a point where Margot is rather falling for Casey without making much of an impression on him.

A little smart showmanship will do plenty for this picture. The title suggests the development of intriguing catch lines. While adult in tempo, the show still comes within the modern family classification as all-around entertainment. Combining straight advertising with good ballyhoo should increase its box office appeal.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Sleeping Car

(Gaumont-British)

Romance

Ivor Novello, whom most ladies might expect to be possessed of "all the charm that vile suspicion would disarm," our sleeping car attendant (white ones in Europe, be it noted!) seems to have a lady in every calling town. The sleeping car takes aboard a most charming English girl (the whole story is told in France). In order to claim French citizenship rights, she is advertising for a husband. Piquant, but delicately handled throughout, the story goes its way much like the rail lines on which it runs, and there is never an iota of doubt as to where it will end.

Farcical though it is, there is a photographic and directorial quality about the production which lends it distinction. Ivor Novello is not ideally cast, but his acting opposite Madeleine Carroll (an entirely new version of her former charming self) is always arresting if a trifle floreate.—Mooring, London.

Produced and distributed by Gaumont British. Directed by Anatol Litwak. Length, 7,472 feet.

The Woman I Stole

(Columbia)

Drama

Jack Holt, two-fisted "he-man" of the desert, always at his best as the engineer who does things in a big way, is here again, as often in the past, the man who triumphs over unscrupulous enemies and takes women by storm. There is in this film a goodly portion of action of the expected Holt variety, having to do with an oil field in the African desert, a bandit chieftian under pay of a miscreant and ambitious manager, and a woman who is not exactly in a sympathetic situation.

The fact that the picture has been adapted from the novel "Tampico," by Joseph Hergesheimer, should mean something to the exhibitor in the selling of the film, and liberal use should be made of the fact in lobby billing, making an effort to indicate the atmosphere of the picture's setting. There can be no question of the author's popularity, which should make the use of his name doubly important.

Beside Jack Holt for selling names there are those of Fay Wray, Noah Beery and Donald Cook, personable and generally attractive to the feminine, while Raquel Torres, dynamic and dark skinned, contributes a touch of comedy now and again as the native girl who bobs up at odd moments in avid pursuit of Holt.

Holt returns to the oil fields which he founded actually to take away with him the not unwilling wife, Fay Wray, of Donald Cook, the man whom he had caused to be named chief at the field. He finds on arrival an oil field in a state of fear from the raids of a notorious bandit chief, Beery. When Holt is about to break the news to Cook of his wife's defection, the latter upbraids him for a coward and numerous other things. Holt decides not to leave and takes matters into his own hands. He sells Beery the idea of working for him, at a higher figure, instead of for Edwin Maxwell, the crooked manager. Cook, meanwhile, suspects Holt of being at the root of the trouble.

Holt gets the goods on Maxwell and at the same time learns something of the real character of Miss Wray, whom he leaves behind when he boards ship for New York. On board he finds Cook, also New York bound, and the two drink to the freedom of both, while Miss Torres steps into the picture, expressing voluble affection for Holt.

The Hergesheimer story origin, the Holt, Miss Wray and Cook names, and the promise of reasonably active, rapid-moving entertainment should be the best selling angles. Also, the idea of the girl in the feminine lead being rather less than a heroine and in an unsympathetic role in addition, lends a spark of something slightly different which might be used to good advantage by varied copy. It is not a youngsters' picture but there could be no harm done.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Irving Cummings. From the story "Tampico" by Joseph Hergesheimer. Screen play by Jo Swerling. Assistant director, David Selman. Cameraman, Benjamin Kline. Sound engineer, Edward Bernds. Film editor, Gene Havlick. Release date, May 1, 1933. Running time, 63 minutes.

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Where Constance Bennett has a definite value in the community, her name becomes the strongest selling point, naturally. It is Constance Bennett in a rather different type of role, which in itself is a factor not to be overlooked by the exhibitor. With Miss Bennett are Joel McCrea, popular and handsome, and the able John Halliday. They are the only names with which to work.

It is the story of a girl, living by the use of her brain, who, released from prison, is all set to make a good thing of life, but meets the right man and turns eventually in the right direction. With Constance Bennett as the girl and McCrea as the right man, the exhibitor knows with what he has to work in getting the picture across to his public.

Released from prison, Miss Bennett and her friend board a boat for New Orleans, and fleece two fellow passengers out of enough money to get them through. When one of the victims brings the captain to investigate, Miss Bennett jumps overboard in the fog, is picked up by McCrea, owner of a cotton barge. Stealing from him, she makes her way to city, "frames" Halliday, wealthy publisher, and becomes his mistress. These sequences give Miss Bennett the single opportunity in the picture to wear beautiful clothes, which should be found an attractive touch by the feminine patronage.

She cannot, however, forget McCrea, and is about to leave Halliday for squalor, and the love of McCrea on the barge, when Halliday, who has become attached to her, threatens to tell McCrea of her past. She leaves, takes a hall bedroom and a job in a department store, until McCrea, finding her, persuades her that the past doesn't matter and that the barge is waiting.

It is simple material, containing little of the unusual, but contriving to be fairly good entertainment. It is essentially a woman's picture, there being small opportunity for the exhibitor to attract the men. However, it would be better, perhaps, to go after the feminine contingent with a diffrently cast Constance Bennett, in a big way, and trust the women to bring the men. It is an adult attraction.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Merian C. Cooper, executive producer. Directed by Gregory LaCava. Original story and screen play by Wanda Tuchock. Additional dialogue by Eugene Thackrey. Photographed by Charles Rosher. Sound recorder, George Ellis. Music director, Max Steiner. Film editor, Basil Wrangle. Release date, July 14, 1933. Running time, 67 minutes.

Don Quixote

(British-United Artists)

Dramatic Tragi-comedy

Strictly according to box office standards, this is not a film that will make a phenomenal stir, but as a piece of history and as a milestone in the progress of the art of the cinema, this filmization of Cervantes' immortal story will be remembered when many other mere money-spinners are forgotten. In filmic qualities it touches high spots, the beautiful photography of Nicolas Farkas combining with a remarkably sensitive performance from Feodor Chaliapin, whom the world knows better as the finest basso of our times, make a work of artistic appeal.

In the normal way, this almost legendary history of the mad pedant who imagines himself back in the days of chivalry is not talkie material. Hollywood would have read into it only a clownish burlesque that would have destroyed the whole nature of the book; the only other method of treatment would have been to regard it as straight drama, in which form it would be far too tedious. The Anglo-French sponsors of this version were clever; by engaging Chaliapin for the name part, and by concentrating on the pictorial values, they ensured artistic quality. The direction of Pabst, genius in the little understood art of montage, presents a series of brilliant pictorial studies, now of a little old-time town, now of the rugged Spanish countryside, of the deranged Quixote himself—investing even rusty armour and a broken-winded nag with dignity and nobility—of a mock mediaeval tourney, and so working up to a grand climax, with the pitiful old man charging a group of windmills—ancient mills with their tattered vanes creaking slowly round in the evening breeze—because he thinks they are deadly giants.

It is to the eternal credit of United Artists that they have taken the production under their wing, knowing it for a subject that will dignify the cinema.

To sell patrons, there is the famous book all ready for a tieup, while the name of Chaliapin himself, whose fame and voice have gone all round the world, should be an attraction in itself. If an extra tag is wanted, there is Sidney Fox, who took over the part of Quixote's niece while she was in France. Naturally it would be an insult to ballyhoo a picture of this type. The showman will need to think up something dignified, something that will attract the more infrequent patron as well as the normal customer.—CHARMAN, London.

Produced by Nelson Films (Great Britain) and Vandor Film (France) in collaboration. Directed by G. W. Pabst. Scenario by Paul Morand. Music by Jacques Ibert (with an aria by Dargomijsky). Photographed by Nicolas Farkas and Paul Portier. Art direction by Andrews Andrejew. English version and dialogue by John Farrow. Assistant direction by H. Rappoport. Recording by W. L. Bell. Editing by Otto Ludwig. Costumes designed by M. Pretzfelder, and executed by Karinsky. Animated designs by Lotte Reiniger. Production manager, O. Geftman.

Das Lockende Ziel

The Golden Goal

(Bavaria Film)

Drama

An all-German film, made understandable to the person lacking a knowledge of the language through the use of the superimposed subtitle translation of the dialogue, "The Golden Goal" is chiefly notable by reason of the presence, and especially the voice, of Richard Tauber, justly famed for his strong and pleasing tenor voice.

The film should be found enjoyable, especially to those who obtain a definite pleasure from the capable performance of a really able singer. Mr. Tauber has satisfactory support in this simple story, but the names are quite unknown even to the follower of German films in this country. Tauber, then, and his fine music, become the real selling point for the exhibitor who can draw upon a sufficient German population to make the showing of the film a worthwhile proposition.

The fact, also, that this marks Tauber's first appearance on a screen in this country, may be a point worthy of mention. Outside the smaller German-speaking community, there may well be a market for the film in the intimate type cinema in the metropolitan center, where the singing of Tauber becomes a strong point.

Tauber, whose voice is the pride of the small town where, with his mother, he runs the hotel, receives an offer from a visiting stage manager to go to Berlin for training, then to move forward to the operatic stage, where he assures him of an outstanding success. His fiancee fears his going will mean the end of their engagement, but persuades him to take advantage of the offer anyway. A young and promising singer, Maria Elsner, develops a profound affection for Tauber and aids him in the great triumph he scores in his operatic debut. The fiancee and Tauber's friend had gone to the performance, but Miss Elsner, jealous, had prevented Tauber from seeing them.

Later, the girl decides to marry Tauber's village friend, thinking their affair ended. Tauber, learning of the impending marriage, arrives at the village too late to prevent the union, but does enter the choir loft to add his rich, full voice to those of the choir as he had done in the days before fame overtook him. Then he returns, the audience understands, to his profession—and loneliness.

Sell as a human story, performed in capable fashion, and the work and voice of Richard Tauber, great European tenor, who contributes the strongest sequences to the picture with his powerful voice.—AARONSON, New York.

Hold Your Man

(MGM)

Drama

Strong drama, occasionally reaching the point of drawing audience tears, an occasional interjecting of capably-handled comedy, a rather powerful story with a definitely different twist, and the two stars, serve to bring this picture into the category of salable pictures of rather unusual drawing power.

The title is somewhat unfortunate in its choice, since it has the rather definite implication of a highly sophisticated type of drama, especially in view of the fact that Clark Gable and Jean Harlow share the lead. As a matter of fact, the picture is anything but sophisticated in the expected fashion, though several of the dialogue passages, entirely in the earlier sequences, are slightly off-color, lending a sharp flavor in keeping with the story, yet susceptible of frowns in certain communities.

Little need be said of the power on the marquee of the names of Gable and Miss Harlow. The rest of the cast, with the exception of Stuart Erwin, offers little of a selling nature, though all are perfectly satisfactory. Obviously, however, little of additional name strength is needed with the Gable-Harlow combination.

Gable, petty crook, accidentally meets Miss Harlow, who also lives by her sharp wits, when she saves Gable from pursuing police by hiding him in her apartment. They meet again, Miss Harlow ignoring the simple Erwin, who wants to marry her. The two attempt to fleece an admirer of Miss Harlow through a frameup, but Gable, in love with Miss Harlow, cannot go through with it, strikes the man. They go for a marriage license, return to find the man dead. Gable escapes, Miss Harlow is sentenced to the reformatory for two years. There the strongest dramatic elements of the story have their place. Well executed technically, these sequences are powerfully developed, indicating the manner in which Miss Harlow suffers the gibes of another inmate, a former sweetheart of Gable, played by Dorothy Burgess. Miss Harlow does a song in effective fashion, a fact worth noting.

Miss Harlow is to have a child. Released, Miss Burgess brings Gable to prison, though he realizes the police are on his trail. A group of girls come to the rescue in a sequence crowded with suspense, dynamic action and a tear, in the manner of the similar scene in "Maedchen in Uniform." They secrete Gable, release Miss Harlow from solitary confinement and stand guard against rushing policemen until an elderly, colored preacher, father of an inmate, marries them.

Hawleys of High Street
(British International)
Comedy

The old play by Walter Ellis provides but a bare skeleton for this comedy. British International for its own reasons has discarded a gentle satire on the social ignorance and snobbery which usually comes with sudden rushes of wealth, and has substituted a good deal of knockabout comedy of a reminiscent quality.

It is fun, and good fun such as the small-town people ought to appreciate. On that assumption the bullseye is probably knocked sideways.

The story concerns a little town draper who, after years of impecunious struggles, suddenly sells his premises to a railway company for an enormous sum. Thereafter he and his family crowd into the select circles, invade local politics and generally spread around a new brand of citizenship.

If the Americans will take the story as a piece of simple comedy, they may be excused a criticism that too many of the characters fall over the mat. They may, in fact, doubtless will, laugh, but so long as they laugh only at the Hawleys as seen here, and not at British people of humble beginnings, no one will mind. Leslie Fuller as the Hawley pere makes no pretense at characterization. His line is comedy, and near slapstick will be the exhibitor's sale line.—MOORING, London.

Produced and distributed by British International. Directed by Thomas Bentley. From the play by Walter Ellis. Adaptation and scenario by Charles Bennett, Syd Courtenay, and Frank Launder. Photography by J. J. Cox. Length, 6,137 feet.

SHORTS . . .

Killing to Live
(Amkino)
Excellent

Of unusual excellence, as well as popular appeal is this rather lengthy short subject, in which is graphically pictured, and splendidly photographed, the manner in which the inhabitants of the animal kingdom carry on their own brutal, irresistible battle for life, governed by only one law, the survival of the fittest. All species of animal are depicted, birds and beasts. The strong survive, the weak perish. It is an admirable motion picture subject, one almost worthy of special billing, with attention to schools and the like. Most interesting are the closing sequences, when fire sweeps through the forest and the natural animosity of one species for another is forgotten in the headlong, frantic rush for safety. Many do not make it, and then the inexorable law continues in action, as the vultures alight on a carcass. A splendid subject.—Running time, 25 minutes.

The Barber
(Paramount)
Good Comedy

The comedic mannerisms of the veteran W. C. Fields, as he utilizes them in this comedy, are still highly effective. Suffice it to say that an audience at a Broadway house enjoyed him and the short to the full, being in a state of almost continuous laughter. As the local barber with a henpecking wife, Fields shaves his patrons with an iron hand, reduces a corpulent man to a mere shadow in his steam room and paddles his huge bass violin in his idea of music. When a bank bandit walks into the shop, Fields leaves in a hurry, then takes the credit for capturing him. He is wholly enjoyable, and this yarn gives him ample opportunity to display his wares.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Strange Case of Poison Ivy
(Columbia)
Fair Comedy

A burlesque on the melodramatic motion picture of yesterday, this comedy has a laugh or two by reason of its caricature of the drama, its exaggeration of the dramatic to the point of absurdity, rather than for anything especially amusing in the lines. The big, strong hero who rescues the fair damsel in distress and the clutches of the villain and his henchman is the reason for it all—Running time, 20 minutes.

Hollywood on Parade
(Paramount)
Fair

Aside from the fact of seeing a few of the notable Hollywood players in a moment out of character, there is little to recommend this particular number of the series. A band leader contrasts the old and the modern in music, while the various screen stars, including Marlene Deitrich, William Powell, Ruth Chatterton, George Brent and several others, appear for brief moments in the dress of yesterday. Only fair material, at best.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Iris Family (Powers) Instructive

Instructive and in a form not too hard to take, this Gaumont-British short subject deals with the manner in which flowers of the iris family come to blooming from the seed stage, and how they in turn scatter seeds to continue at nature's behest the process of propagation. Detrimental in a measure is the fact that the explanatory dialogue is often a bit difficult to understand by reason of the strong English accept. It is good school material, nevertheless, and should be found generally of interest.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Sing, Sisters, Sing
(Paramount)
Entertaining

There is a good bit of entertainment in this Bouncing Ball semi-cartoon subject, in which the Three X Sisters of radio familiarity render various popular numbers in attractive style. The manner in which they imitate the music of various instruments is effective. The accompanying cartoon is lively and amusing, and the bouncing ball, though effective, induced few in the audience to join the Three X Sisters in singing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Sawdust Sidelights
(Educational-Fox)
Of Interest

Of interest, especially to the younger generation, should be this pictorial record of the circus dressing up in winter quarters for its annual spring trek northward over the country. Ringling Brothers, "The Greatest Show on Earth," is the subject of the short. Seen are the painting of the huge wagons, the manicuring and feeding of the large group of animals and general furbishing of the circus components. Interesting are shots of the trained animals in practice and the acrobats tuning up for the new season. Good material, and interesting.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Wooden Shoes
(Columbia)
Entertaining

There is a bit of entertainment for any program in this animated subject, in which the young Hollander stops the leak in the dike while his companion rushes for help. When the animated youngster receives a medal for his heroism, his chest expands to the point of a disastrous explosion. A laugh for the youngsters, and at least a smile from the adults. —Running time, 7 minutes.

Mickey's Mechanical Man
(United Artists)
Different

Mickey goes into science with a vengeance, with his mechanical man, designed to fight the giant ape in the squared circle. The mechanical man is in a bad way when Minnie sounds the horn on her car, which galvanizes the robot into amazing action which brings victory for Mickey. Mr. Disney's protege of the inkpot continues to shine among animated stars.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Kid'in' Hollywood
(Educational-Fox)
Enjoyable

Education's baby stars are at least attractive and often amusing infants. Certainly they should appeal to youngsters and to parents. Herein they enact a tiny romance of the film studios, with the young beauty contest winner reduced to scrubbing a studio floor. The big star doesn't appear and the desperate director takes her, later throws her out for "ruining his picture." But the leading player still loves her and they are married. All infants, all wearing big safety pins, the effect is amusing and novelly entertaining.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Cinderella
Amusing

Something slightly different in the way of animated subjects is this, recounting in amusing fashion and in absurd caricature the story of Cinderella, her ugly sisters and the little king who has trouble with his husky wife. Liberties have been taken, but they are entertaining.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Down Memory Lane
(Universal)
Fair

Louis Sobel, newspaper columnist, appears here in the first of a series in which he interviews various celebrities of stage, screen and general notoriety. In this case Texas Guinan is the victim and she recounts, in pictured form, certain of her early screen work in westerns and the manner in which she discovers talent, "putting it over." The material is only fairly interesting, and Mr. Sobel, it may be said, is much better read than seen.—Running time, 10 minutes.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Sioux Falls, S. D.

Dear Herald:

South Dakota's wheat and oats crops are going to be a terrible disappointment to the grasshoppers. They can subsist for a time on the corn, but after that it will be the barbed wire fences or nothing.

We stopped at Parker to call on our oldtime friends, Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Estee of the S. T. theatre. P. G. still has that same old smile that won't wash off, and Mrs. Estee was determined that we stay for lunch, but when she found we couldn't, she went out and framed up a pitcher of ice cold lemonade, and listen, Abner, that guy Fitch buried his nose in that lemonade like an old mare at a watering-trough. Whenever we call on the Estees it is hard to get away—they are such delightful folks.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Holmquist still operate the Broadway at Centerville. Mrs. Holmquist is recovering from a very serious operation and is rapidly returning to her normal condition. We hope her recovery will be complete.

George March operates both theatres in Vermillion, but is very ably assisted by his father. If South Dakota harvests any small grain of any consequence it will be in the vicinity of Vermillion, as that territory is the best looking spot in the state.

At Sioux City, Iowa, we found Mickey Gross operating the Orpheum. The Orpheum is one of the finest theatres in the middle-west; in fact, it would be good enough for Broadway, New York, and much finer than a lot of 'em in that much-talked-of village. Micky knows the show business from Dan to Bersheeba and from Hollywood to Hoboken and Micky knows where there is a good place to eat, and that's what suits Sherm.

The last time we saw Levy Seff he was operating theatres at Correctionville and Holstein. That was several years ago. He is now the owner and operator of the Rialto and one other in Sioux City. Seff says business will certainly get better, as it can't get worse. We hope he is right.

A. I. Sadoff of the Granada said he was glad we called because he needed the HERALD. Now, that's the way we like to hear a man talk. Whenever a man talks that way you may know he's a theatreman of excellent judgment.

Dr. J. F. Saunders of nights operates the Princess theatre at Sanborn and acts as wet nurse for the family cows and shoats of the whole community. He is known far and wide as the best veterinary in northern Iowa.

Mrs. Saunders framed up a mighty fine lunch for us and Doc wanted us to stay over and play a round of golf with him. Doc is a golf hound and some day maybe we can take him on and stop his broadcasting. Carl Nedly and his wife were there also. Carl is a film hound out of Omaha and he isn't a very bad chap—when he's asleep—further than that deponent sayeth not. It's a pleasure to visit Mr. and Mrs. Saunders.

A. L. Banks is another of Iowa's wide-awake theatre operators. He operates the Empress theatre at Akron and he insisted on our taking his subscription to the HERALD. It only took one schooner to persuade us but Sherm insisted on two. Anyhow A. L. now is a member of the great HERALD family.

C. H. Sartorius of Hartley is a pretty busy man. He operates the Capitol theatre and is city clerk and performs other and sundry duties around town. The whole community leans on him for support in matters of public importance.

It's a darn shame the way Charlie Nott of the Sutherland theatre at Sutherland has to work. He's up nights running the theatre and daytimes he repairs old mowers and binders and other implements for the whole of northwest Iowa. Charlie says he likes everything in the HERALD but our colyum and Sherm told him to cut that out of the book as soon as he got it. That Sherm is a Joner.

We found R. J. Schoelerman of the Corn theatre at Everly out on his farm shoveling corn into a sheller, and did that boy have up a good sweat? He stopped long enough to induce us to renew his subscription to the HERALD and then went back to shoveling corn again. We wanted Sherm to go and spell him but he wouldn't do it.

Mrs. Leitch knew us the minute we walked into her cafe. She says we called on her at Milford some years ago. It beats all how these ladies remember us. Ma Leitch operates the most popular cafe in Arnolds Park and she knows the cafe business from soup to doughnuts. We asked Edna Yates, the girl who waited on us at breakfast, why she threw us down the night before at the dance for that tall, slim, redheaded, bowlegged Swede, and she said it was because he was a better looking man. Why, Edna, you ought to be ashamed of yourself.

A. M. Leitch operates the Park theatre at Arnolds Park, which is another popular amusement center. A. M. says he is going to California next winter or bust a hame-string. Arnolds Park is located on lake Okoboji and it is the playground of north Iowa. It was here that old Chief Okoboji and Princess Tore-a-hole-in-her-pants used to smoke the pipe of peace with the early pioneers of that section, and the old Chief was considered a pretty fine old gazabo.

Mrs. A. W. McKinney operates the Uptown theatre in Arnolds Park. This is also a popular gathering spot for those seeking amusement. She hasn't yet recovered from a bad auto wreck which she and her husband were in recently. Her husband is still unable to get around. We trust their recovery will be swift and sure, for they are delightful folks.

C. E. Arnold of the State theatre at Lake Park buys grain, hogs and cattle in addition to his theatre duties. He's a hard working guy at both ends of the line. He was sore because we had never called on him before. We were, too, after we had come to know him, but it won't happen again.

Henry Falkens of the Lyon theatre at Rock Rapids asked Sherm if he couldn't give him a reduction on some of his pictures but Sherm couldn't hear him. However, they got together finally on some of 'em and both seemed well satisfied. Henry runs about everything RKO makes and maybe that accounts for his being able to operate every night.

George F. Schroeder of the Gem theatre at George says he's been praying for rain so long that he has forgotten how to make his nightly receipts balance his expense. We told him to deduct 8 from 10 and give the balance to the film companies and then keep on praying for rain.

The three O'Leary brothers of the Grand theatre at Dell Rapids, Iowa, are known all over the middle-west as the three bachelor operators, but anyhow they must be good ones or they couldn't operate seven days a week in as small a town as Dell Rapids. It takes real theatremen to do that.

The next time we travel with that guy Fitch we are going to insist that he have his tonsils removed. He complained all the while of their being dry and cracked open and he would stop at every town where they had 3.2 and he's go in and bathe 'em.

Construction Is Started At United Artists Studio

Enlargement of buildings and facilities at the United Artists studios in Hollywood is now under way, due to the production activities planned by Joseph M. Schenck and Darryl Zanuck for their new Twentieth Century Pictures at that studio.

Construction has started on a new building to provide quarters and offices for 16 directors and writers. Mr. Zanuck said this week the new building now being erected is only the first move in the studio expansion program, and that further expansion will be made as the need for new facilities arises. The cost of these improvements will amount to a considerable sum and entails much new construction, he said.

Theatrical Minneapolis Elated Over New Mayor

Theatre people of Minneapolis are highly elated over the election of A. G. Bainbridge, owner of the Shubert theatre, as mayor of the city. Mr. Bainbridge has been an active theatrical personage in the city for many years, and the theatrical fraternity anticipates a liberal attitude in theatre matters in force at the city hall. Frank D. Fox, of Sly-Fox Films, is mentioned as a possibility for chief of police.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

BELOW THE SEA: Ralph Bellamy, Ray Fay—A very good picture that drew poor at the box office, but we have never been able to put over a sea picture in this town. This one has a good story, good cast and some fine underwater shots, but do not stress the color shots under sea in your advertising, as they add nothing to the picture. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 21-22.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

FORBIDDEN TRAIL: Buck Jones—Drew unusually well for a western, which makes me think that it might pay to consider the case of the "horse-opera." My theory has always been that a certain class of people still love westerns, but that at the present time they are either unemployed or have been reduced to such a low scale of living that they have to pass up theatre entertainment. The fact that this picture drew quite well makes me feel that there is already more money in circulation. Played June 3.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

McKENNA OF THE MOUNTED: Buck Jones—A very good western picture from Columbia. Story of the Northwest mounted police and this one is filled with action and thrills. When you want a good western picture get Columbia and you can be sure that your patrons will walk out of your theatre well pleased and with no kick. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 17.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

PAROLE GIRL: Mae Clarke, Ralph Bellamy—A very interesting picture from start to finish and one that will please any audience. A little gangster touch in the first two reels but after that a wonderful love story that was very pleasing. We played this one day, but it will stand two days better than a lot of percentage pictures we have played. Columbia sure has made some good pictures this year and we hope they continue. Running time, 67 minutes. Played June 21.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA?: Wheeler & Woolsey—Wheeler and Woolsey have never meant anything at our box office and this one was no exception. From previous reviews, we expected it to be worse than it really was. It is plenty hot but that seems to be what the public likes. I personally like Wheeler and Woolsey and thought this was the funniest picture that I have ever seen them in. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 22-23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evalyn Knapp—Very pleasing picture of the program variety. Splendid for family night or Saturday. Played June 10.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

TREASON: Buck Jones—one of the best westerns Buck Jones ever made. This one has plenty of good clean comedy, lots of action. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 24.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

WHEN STRANGERS MARRY: Jack Holt—A fair program picture that drew average business on our cheap admission night, and pleased everyone, it seemed, as we had good comment on this one. Would be okey for Saturdays in towns where they are tired of westerns. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 23.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

First National

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess, Sally Eilers—A dandy picture that pleased generally. If you can get them in on air shows, don't pass this one up. A few scenes were hardly up to the Will Hays "Code of Ethics."—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Boys, give First National a big hand for this real good picture. It's not a big special, but it sure is a big program picture and the recording extra good. Good, all plain English. Running time, 75 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—One of the best Joe E. Brown's yet! You must hand it to Warner Bros. this season. Use their trailers. Business fair considering conditions. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 15-16.—Chas. M. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Another good picture from Vitagraph. Will please all of Joe E. Brown's fans, and that means extra business, as Joe is plenty well liked in the small towns.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MATCH KING, THE: Warren William, Lili Damita—A good picture for its kind, but too depressing. It drew only average business. Played June 15-16.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

20,000 YEARS IN SING SING: Bette Davis, Spencer Tracy—A remarkable production. Fair business. Every small town should show this. Played June 4-5.—Chas. M. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Good box office, although not as strong as "Tenderfoot." Plenty of laughs, and our cash customers want to laugh. Brown is one comedian who can keep out of the gutter in putting over a gag.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

Fox

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marion Nixon, Stuart Erwin—Good programmer. Lowest receipts in several months. Played June 10.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—Very good program picture but it hasn't an ounce of drawing power. James Dunn means nothing at my box office and a few more pictures like this one and "Humanity" and I'll have no business at all. Played June 8-9.—Edith M. Fordye, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

HUMANITY: Boots Mallory, Alexander Kirkland—The very poorest drawing card I have had. This is a very good picture for its kind but you had better play it on your bargain night as it lacks star drawing power and an attractive title. When Fox first announced this picture I recognized this as a very poor title and hoped they would change it. People read the title, looked over the advertising matter and wandered off up the street. Played June 1-2.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—Above the average western. Business fair. Played June 17.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—It went over fine for me, and they seemed to enjoy it. Played June 1-2.—F. S. Crane, Plaza Theatre, Clyde, Kansas. General patronage.

MGM

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro, Myrna Loy—Norarro and Miss Loy made as much out of it as they could. Not much story and unpleasant in parts. Slow in places and too much foreign talk. Pleased about 25%. Played June 22-23.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro, Myrna Loy—Big star in an Arab costume killed him in this picture. Tires one. No good for anybody. This is my opinion of such pictures. No good at the box office. Running time, 88 minutes. Note: Get your Motion Picture Herald under date of June 17, look on page 15 and read what Major Albert Warner has to say about "program pictures." I know now Mr. Warner reads the Herald and knows what will save us all, both the producer and the exhibitor. Don't you think we all should write or wire him that this is the best news we have ever heard?—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy—I may not be a good judge of entertainment, have seen no reviews on this as yet, however, I would class it as poor. If a comedy cannot produce a few laughs with 50 to 75 people in the house I don't consider it a comedy, and this did just that. Personally I did not even get a chuckle. This team is about washed up with me. The poorest Saturday in many months. That tells the story. And now I understand they are to make feature length comedies in the future. Help us. Played June 24.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Madge Evans—Here was a picture that pleased everyone. Our patrons like "Bill" in anything. We are working our darndest to bring them in but their skin is too thick or the bottom is still out of the family pocketbook. Almost made expenses with this. Played June 17-18.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

FAST WORKERS: John Gilbert, Mae Clarke, Robert Armstrong—Unsatisfactory picture with weak ending. Won't please. Business not good. Armstrong steals the picture from Gilbert. We need clean domestic comedy.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

FAST WORKERS: John Gilbert, Mae Clarke, Put this on bargain night if you must show it. It has no drawing power, and it certainly will not please the majority of theatre patrons. You would never dream that this was made by Metro if Leo was not shown roaring at the beginning. Played June 13-14.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

MEN MUST FIGHT: Diana Wynyard, Phillips Holmes—Good picture with absolutely no drawing power whatever. People still seem to shy away from war pictures. Played May 30-31.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies—A wonderful picture, expertly directed and acted. Very much the same as the silent version of a few years ago. Marion Davies gets a chance to show some swell acting and our entire audience enjoyed the picture. Metro may put out some flops, but they sure know how to make good pictures when they want to. Play it at least two days or more. Business above average. Running time, 86 minutes. Played June 19-20.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—A very good picture but not up to their other, "Emma." However, you cannot go wrong on any of Marie Dressler's productions, for it is she that people come to see. Good business considering the age of the picture. Although we booked it months before it was made we were held off until the opportunity to clean up was gone. Played June 2-3-4.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—Marvelous production which you would enjoy much more in some one else's theatre than in your own. The acting is superb but this type of entertainment is for the classes only. I have not looked it up but I believe this establishes a new low level for Sunday and Monday, the days I depend on to put my week over. It was exactly as I had expected, however, so I just considered it as a bitter pill which had to be swallowed, gulped it down and rejoiced when the time came to ship the film. Because of the extreme length of this you will have to use very short and snappy featurettes and then it will be too long. This is the third picture within the last week that had no drawing power. I wouldn't last long if this condition lasted. Running time, 127 minutes. Played June 4-5.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Roman Novarro—Bad flop. Impossible story. Next to Garbo, who is the great genius of the screen, Helen Hayes is the most intelligent woman player. Too bad they didn't give her "Strange Interlude" instead of this thing.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—This is a very fine picture, but the recording is bad in spots. The drawing power was not up to my expectations and I still cannot figure out why it did not draw better crowds. The title is unusually good, it seems to me, and both Joan and Gary Cooper are adored by most picture fans. The majority who saw "Grand Hotel" did not like it, so when I got the reports on "Rain" I passed it up because I knew it would not help Joan. I am very thankful that I did this, because "Today We Live" was disappointing to many because it was depressing. The casting was perfect and for a war picture it could not have been improved upon, but for A-1 entertainment the heroine should get a few breaks and should not have to spend quite so many feet of film crying. I am an ardent admirer of John Crawford. Every picture she has ever made has fascinated me. I have just finished reading her article in the Saturday Evening Post. If you have not read it do so by all means. She is right about the danger of stars becoming typed, but right now her admirers want some more pictures of the type that made her famous. Played June 11-12.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—This is only fair entertainment and did only a fair business. The people in our town do not care for comedies and especially for Buster Keaton. Play this only one day and let it go at that. Running time, 78 minutes. Played June 24.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—A good picture to fair business. Gable does some real acting in this and Helen Hayes is always fine. An excellent offering.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—Splendid picture but the draw was below average for Sunday and Monday. Played June 18-19.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Monogram

MASON OF THE MOUNTED: Bill Cody, Andy Shuford—This is decidedly the best western Monogram ever sent us. Good directing, good photography and good sound. You won't go wrong on this one. Played June 24.—Amuzu Theatre, Inman, S. C. General small town patronage.

Paramount

BIG BROADCAST, THE: Stuart Erwin, Bing Crosby, Leila Hyams—Satisfactory in every respect. Played June 7-8.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS, A: Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper—A fine picture. A little draggy. Will please majority of the folks. Kids say no. Lost me money but I am not sure but I would eventually lose it anyway.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce—Just the kind the majority want to see. It's nutty but moves right along. Something doing all the time. Never a dull moment.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe—A dandy box office show. Will please. Paramount has had a consistent program this year. Played June 8-9.—Chas. M. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee—Just a good program picture. Did average biz. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 14-15.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MURDERS IN THE ZOO: Charles Ruggles, Lionel Atwill—Another of the endless meaningless series of murder mysteries. The producers don't realize that the screen is a separate medium, that book readers only partly furnish the audience and a very, very small part, that one hundred-twenty millions including myself don't revel in obvious self-solving formula detective stories. Enough murder mystery and racketeers. Stop it.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER, THE: Kent Taylor—Only a fair western picture. Not half as good as the old silent version. The kids were well pleased and the adults thought it only fair. However, business was very good and they did not mind waiting for half an hour to get in to see it. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 24.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PICK UP: Sylvia Sidney, George Raft—A nice little show that went over okay. Sylvia Sidney was the whole show with George Raft standing around looking like he lost something. Okay for Sunday.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Used this at preview, held over for three days. I plugged it as something unusual. Hot as a firecracker. Not expected to please the nicey nice bunch. Kids not admitted. Got them thinking it was the rawest thing ever filmed and boy, they came to see it. The picture is O.K., makes one think of old times. Mae West a real trouper. Tell them it's so hot it will singe. Make them think they are going to see something they should not see and they will come to see it and simply eat it up. People are funny animals.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March, Claudette Colbert, Elissa Landi—Good business Sunday. Fell flat Monday. A marvelous production. A little draggy in spots. Played June 11-12.—Chas. M. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

STORY OF TEMPLE DRAKE, THE: Jack La Rue, Miriam Hopkins—Advertised it for adults only and did better than average business. Not nearly as bad as some would have you to believe. Be truthful in your ads and you will have few kicks.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SUPERNATURAL: Carole Lombard—Just a waste of film. You will be supernatural if you can get any dough on this one. No business and it is just as well. Less people, less squawks.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RKO

CONQUERORS, THE: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—Exceptionally good. In the same class with "Cimarron" and that's our idea of a sincere compliment. Better than average business although plenty old. This picture is big and rates all the plugging you want to give it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 11-12-13.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey — Fair business on a production made by a sloppy director. —Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

EMERGENCY CALL: Bill Boyd—Okay program picture. We need clean domestic comedy.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

EMERGENCY CALL: Bill Boyd, Betty Furness—Fair program picture. Played June 20-21.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GOLDIE GETS ALONG: Lili Damita—But Goldie didn't get along here. Entirely too Frenchy and of no interest. There may be a few places that this will go over, but I don't know where it would be.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—This one did not get over with our Sunday crowd; some liked it, others did not, and the general opinion was that it was not very good. However, I thought it about the best picture that Dix has made since his famous "Cimarron." Dix is all through here as a drawing star owing to the poor stories RKO have given him. From now on he goes on our cheap admission night. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 18-19.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—Terrible. Played on bargain night, which brings out the entire family. Producers should be prosecuted for releasing a picture like this. Richard Dix had always been a box office bet but "Hell's Highway" didn't do him any good, as indicated by the box office on this. He belonged in pictures like "The Love Doctor," but am afraid he's through.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

HALF-NAKED TRUTH, THE: Lee Tracy—A snappy program picture. Lee Tracy great always. Poor business. Played June 13-14.—Chas. M. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong—One of the best box office pictures of the year. Tell them the truth about it: fake photography but a marvelous accomplishment. Played June 22-23.—Chas. M. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong—Turned out to be a flop despite heavy billing and plenty of plugs. The picture is well made and very thrilling and will probably go over big in some spots. —Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

OUR BETTERS: Constance Bennett—Another bum picture. I knew it was a socalled highbrow picture, but even the highbrows panned it. Maybe they can make some good shows pretty soon. They are way past due.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Zasu Pitts—Here is a splendid cast in a somewhat ordinary program picture. Even Zasu Pitts failed to get many laughs.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SAILOR BE GOOD: Jack Oakie—Poor story, poor recording, poor business. It drags along until everyone was glad when it was over. Lay off this one.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

United Artists

RAIN: Joan Crawford—A flop. Very poor performance by Crawford, who had not the slightest idea of how to dress or play her role. Most did not like the film. Picture has terrible direction. Stupid beyond words.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

Universal

AFRAID TO TALK: Eric Linden, Sidney Fox—Inquiry from several patrons resulted in the information that there were too many actors and too much dialogue. Everyone was tired out trying to keep it straight in their minds. Recording poor, leads rather weak. Poor business. Played June 10-11.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty—For thrills this one has anything beat that has ever been shown on a talking picture screen, this boy Beatty puts on a show that is a show with his tigers and lions. Sell this as a circus picture if you can, for people are sick and tired of wild animals. We tried hard to get them in on this but it did the poorest Sunday and Monday business in past three months. The picture is something worth seeing, but try and sell that idea to the people who pay admissions—just try. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 25-26.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

COHENS AND KELLYS IN TROUBLE: George Sidney, Charlie Murray—This is by far the best picture that this team has made in the past three years but it came too late to save them. They are as dead as a last year's bird's nest in the minds of paying patrons. We ran it on our cheap admission night and even then it drew less than average business. I hope Universal forgets to make a Cohen and Kelly next season. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 20.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman, John Boles—Uncle Carl and Junior have at last given us something to brag about. We thought the original version about the swellest musical we had ever seen, but the new one is even better. Quite a number of our friends thought it better than "42nd Street." At any rate here is a real, honest to gosh super special. Music is grand, dancing superb, settings are marvelous and the color and lighting is breath-taking in its beauty. You may be wise in screening this before you run. Some of the comedy sketchs are pretty rank—you may want to cut them. They get the laughs, though. Our only possible objection is that it is so short. Several especially good numbers might well have been retained. Here is a real picture and if you will step on it as it deserves your cashier will be singing, "Happy Days Are Here Again." Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 18-20.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR, THE: Nancy Carroll, Paul Lukas—This proved to be a very good program picture, and it drew average business and pleased, some good comment on the novel story. It is a murder, courtroom type of story but done in a way that gives it a new twist. Running time, 67 minutes. Played June 16.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

LUCKY DOG: Charles "Chic" Sale—If a fellow has a dog or if he likes dogs he will like this, but don't expect to please over 40%. Kids liked it. Certainly not a picture to stick in best houses. They looked at the photos and drifted on. Oh, why do they do it?—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts —This one measures up well with others made by these two. Slim and Zasu take well here and we buy all they make. Splendid entertainment for everybody. Played June 26.—Amuzu Theatre, Inman, S.C. General small town patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—You boys who played Uncle Carl's foreign-made lemons grab this one that was made in America and make yourself some dough, and you'll enjoy this one so much that you will almost forget the foreign-made babies. This one compares favorably with their first picture, "They Just Had to Get Married." Many here thought it better than the first. Anyway, it drew far better than average business, so when you play it let them know you have a real show at last. It's a sure fire hit. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 14-15.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

RIDER OF DEATH VALLEY: Tom Mix—Poor old Tom. I knew him when—but why bring that up? The fade-out clinch reminds one of Father Time ushering in the New Year. Played June 7-8 to below normal business.—F. S. Crane, Plaza Theatre, Clyde, Kansas. General patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—A splendid comedy that did above average business. Why don't producers get wise and make more comedies and musicals? People want entertainment for their money, not eight or ten reels of film and dialogue. This picture shows that people will still spend their money if there is something worth seeing.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Warner

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—Grossed more on this Tuesday and Wednesday than with "Rasputin" on Sunday and Monday. It is an excellent picture and should be played in every theatre. Drawing power is much above the average. Use the trailer by all means. Played June 6-7.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

42ND STREET: Warner Baxter, Ruby Keeler, Bebe Daniels, George Brent, Dick Powell—A swell show to extra business. Play it by all means.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF THE WAX MUSEUM: Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray—A wonderful picture done in colors. The scenes are beautiful and I personally think this is one of the best pictures I have ever seen. Business about average as the picture does not appeal to ladies. Frank McHugh and Glenda Farrell furnish the comedy but as a whole the entire picture is very weird. Fake advertising is your best bet and should prove a business stimulator. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 15-16.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MYSTERY OF THE WAX MUSEUM: Lionel Atwill—A very good show. Didn't do average business. People fed up long ago on scare pictures. Wonder if the producers will find that out. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 12-13.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney—A very good picture from Warner. If you want something fast, funny and thrilling, by all means play this one. It will make a good Saturday show if you want a change from westerns. We did a nice business on this one, but as a rule Cagney does not draw here. This picture is really interesting from start to finish. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 24.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—Excellent. What a relief to get an entertaining and clean show once again. More power to George Arliss. Running time, 73 minutes. Played June 16-17.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

COLLEGE GIGOLOS: Eddie Lambert—A "Double Mystery" picture. First mystery was why it was ever made; second was why we ever ran it. Running time, two reels. Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

LAUGHING WITH MEDBURY IN ABYSSINIA: Another travelaugh from Columbia that is a complete flop. Columbia should discontinue making these if they cannot make them better than they are at present. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PARTNERS TWO: Alexander Carr—A fair comedy. Very funny in some spots. We have not played a good comedy (except one-reelers) from Columbia this season. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PROSPERITY BLUES: Krazy Kat—Better than the average, music excellent. Krazy Kat cartoons are always good. Running time, 6 minutes.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

SASSY CATS: Scrappy Cartoon—Good.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: No. 5—This is only fair entertainment, showing a few stars and the rest are animals that are used in making pictures. Not as good as some of the others. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SHAVE IT WITH MUSIC: Lambs Gambols—Fair. Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SKELETON DANCE and SUMMER: Both Silly Symphonies—The second time we have gone through this series. Still good and while most cartoons are alike these are different. Running time, 7 minutes.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

MGM

FALLEN ARCHES: Charlie Chase—Average Chase comedy. Running time, two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

FOOTBALL FOOTWORK: Sport Champion—OK if your patrons are interested in football.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FUNNY FACE: Flip the Frog Cartoon—Just a cartoon. No laugh. Very little to recommend.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

GIRL GRIEF: Charley Chase—Plenty of laughs in this.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

HOOK AND LADDER: Our Gang—Poor. Not a laugh in the whole thing.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HIS SILENT RACKET: Charley Chase—A very funny comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre. Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LENINGRAD: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—Not as interesting as some. Will pass for a filler.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LENINGRAD: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—An interesting view of Soviet Russia, their customs. Just ordinary entertainment. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAIDS A LA MODE: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Good. Believe this is as good as any this team has made. And they have been consistently good all the time. This was better than the feature "Devil's Brother."—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MAIDS A LA MODE: Thelma Todd, Zasu Pitts—As usual, these two continue to please. Lots of action and plenty of laughs. Running time, 18 minutes.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

ME AN' MY PAL: Laurel and Hardy—Very good, it seemed to please the majority. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

NOW WE'LL TELL ONE: Charlie Chase—A very good comedy. This one gives Chase a chance to do his stuff.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

OVER THE COUNTER: Colortone Musical Revue—Perhaps we are wrong, but we think the "Colortones" are slipping. This is only fair compared to the earlier ones of the same series. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

SWING HIGH: Sport Champion Series—One of the best one-reelers we have ever shown in our theatre. Trapeze performers. Our patrons ate it up and many came just to see this alone. It will make a good filler on any program. Advertise it and it should draw extra business. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TAXI BARONS: Ben Blue, Billy Gilbert—More comedies like this will help the exhibitor. Ben Blue and his uncontrollable hands will make you forget your trouble. A laugh a minute. Running time, 19 minutes.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

TAXI FOR TWO: Taxi Boys—Average Taxi Boy comedy. They aren't so hot in my estimation and I have yet to find anybody that likes them. Running time, two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

TOWED IN A HOLE: Laurel and Hardy—A very good Laurel and Hardy comedy. Just as crazy as ever and as funny. We always have an extra crowd to see them and this one deserves some extra advertising in your space. This is the best one we have played in the past several months. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TWICE TWO: Laurel and Hardy—Very funny to adults.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WILD PEOPLE: Colortone Musical Revue—Poorest of the three so far this year. A good cartoon is better than this one.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WRECKETY WRECKS: Taxi Boys—And two reels too many. These are very poor comedies in my estimation. They are suitable only for Saturday night. Running time, two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

WRECKETY WRECKS: Taxi boys—Best one to date by these boys.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre. Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S MAY PARTY: Talkartoon—Very good. Seemed to please.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DENTIST, THE: W. C. Fields—Inexplicable. Rank. Uncalled for. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

FATAL GLASS OF BEER: W. C. Fields—This is the worst comedy we have played from any company this season. No story, no acting and as a whole has nothing. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FATAL GLASS OF BEER: W. C. Fields—Two reels of film and 18 minutes of time wasted. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 10—Different and interesting for a change.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

I'LL BE GLAD WHEN YOU ARE DEAD, YOU RASCAL YOU: Louis Armstrong—O. K. as program filler. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT FANTASY: Vincent Lopez—Very acceptable one-reel musical.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 4—Interesting reel, partly in color. Running time, 9 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

PLUMBER AND THE LADY, THE: Frank Albertson—A first-rate comedy. Has a little of everything. Pretty girls, some clever singing, good slapstick and a story. Our Saturday audience thoroughly enjoyed it. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

POPULAR MELODIES: Screen Song—A very good number of the Screen Song series. Arthur Jarrett sings several very good numbers and music is very good. We should like to have more shorts like this one, with plenty of music and some good singers. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RKO

JITTERS, THE BUTLER: Clark and McCullough—Very good, and very surprising, as we haven't played a good one from these two for some time.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

MERCHANT OF MENACE, THE: Edgar Kennedy—Just another comedy. About as good as the average. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MICKEY'S CHARITY: Mickey McGuire—Another good comedy with Mickey and his gang. These comedies sure go over good with the kids. Even the grownups got a big kick out of this one. Running time, two reels.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

RUNAWAY BLACKIE: Aesop Fable—This is good on any program, up to Fables standard.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

United Artists

FLOWERS AND TREES: Silly Symphony—Beautiful.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

Universal

BROADCAST TRAIN: Morton Downey—Here's another nice Radio-Star musical. Downey as usual very good. With good support. This and other carefully selected shorts made up for the main feature which was not so hot. If in doubt about your feature build a good line of shorts around it. Running time, 20 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

CARNIVAL CAPERS: Oswald Cartoon—Good.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

KID GLOVE KISSES: Slim Summerville—Good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MARRIED OR SINGLE: Little Jack Little—Another "Radio Short" that pleased. Nicest piano recording we've heard in a long time. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

YOUR TECHNOCRACY AND MINE: Robert Benchley—Excellent. Worth special billing. Running time, one reel.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BABE O' MINE: Pepper Pot Novelty—One of the worst shorts we have ever had the pleasure of screening in our theatre. By all means pay for this and not play it. We had fifty-six patrons walk out on this. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BOSKO IN PERSON: Looney Tune—Good cartoon and everybody liked it. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HEY POP and BUZZIN' AROUND: Two Fatty Arbuckle comedies. Having shown all the Arbuckle comedies in the long, long ago, I wondered what the new ones would be like. Fatty hardly looks a day older. His speaking voice is very good. These comedies are much above the average of the slapstick comedies of today. We can use more of them.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

"HOW'S TRICKS?": Melody Master Series—A fair band number.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

MUSIC TO MY EARS: Jack Denny and Band—These Melody Master one-reel band numbers are among the classiest one-reel subjects on the market. We have played a number of them and every one good. Running time, 9 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MUSIC TO MY EARS: Jack Denny and Band—Have never exhibited anything better in this line. Pleased all who saw and heard it. Ran this with "Prosperity." These short subjects make fine fillers for a good feature program. They enhance any show.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

OF ALL PEOPLE: Thelma White—Very good.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ORGAN GRINDER, THE: Merry Melody—Very good cartoon comedy. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PICKING A WINNER: Vitaphone Boys and Girls—Very good, all in natural color. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PICKING A WINNER: Broadway Brevity—Not up to standard. All color.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH BOY: Phil Baker—Very good two-reel short with some good dancing.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

RAMBLING ROUND RADIO ROW: Pepper Pot Series—Did not "take" with us.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

RED SHADOW, THE: Broadway Brevity—Two-reel version of "Desert Song." It is excellent and will be especially enjoyed by all who saw the feature. I wish Warners would reissue it. Running time, two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

RIDE HIM, BOSKO: Looney Tune—A very good cartoon with a clever ending.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SMASH YOUR BAGGAGE: Small's Paradise Band—Excellent. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held. New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SPEAKING OF OPERATIONS: Broadway Brevity—This is one of the best Broadway Brevities Warner has made. Minstrel show with plenty of music and dancing. This would have been wonderful if it had been in colors, but it is just as good the way it is. This drew extra business for us and pleased all. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SPORT THRILLS: No. 3, Ted Husing—Fair. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THEN CAME THE YAWN: Jack Haley—Only fair entertainment in this two-reeler. Haley is not as good as he is supposed to be. Play it one day and let it go at that, as you might get by with it. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—Broadway Brevity. The sweetest two-reel musical we have had this season. Dancing numbers are very good. Not in technicolor. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

YOURS SINCERELY: Broadway Brevity—Very good musical, dancing and singing. We would like to have more shorts like this one. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Goodyear Rubber Co.

U.S.S. AKRON: Here is a film that you can secure free of charge from the Goodyear company, Akron, Ohio. And it is very good. The film is silent, but that does not destroy its entertaining qualities. It shows the dirigible in construction, its first test flights, etc., and it is worthy of a place on any program. Running time, two reels.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

Serials

Mascot

HURRICANE EXPRESS: John Wayne—Very good serial that pleased. Has a good following. Well directed story.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

Universal

PHANTOM OF THE AIR: Tom Tyler, Gloria Shea—I am on the sixth "epigram" and it has not gained an inch. First episode gives it all. A flop. Too much repeated each time. Poor work. Universal knows how to make serials, but they figured someone was asleep and it was unnecessary to have a story for this one.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

The Latest Reports From San Salvador

In his newest reports on the motion pictures that come to his attention as manager of the Meardi-Hermanos circuit in San Salvador, El Salvador, Central America, Mr. O. Beer discusses the following productions:

HUSH MONEY: Fox, with Joan Bennett, Myrna Loy, Hardie Albright, Owen Moore—Not a bad picture, but no draw. Running time, 65 minutes. Played April 30.

OVER THE HILL: Fox, with Sally Eilers, Mae Marsh, James Dunn—A fine picture; they liked it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 7.

BUT THE FLESH IS WEAK: MGM, with Robert Montgomery, Heather Thatcher, Nora Gregor—Cast a good draw. They liked it. A fine picture. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 1.

LA CANCION DEL DIA: Grandes Film (Spain), with Valencia, Forgar, Bretaño—All Spanish talking. The first talking picture made in Spain. Has a fine song. Not a bad picture, but somewhat below average of American pictures. Running time, 70 minutes.

BEAU HUNKS: MGM, with Laurel and Hardy—Enough fun; they liked it. First three reels just ordinary stunts, but rest very fine. Running time, 70 minutes. Played April 2.

VIDA, PASION Y MUERTE DE N. S. JESUCRISTO: H. A. Molzon—Spanish narrated Passion Play. The worst Passion Play I have seen. Nobody liked it, although we made a lot of money—more than with "King of Kings," because there doesn't exist another Spanish narrated or talked Passion Play. The original of this picture is a silent picture of 20 years ago. A real good Spanish talked or narrated Passion Play would make a fortune for the producer. Running time, 70 minutes. Played April 13 (Easter).

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: MGM, with Robert Montgomery, Jimmy Durante, Marion Davies—Not a bad picture, but didn't draw in spite of cast. Title has no drawing power at this end. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 9.

LOVERS COURAGEOUS: MGM, with Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans, Roland Young—They liked it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 16.

RED-HEADED WOMAN: MGM, with Jean Harlow, Lewis Stone, Leila Hyams, Chester Morris—An outstanding hit, among the plenty hits we get from dear old Leo. Cast a draw and story a draw. Many patrons see it several times, which is much nowadays. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 30.

SEVILLA DE MIS AMORES: MGM, with Ramon Novarro, Conchita Montenegro—This is the third year that we have showed this picture several times and it has the same drawing power as ever. All Spanish singing and talking. Running time, 100 minutes.

FREAKS: MGM, with Leila Hyams, Olga Baclanova, Wallace Ford—A good draw at release, not much business afterwards. Our patrons expected a shocker. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 4.

NOT EXACTLY GENTLEMEN: Fox, with Victor McLaglen, Lew Cody, Eddie Gribbon—A hit among westerns. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 27.

UN SOLO SUENO: Universal, with Lupita Tovar—All Spanish talking and singing. Our patrons acclaimed it as the best short feature we ever had. Fine melodies. Running time, 10 minutes.

AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY: Paramount, with Phillips Holmes, Sylvia Sidney and Frances Dee—Story difficult to understand in Spanish countries. Sylvia Sidney is no draw for us. Business bad. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 23.

Iowa Manager Dead

Clayton Bacon, 35, manager of the Strand theatre at Creston, Ia., died last week as a result of a blood infection following a tonsil operation.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

PROTECT YOUR INVESTMENT!

A Personal Message To All Exhibitors Who Employ Managers

You spend a lot of hard earned dough each year for repairs and replacements of your projection machines, boilers, cooling plant, flashers and all other physical equipment. But how much do you set aside for the proper maintenance of the most important motor of all—

Your manager?

Yes, the manager, nearest approach yet to perpetual motion, mentally and physically moving at high speed tempo, ceaselessly functioning for the benefit of your theatre and your bank balance. On the job day and night, seven days a week, breaking his neck to stay out of the red. Keep him going strong and happy—

Give him a vacation with pay!

Elementary sound business practice dictates that you give this manager machine the proper care and attention. Repair his weary body with rest, replace his run down brain cogs with new gears—gears of sunshine, of recreation, of change of scene and environment. And he will return to his work spilling over with the old peppo, and alive with smart box office ideas.

Of far greater significance than the money you have tied up in physical equipment is the investment you make in a good manager. Protect that investment by giving him the rest, the well deserved vacation every conscientious manager should have.

"INTESTINAL FORTITUDE"

Lynn Smith manages the Rialto and Crystal theatres in Gonzales, Texas, population 3,859, a small town operation similar no doubt to thousands of like situations throughout the country. Business was going along and Smith was holding his own, when calamity landed on his fair section of the Lone Star State.

The town's three banks closed, local business went sour, but worse, the country trade disappeared and with it the week end admissions upon which the theatres depended. In addition, local dance halls lowered their prices to a thin dime, and Lynn was right up against it.

But did he curl up in the face of all this misfortune and keen competition? He did not. Smith took a hitch in his galluses, spit on his hands and went to work. To such good effect that business is back at par, and adversity has opened a source of revenue that prosperity never would disclose.

We refer you to this exhibitor's story on Page 54, first column of this issue, the simple saga of a showman who wouldn't be licked and therefore couldn't be licked. He is the possessor of that rare quality the English gracefully refer to as "intestinal fortitude," but what we call on this side of the water—plain "guts."

WHERE FROM?

Home office reports indicate producers have taken field exploitation out of storage and that this step child of the industry is again proving its worth to the exhibitor. Field exploiters participating in recent local campaigns are said to have helped skyrocket grosses to unexpected figures and it looks as though exploitation forces are to be augmented.

But from what source is this added strength expected? Back in the early twenties, the exploiteer ran rampant through the land scattering lavish showmanship on big town and small. Then producers tightened the purse strings and most of the field forces were let out leaving the manager to carry on.

He still carries on—cut salaries, restricted budgets, unappreciative and non-showmen superiors notwithstanding. To the manager goes the lion's share of credit for the campaigns that have kept so many theatres open during the darkest days.

Now that producers have proven to themselves the actual box office benefits of extra exploitation, exhibitors must allow their managers more latitude in putting over their pictures and never again must adequate exploitation be ignored.

Managers who are not allowed to express their showmanship and who are not rewarded for their ability will perhaps be the source from whence producers will seek able men, and smart exhibitors will take steps now so that gifted managers will not be tempted to seek these more remunerative fields.

ON TO CHICAGO

The Managers' World's Fair Contest seems to have started many tongues wagging and feet moving if the comments we hear and the phone calls, letters, wires and even cablegrams received are any criterion. Assurances come from Round Tablers and other stepping managers that this contest is their meat. Which pleases us mightily, for not only will seven deserving theatre men be awarded ace vacation trips to the Century of Progress Exposition, but the film companies encouraged by the great interest, may continue their participation in other stimulating contests to stiffen manager morale and build up sagging box offices.

Nationwide Enthusiasm Mounting as Round Table July Exploitation Contest Whizzes Into Second Week

Managers' Requests for Further Campaign and Picture Details Indicate White Heat Competition for Film Companies' Awards of One Week All-Expense Round Trips to Chicago World's Fair; Showmen Voice Approval of Plan To Stiffen Theatre Morale And Stimulate Profitable Summer Business.

By A-MIKE VOGEL

Gettin' warm, folks, and we don't mean the weather. We mean the phone is buzzin' and mail gets heavier from managers who want more dope on the World's Fair awards.

The boys and girls are sure asking questions about the contest and requesting information about July releases that seem to infer your Round Table Club has started a campaign for managerial recognition that is going places.

And we are not at all surprised. Who wouldn't be pepped up over these ace prizes. Imagine, five days in Chicago, two days for travel, everything free, everything first class with a lot of other amusements besides the Fair to keep the winners happy.

So we cheerfully expect to be snowed under with the deluge of July campaigns that the folks in the field have told us to watch out for. Come on, gang, we like snow.

And now for the contest's questions. The box to the right sets forth each query, the answer to which is directly below. If there is something you'd like to know that is not covered in the box, let's have it. All requests for picture information have been relayed to the various companies, who will reply directly or through their branch offices.

For your convenience, we are again running the rules of the contest on next page, second column. Please file for reference as rules will not be run again. Study these simple rules and follow their instructions.

Now let's see what the boys in the field have to say, besides asking questions.

Howard (Doc Penetro) Waugh, Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., pipes as follows: "Sure I'm in. Have some corking stuff lined up to startle the natives, and maybe the judges. The contest idea is timely and should have support of every manager in the field."

Tom D. Soriero, Fox divisional manager. Tucson, Arizona:

"My heartiest congratulations on sponsoring this endeavor to reward managers for July campaigns. Pledge

Questions and Answers

Q. . . . How about newspaper ads and contests in a neighborhood without these facilities?
A. . . . If you have no newspaper, this will be eliminated in judging. You are not penalized for what you cannot help.

Q. . . . Can you give any idea how campaigns will be judged?
A. . . . On a point basis. So many for each item, but this amount is not necessarily arbitrary.

Q. . . . Is campaign eligible on a three-day date, June 29-30, July 1?
A. . . . Yes, just as long as picture plays within month of July.

Q. . . . Suppose a Chicago manager wins? Does he get prize?
A. . . . He sure does. Prize-winning Chicagoans will be properly rewarded.

Q. . . . Are winners allowed to bring wives?
A. . . . Yes, but wives' expenses are not borne by film companies.

Q. . . . If winner drives to Chicago, how will fare be arranged?
A. . . . An amount equal to railroad fare and lower berth (if sleeper jump) will be given.

168 HOURS FILLED WITH PLEASURE AWAIT SEVEN AT EXPOSITION CITY

support of entire division to make this sensational success."

A voice from Massachusetts—Charlie (Casanova) Bassin, Oriental Theatre, Mattapan:

"Many thanks for the opportunity to participate in this great contest. Not only is it an incentive for the manager, but also a fine thing for business in general. Will try my best to win."

And from way up in Canada. Pete Egan, Palace, Calgary, speaking.

"Let's go, everybody, and prove that there is gold in the July dates. Warmly endorse Round Table contest to stimulate business and reward live showmen at the same time. Hope I'm in at the finish. Regards."

You'll hear from some of the other brothers in the succeeding issues, and we repeat, we shall be glad to have a line or two from you telling us all what you think of the contest.

We have asked the film company advertising executives to say a few words to the gathering, and this week we hear from two well known members of the craft.

S. Charles Einfeld, Warner ad chief, believes that the Round Table contest for the best exploited July picture campaigns will stimulate grosses at a time when the business is needed most.

Apart from the prizes, Einfeld believes the contest will put at rest for all time the ancient bugaboo that there is no business to be had during the summer months. He states that Warner Bros. have already proved to the contrary with "Gold Diggers of 1933" that good pictures, properly sold, will do as well in the summer as the rest of the year.

"Showmanship today," says Einfeld, "calls for the aggressiveness and initiative of the old time showman, plus a realization that each new picture requires a different brand of treatment.

"Exploitation today, advertising and publicity, must be able to shock people out of their lethargy toward pictures. The entire campaign must present such a strong selling argument as to make the appeal well nigh irresistible.

"If exhibitors themselves," he continued, "will only take advantage of the well-rounded ticket selling campaigns Warner Bros. strive so hard to give them for each picture, their task will be much easier. During the month of July exhibitors playing Warner Bros.-First National pictures will have six of the strongest pictures on our current great program to sell.

'The Mayor of Hell,' starring James Cagney, is a terrific exploitation possibility. 'Baby Face,' starring Barbara Stanwyck, is another big bet, so is 'The Narrow Corner,' with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Ralph Bellamy; imagine what can be done with the title, 'She Had To Say Yes,' with Loretta Young and Lyle Talbot; 'Good-bye Again,' with Joan Blondell and Warren William, and 'Mary Stevens, M.D.,' starring Kay Francis and Lyle Talbot and Glenda Farrell, are two more pictures that not only have big star values to sell, but titles and themes that lend themselves to sock exploitation."

Si Seadler, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer ad head, also lends a big hand with the following message:

"Leo the Lion roars approval of your July showmanship contest. He's an all year 'round exploitation enthusiast but he agrees with you that extra effort during the summer helps overcome seasonal resistance. Leo urges showmen to call on him for any help they may need in framing campaigns for your contest. Among recent and coming M-G-M pictures which will be booked during July are: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery in 'When Ladies Meet'; John Barrymore, Diana Wynyard in 'Reunion in Vienna'; 'Midnight Mary,' with Loretta Young, Ricardo Cortez, Franchot Tone, Una Merkel; Jean Harlow and Clark Gable in 'Hold Your Man'; 'Storm at Daybreak' with Kay Francis, Nils Asther, Walter Huston, Phillips Holmes; Lionel Barrymore, Miriam Hopkins in 'Stranger's Return'; Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery in 'Another Language.'"

So keep the pot a-boilin' and let's have those campaigns. Remember, you can send one in on every picture you play in July, and whether you are the skipper of a de luxe, small towner, or neighborhood theatre, you get the same consideration in the final awards.

The best of good fortune!

HOME TALENT PARTY AND FAMILY NIGHT WINNERS FOR SMITH

Smacked in the face with three bank closings that ruined his week end country business, Lynn Smith, manager Crystal and Rialto, Gonzales, Texas, came back with an idea that not only boosted his Saturday and Sunday "take" but increased business during the week.

In the face of the keenest kind of Saturday night competition, a ten cent dance, Lynn conceived and put across a 25c. Family Night, the feature of which is a home talent show in addition to the picture.

Giving each entertainer four tickets to any future show, Smith finds that he can pick his talent from many volunteers from the country districts as well as in Gonzales. So splendid has been the response that more community interest has been aroused than anything that Lynn has yet put over.

Families who never heard a talking picture have become regular weekly patrons, attendance in Gonzales is enjoying a healthy revival, and best of all, Smith has not reduced his admission prices.

HARRY GOLDBERG GOT OUT NOVEL THROWAWAY FOR JERSEY THEATRE

Harry Goldberg, formerly advertising manager of the New Jersey district for Warner Bros. and now stationed in Philadelphia for the same company, got out a very unusual throwaway on Warner Bros.' "Keyhole" at the Branford in Newark.

The throwaway was in the form of a small four-page booklet. On the cover was an illustraition of a keyhole with a photo of Kay Francis and George Brent shown kissing. The copy read: "Look Through the Keyhole. . . . See the Daring New Moral Code of the Modern Woman." The center spread had photos of Monroe Owsley, George Brent, Henry Kolker, the three men in the picture, and copy reading: "Does the Modern Woman Need Three Husbands to Know All the Thrills of Love?" On the last page was a photo of Kay Francis, theatre imprint and the following copy: "Why Does the Modern Woman Change Husbands So Often? . . . The Answer Can Be Seen on the Other Side of the 'Keyhole.'"

These throwaways were distributed all over the city of Newark and handed out in the lobby of the theatre as an advance notice on the picture.

RAILROADS, STORES WORK WITH McMANUS ON "TODAY WE LIVE"

Getting a railroad to spend real money advertising "Today We Live" just happens to be only one of the many smash stunts rounded by John McManus, manager of Loe's Midland, Kansas City, Mo.

The "choo-choo" idea was worked with the local passenger agents who arranged excursion rates on all railroads within a radius of 75 miles of K. C. and also stood half the cost of 15,000 heralds advertising the stunt.

Dept. store tie-up for window display and prominent theatre mention in store ads was put over, forty-five drug stores plugged a Crawford cosmetic and beauty aid samples were given away at the theatre, as were 1,500 roses on opening day.

Sounds like plenty of campaign, but Mac wasn't satisfied so he sold the leading local jewelers on running ads showing how Joan would look in glasses, which ads of course were mostly Joan and the theatre credits.

Good stuff, Mac. The railroad gag is a honey and we hope that other Club members can work it in their territories. Keep a-comin'!

L. A. FLYING MANAGER PILOTS PLANE 'CROSS COUNTRY ON VISIT

When those Fox West Coast showmen want an air tie-up, they see Hal D. Neides, City Manager, Los Angeles Division, licensed pilot and navigator. Hal is touring the country in a big Stimson Detroiter, and dropped into Club Headquarters recently to say hello.

His latest stunt is a California beauty and talent hunt, in which the winners will work in a Radio feature, and also make personal appearances with the completed production. Hal has promoted a big Greyhound Pullman coach and an electric traveling kitchen which takes care of the transportation and eats problem.

Glad to see you, Hal, and now that they're flying from the Coast in a few hours, we'll look for you to be dropping in over the week end soon.

GEORGE SHARP PUTS OVER MICKEY MOUSE CONVENTION IN CALIF.

George Sharp, manager of the Fox Wilson Theatre in Fresno, Cal., exploits entertainment with more entertainment and gets results. He arranged to have the second Annual Convention of Mickey Mouse Clubs of Southern California held in his town, and made the Convention a gala event by tieing it up with his theatre.

Almost 400 kiddies from surrounding towns and counties were delegates to the Mickey Mouse Convention. A band of 110 children in Mickey Mouse costumes greeted the arriving delegates and headed a parade of marchers and elaborately decorated floats that was honored with a motor-cycle police escort.

The march was through Fresno's lead- the streets and terminated at the theatre, which was used by the youthful delegates and their accompanying parents as headquarters.

Prominent merchants of Fresno and the neighboring towns participated in the parade, and the Chamber of Commerce and the Fresno Police Department gave enthusiastic co-operation.

O.K., George, pretty nice work, let's hear more of you.

GREAT WORK, ANDY!

Our good friend Andy Anderson at the Strand Theatre in Philadelphia put over a good one recently when he played "42nd Street." He pasted a 24 sheet to the floor of the lobby and says it got plenty of attention. Andy doesn't say how he got the paper off the floor, but he doubtless displayed the same ingenuity that prompted him to put it there in the first place.

GUEST EDITORIALS

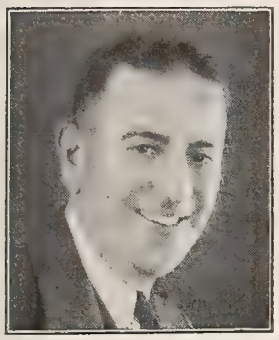
WHAT DO THEY WANT?

by WILLIAM A. BROWN

Manager, Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

I am going to try and express the thoughts of the average Patron seeking a happy relief from their daily toils and care.

Let us take it for granted that on leaving their homes they know in advance what is showing at your Theatre. The Means of this knowledge has been brought to them through your Screen Coming Attractions, Programs, Newspaper Outdoor Ads and Telephone inquiries.



Now, what are you doing to sell them their all-time wants? That you have the very best and latest show values in your Neighborhood, the satisfaction and comfort of a cozy home, Sound that has clearness and volume to satisfy the palate of everyone's individual hearing, and the last, but to my mind the most important is "SERVICE."

Again satisfying the whims and temperaments of all classes of Patrons. He or She should be sold the minute that they reach the front of your outer lobby. I am quite positive that we have underestimated this point of entrance regardless of what section of the city your Theatre may be located. Neatness and Cheerfulness will charm the Most Savage Temper.

Gaudiness and Overcrowding your Front and Lobby, more times than others bewilders them to the point of not knowing what your coming attractions are or what you are Now Showing.

From this point on "SERVICE" predominates. On Patron reaching Box Office same should be clean and well lit. Cashier should look Cheerful and Thank each Patron on purchase of ticket, sending them away in a happy frame of mind to the Doorman, who also carries the same Greeting.

We are now reaching our last two selling points of "SERVICE." First the usher at the head of the aisle should also Greet the Patron with a "Good Evening" or "Good Afternoon" as the case may be, and then inquire as to where they wish to sit, and if possible take them there. Once seated our last sale of Good Will and "SERVICE" is before them, namely, The Picture on the Screen, Sound, Projection; on one or all three depends whether we shall have those Satisfied Patrons back at each change of Shows.

All Neighborhood Theatres must drive on some point.

They show all pictures, whether 1st, 2nd or 3rd Run. To keep them from going elsewhere we must sell them the idea that WE have the BEST in SOUND, PROJECTION, SCREEN ATTRACTIONS. VENTILATION GOOD AT DIFFERENT PERIODS OF THE YEAR. QUIET AND ORDERLY AT ALL TIMES. ALSO SAVING THEM THE TROUBLE OF TRAVELING EITHER BY BUS OR SUBWAY. All these for THEIR COMFORT AND HAPPINESS.

Nothing can stop your VALIANT March of Progress in ANSWERING—WHAT DO PATRONS WANT?

LIVE AND LET LIVE

by E. E. BAIR

Manager, State Theatres,East Liverpool, Ohio

If you are an executive, a manager, a superintendent it is quite likely that some subordinate comes under your direct tutelage or supervision. That subordinate was no doubt chosen after a very careful selection of a host of applicants. You prided yourself upon your selection of the right man for the job. You coached him to do the things the way you wanted them done — you made a round peg fit into a square hole.

Possibly in off moment ego you gave yourself credit for everything that employee did correctly—things that were of his own origination—things that he should have credit for. Is there a deep-rooted reluctancy in your heart to give him that credit? Do you feel that genuine satisfaction of accomplishment when you relate to your friends and superiors that YOU did the work and the job well done when in reality they themselves know that YOU did not actually do it? However, they know that you are nonchalantly taking the credit yourself.

Remember, "way back when you first started." You had various superiors—you liked one much better than another. There was a reason. The one that you liked—the one that you would do anything for did not "haggle" you. You made mistakes, and he corrected you in a manner that made you have more respect and admiration for him. He was a regular fellow. He made you appreciate your responsibility; on the other hand, he did not hold himself aloof; he was not a bitter sweet picture of self-imbued ego that all the employees appreciated most when he was absent.

You are fed up with that bold front without any backing—that evasiveness so often practiced in this picture business of ours. IT'S ALL WRONG.

That spirit will influence a patron to go two blocks farther down to the other theatre—he will pass up your door if that friendly spirit is lacking in those employees you hired.

If an employee does not follow your instructions to the "T" it is oftentimes well to remember that a man to be good enough to hold an important post ought to be good enough to know when not to follow orders—or when to vary them—as well as to know how to carry them out accurately and literally. Sometimes conditions which existed at the time the orders were given change sharply. That employee left on his own resources, who does not know when to adjust his orders to meet the changed conditions is not giving the proper kind of service.

That executive that will sharply criticize that employee when in his own heart knows full well that the employee acted intelligently even though he did not exactly follow orders—is not giving himself or organization the service it might deserve.

Good organizations are built upon a certain definite principle. A Golden Rule principle. It can't lose. Live and Let Live, if you want solid and sound progress. Otherwise it's an explosion.

QUICK SERVICE IDEAS THAT WORKED

BEN BLACKMON, JR., now at the Paramount, Syracuse, said farewell to Tampa, Fla., where he skippered the Victory Theatre by promoting a four-column full half page free ad in the Tampa Times on "Gabriel Over the Whitehouse." Ben used the always reliable classified gag of having the paper run a box of questions regarding advertisers, the answers to which are to be found in the various ads on the page. . . .

LOUIE CHARNINSKY, that enterprising showman who is now at the Queen Theatre in Austin, Texas, whence he came from the Booth Theatre in Independence, Kan., recently put on an excellent front when he played "Circus Queen Murder." Louie erected a real "main entrance" to the "big top," which included everything possible to get the front to look like a real circus. . . .

RICHARD ENGLAND, manager of the Virginian Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., got his picture in the Charleston Gazette recently and has none other than Conrad Nagle to thank for the publicity. The paper's artist runs pictures of folks who look alike and, judging by the tear sheet mailed us, there's no denying the striking resemblance between Dick and Conrad Nagel. . . .

WILLIAM K. VAN ZANT, one of the owners of the Wash. Park Theatre, Denver, is putting over a popularity contest in which he is giving away a National Jr. Racer as the capital prize. You can bet the kiddies are working hard to get the votes. The idea is meeting with success and is proving an excellent box-office stimulator. There are many theatres in Denver giving prize nights; giving away groceries, radios, automobiles and other prizes in order to combat the summer slump here due to the heavy competition from the amusement parks. . . .

JAY GOULD, veteran manager of the Crystal Theatre, Glenco, Minn., believes in giving away something new in the way of prizes. So, with 3.2 beer being popular in his little city, he gave a case away to the holder of the lucky ticket. Jay says the idea met with approval and really helped to stimulate business. He plans on doing this again from time to time, but not overworking the idea too much. . . .

RICHARD M. THOMASON, of the Crystal, Ellis, Kansas, sure makes a few dollars go a long way to put over his shows. He has built a permanent 3 x 10 foot signboard over his marquee, with current attraction on one side and coming attraction on the other, board lighted by 100-watt lamps. Bob also sends along a lot of other good stuff, such as "Gift Night" and free concerts by high school band. Glad to have your stuff, Bob, and don't be a stranger to these pages. . . .

"42ND STREET SPEED"

No small reason for the success of "42nd Street's" run at the Warner Milwaukee resolves itself into the exploitation campaign engineered by Ben Katz, ad director for circuit in Wisconsin, and Jack R. Keegan, Warner manager

Photos above show two phases of selling. One, a booth in downtown shopping center, wherein two young ladies solicited testimonials of thanks to Warners for making film. Two, an immense jig-saw puzzle, worked in the window of a down shop.

SID DANNENBERG, Warner exploiter in the Cleveland territory, as part of his campaign on "Gold Diggers of 1933," which opened at the Lake, Cleveland, to $200 better than "42nd Street," arranged for one of the most attractive window displays seen in this city in a long time. The feature of the display which was placed in a music store window, was one of the neon outlined violins used in the picture. The display also featured the music sheets of the hit songs of "Gold Diggers," in addition to an announcement of the opening of the picture at the Lake. The display attracted an unusual amount of attention from passers-by, all of whom stopped to inspect the neon violin. . . .

HARRY BOARDMAN, manager of the State Theatre, in Burlington, Vt., made a most excellent tie-up with a local marine company when he played "Speed Demon." In front of the theatre the marine company put on an outboard motor demonstration, during the run of the picture, which drew interested crowds, matinee and night. The novel demonstration was made with the aid of a barrel of water. . . .

It took the management of the Rialto at Atlanta to put over a big parade in which there were 15 cars used, supplied through a tieup with Austin Car Company, Ford and Mack Truck companies to exploit "So This Is Africa." The Parade, according to Manager W. T. Murray of the Rialto, lasted over three hours down through the business streets of that city. . . .

MISS ANN PFENNINGER, Cleveland, Ohio, sculptress, originated a new idea in exploitation in that city. When M-G-M's lion visited there recently she made silhouettes of the famous animal and has now opened a store in one of the busiest streets, where she has on display, statuettes of Leo. . . .

MAC KRIM, that high flyer at the Lasky, Detroit, must have a special interest in convicts if the last two campaigns he sends in are any criterion. On "Fugitive" he had five men in stripes tied inside of a lobby jail and had them singing and playing cards. For "Laughter in Hell" Mac switched to wax figures (he must have worn out the live stooges), placing them in the lobby to represent a scene from the picture. We bet you sing "Prisoners' Song" in your sleep, Mac. . . .

ED M. HART, the Plainfield (N. J.) whirlwind, sends along a couple of fast ones that had the town quite excited, so he says. At the Strand, he put on a stage wedding that spilled 'em in the aisles on the hottest night of the year. At the Oxford, the blindfolded driver stunt was put on with an act from the show, the front page announcements of which brought out a crowd that overflowed the sidewalk. . . .

GEORGE MOOSER, skipper of the Columbia, San Francisco, invited local Russians who saw service during the Czar's reign to see "Rasputin" when he played it. He used a traveling 24 sheet as one of the hot shot gags. Space in foreign and college press was promoted for passes; two radio stations put on special contests, one of which was for prizes for the most words made up of the title. Newsboys' theatre parties, newsstand tieups, distribution of library bookmarks, and critics' previews were other good box office used in this practical, balanced campaign. . . .

JERSEY GO-GETTERS

by AL ZIMBALIST

THE biggest thing that ever happened out here since the arrival of "42nd Street" was the "Hollywood Premiere" of "Gold Diggers of 1933," which has every section of Jersey talking and coming to the Branford Theatre, where it is enjoying an indefinite run. It's doing much more business than that record breaker, "42nd Street" . . . which many of you had the pleasure of playing. All credit for the elaborate premiere should be handed to Jules Curley, Bob Paskow, Walter Leach and the writer . . . who worked assiduously on every angle . . . even bringing all the biggies from City Hall to the theatre.

Cooperation

Never expect that which you would not give. If you ask a merchant for cooperation . . . be willing to share the load with him. . . . When you go out for a stunt or an exploitation gag . . . be sure that your idea will benefit all the parties concerned . . . because if it does not—then you are washed up in that spot and can't repeat. Give and take—you'll be better off. We know whereof we speak!

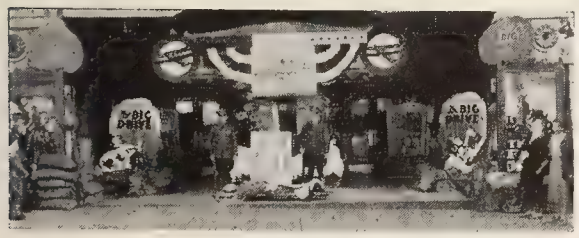
Jersey Jibes

Tony William shifted Harry Meyerberg from U. S. Hoboken to Lincoln, Union City, and Danny Lee from Union City to the Hoboken house. Creditors please note!!!! Dick Hill, assistant zone manager for Warner's here is celebrating the first year of baby's birthday . . . but no cigars. . . . Andy Goldberg and Jerry Rose broke house records last Tuesday with the semi-finals of his "Sunshine Girl Contest," which is being staged by the Warner Theatres throughout Jersey. . . . Other theatres are doing fine, too. . . . Bill Phillips of Loew's in Newark is using his money budget for outdoor advertising mostly. He figures now that summer's here . . . that's the best way to catch their attention . . . the writer, however, still believes that newspaper advertising is more powerful. . . .

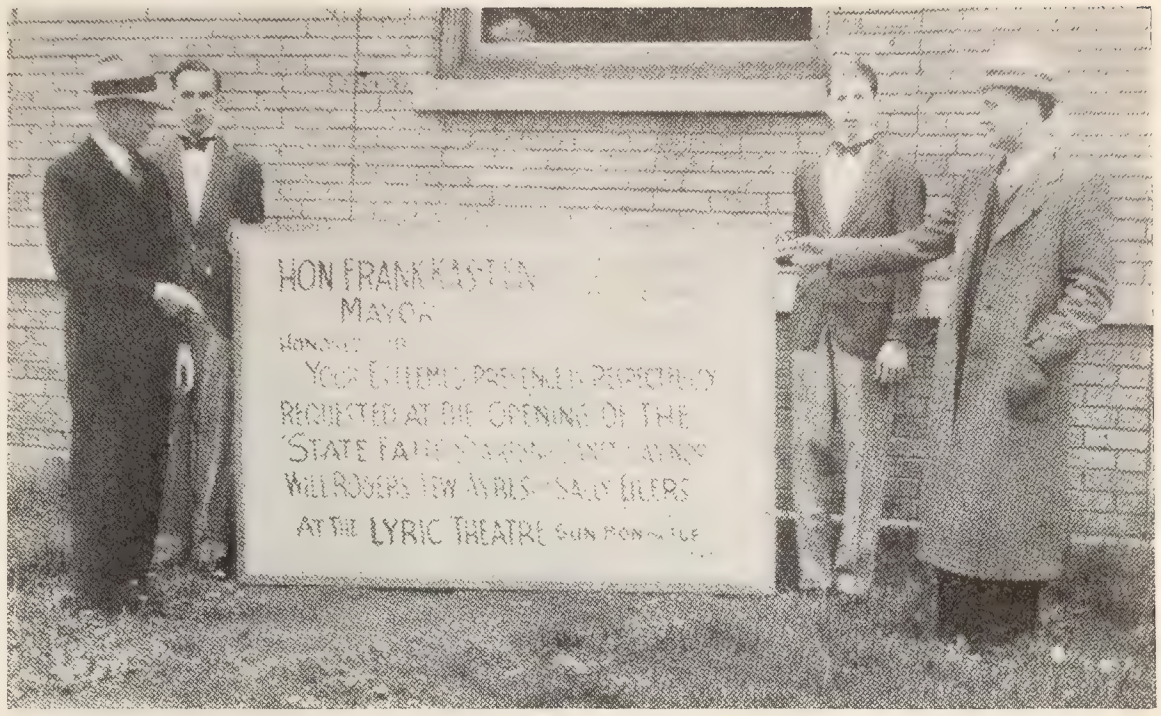
Mike Weshner of the U. S. Hoboken, broke house records with a stage wedding and a weak bill . . proving that you guys better give this angle a thought. . . . Refrigerators are bringing in business at Frank Costa's Warner house in Ridgewood . . . the Jersey Zone is making faces at first place in the National Drive now in progress. . . . Listen in here for another eyeful. I'll be seein' ya.

BIG DRIVE SUCCESS



Whether it's displayed in Timbuctoo or on Broadway, showmanship still remains showmanship. Leo Young, of the Isis Theatre, Lynchburg, Va., proves this constantly by the many great front displays he creates for his pictures. Look this one over for "Big Drive" and see if you can't use an angle or two on some future film.

WILLIAM HARDING UP ON HIS TOES!



The above stunt is emphasized not for its originality, but to point out again that a good idea, old or new, is worth whatever it adds to the gross. William Harding (right), City Manager Publix Theatres, Blue Island, Ill., writes that with the giant invitation he was able to get his Mayor's help in selling "State Fair" and to break the front page with the story and picture, both stunts helping to bring 'em in. Harding also says that the Round Table gives him many good ideas. Thanks, Bill, and keep on sending in your share.

SMITH SPECIAL AD, NEWS CO-OPERATION HELPED SELL SHOW

Continuing their spectacular show-selling, O. K. Mason, president of the Central States Theatre Company, and M. B. Smith, manager of the Royal Theatre, prove that even 'way out in the wheat belt it takes mighty fine showmanship to bring ever-elusive John Q. Public into the box-office; therefore Mr. Smith is eternally doping out new angles, the least of which was not his Merchants' "Trade Day" ad.

Here he secured space from every merchant in town. Each tradesman had a special to offer, and he let the public know about it, by advertising in the double truck ad, created by Smith, for the local newspaper. In addition to increased business, Smith obtained a corking place right in the center of the page. The newspaper was immeasurably gratified over Smith's stunt, and so, free of cost, it ran off three thousand heralds and distributed them.

That is the sort of co-operation that every showman strives for. It gives one a pleasurable glow of satisfaction to see newspaper editors, those sages of the world, helping showmen all over the country, giving them a boost here, a movie column there.

In Smith's case, the co-operation is clearly seen. Weekly, the newspaper allows him to write a chatter column, it publishes a review of the strongest picture of the week, written by a student in the high school journalism class, and does everything else it can to help. That is the type of friendship that aids not only the Fourth Estate and one of the world's largest industries, but helps build towns into cities. Keep it up, M. B. You know all your Round Tabler friends are glad to hear from you. You're sure turning out great stuff.

ADAPTATION!

Walter Morris, manager of the Warner Theatre, Staunton, Va., passes along this ad adaptation of the "I Am a Fugitive" title. And Walter didn't write either the ad or the copy. It was done by a live-wire newspaper advertising crew in Charlotte, N. C., and Walter sends it to the Club so that other showmen can look it over and get a line on what can be done with just a little thought.

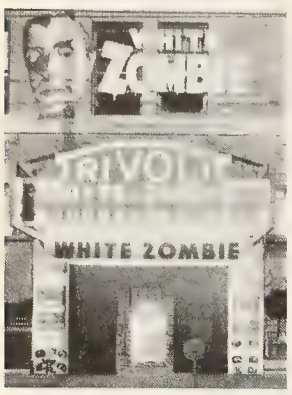
EDDIE HOUGH BUSY WITH HIS NEW JOB IN GREENVILLE, S. C.

Formerly in charge of the Ritz Theatre, Columbia, S. C., and since the death of Manager H. C. Brown appointed skipper of the Rivoli, Greenville, S. C., Edwin C. Hough has been keeping things humming from the time his transfer went into effect.



For instance, here's one of those Big Pass stunts you can try out on your own local newspaper critic, providing, of course, that you're on friendly terms with the gentleman. The caption, under a deep, two-column photo that appeared in the news section of this particular newspaper explained that it was the largest theatre pass ever issued to a Greenville person; that the recipient was the sports editor; that the occasion was "Madison Square Garden," and that the donor was Eddie Hough, of the Rivoli. The sports editor was shown holding the gigantic pass.

The other photos show what Hough has been able to accomplish with his standardized fronts. The small one on "White Zombie" shows the effect of four flood lights, borrowed from the local airport and trained on the entire front from a point across the street. While the marquee border lights were turned off the message letters stood out in white and green. Letters spelling name of theatre were dark, natural blue. Top and sides of the lobby entrance were shrouded in black cloth drapery.

The shot of the front on "Congorilla" again illustrates the standard front, combined with an action display atop the marquee. The live bally standing on the sidewalk created an unusual attention. All in all, business was great.

Eddie cashed in nicely on a publicity gag not long ago when the local time service company gave up the ghost. Following an announcement in the newspaper, they now call the theatre for correct time and Eddie sees that the five hundred people who daily make phone calls are tipped off on what's playing. And it works nicely.

We're glad to hear that Hough is getting along so well with his new assignment and know that he and others miss their former associate, Brown. Eddie is now working under the Publix-Kincey banner and we'll be telling you more about his activities in forthcoming issues.

"BITTER TEA" WAS SWEET PICTURE FOR SHOWMAN O. MILLER

Perhaps one of the strongest selling points on his campaign for "Bitter Tea of Gen. Yen" was the lobby display created by O. H. Miller, manager of the Alama Theatre, Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

Two weeks before play date, Miller built a white lattice and trellis archway forming a small room 14 by 14. Lattice in the background was elaborately decorated with artificial wisteria, with Chinese letters, in gold and black, carrying the title of the picture. Chimes, lanterns and Buddahs burning incense carried out the Chinese Motif.

A week before playdate, two usherettes in Chinese maiden costumes handed out heralds and miniature Chinese parasols. The rest of the campaign, too, was completely covered, such as teaser ads in the newspapers; plenty of outside advertising, and a special tie-up in the paper offering free tickets to persons making most sentences out of the picture title. It was a well planned and executed campaign and Miller deserved the box-office business he did.

Oversized Pass

PREVIEW OPENING GUN DARRELL FIRED TO SELL "BE MINE"

A preview, held several days in advance of the opening, and to which society leaders, city officials, newspaper critics, orchestra leaders, heads of music schools and societies and radio officials, were invited, was the opening gun in a splendid campaign waged by Charles H. Darrell, manager of the World Theatre, Minneapolis, for "Be Mine Tonight."

This preview gave Darrell an opening wedge that made the rest of his campaign easy to accomplish, and started that invaluable aid, word of mouth advertising.

Two advance rave reviews, secured through the preview, were blown-up and used in special front panels. Contact was made with music schools and music departments of high schools and colleges, announcing special rates for large student groups on stated matinees.

A tie-up with the Minneapolis Star secured considerable extra publicity through a Ferrara Identification Contest offering prizes of passes to persons identifying a young man representing the character from the picture. Arrangements were made with two of the city's largest radio stations to include the song hit, "Tell Me Tonight," in several of the programs, with a mention of the picture and the theatre.

Practically all of the city's prominent music stores devoted their windows to displays of the sheet music from the picture, using stills, lobby photos, display lines, etc. The stencil offered in the presswork was used to place the title on all principal downtown street corners. The service mat of a miniature reproduction of the song hit was used for a special throw-away for distribution through music stores, hotels and at the theatre. Duke Hickey, Universal exploiteer, assisted on the campaign.

DAN FINN STAGED A HOLLYWOOD OPENING FOR "GOLD DIGGERS"

Public interest in "Gold Diggers of 1933" was whipped to a high pitch by Dan Finn's most aggressive exploitation campaign. Finn, who is the Warner Theatre Zone Manager in New England, papered the territory for a radius of 20 miles around New Haven with 1,500 pieces of paper. He used 12 beautiful girls wearing gold costumes with "Gold Diggers" sashes make a house-to-house canvas with handbills, which were also distributed to pedestrians. The advance lobby at the Roger Sherman was the most elaborate the town has seen. A giant set piece, eight life-sized colored standees of the stars and the "Gold Diggers" girls; 30 special 27x64's in color of the stars and girls, mounted on gold backgrounds, hundreds of stills made up in special lobby frames, all decorated the lobby and helped establish the bigness of "Gold Diggers." A beautiful float, with 12 gorgeous girls in costume, made up part of the street ballyhoo. This float, which played the song hits in the picture, also carried an exploitation record.

Finn did everything expected of a real showman by taking advantage of the fact that the picture opened during Yale Commencement Week. The opening was the first Hollywood opening New Haven had ever seen, with the event advertised as the "Eastern Premiere." The house was closed Thursday noon and decorated for the gala opening which took place at night.

Delaware Association Widens Scope, Changes Name of Unit

The Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of Delaware widened its scope of activity at a monthly meeting at Harrington, Del., last week. At the same time the name of the organization was changed to Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Delaware and Eastern Shore of Maryland, the change following the admission to membership of the Dentonian theatre, Denton, Md., and the Federal theatre, Federalsburg, Md. President A. Joseph DeFiroe presided.

A code of ethics was included in the by-laws of the organization to work between the exchange, producer, exhibitor and distributor, in line with other organizations. The by-laws will be brought up for approval at the next meeting.

Boston Dramatic Critic Dead

Nicholas "Nick" Young, dramatic critic of the Boston American for 23 years, died at his home in Newton, Mass., last week, at the age of 60. He was born in Massachusetts, was business manager of the Duluth, Minn., News-Tribune advertising manager of the Springfield (Mass.) Union, and city editor of the Boston Traveler before joining the American. He leaves a widow, son and daughter.

Express Rate Cuts Now in Effect

Fifty per cent express rate cuts on return film shipments are now in effect, in accordance with the Railway Express Agency announcement made May 8 by George S. Lee, vice-president. Negotiations for the reduction had been made over a long period by special representatives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and the MPTOA.

Savings to exhibitors as a result of this action will approximate $450,000 annually, or about 26.6 cents on each of the 12,000,000 film shipments made each year through the Railway Express Agency, which holds a virtual monopoly in railway express transportation throughout the country.

Most express shipments of motion picture film heretofore have been charged both ways to exhibitors, likewise parcel post. However, costs of motor dory deliveries are applicable only one way, and this competition was a factor in decision of the Railway Agency to adopt the reduction.

Tri-State MPTO Meeting on Tax

The MPTO of Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee, will meet at Jackson, Miss., on July 18 to effect a plan for bringing about repeal of the 10 per cent Mississippi admission tax. The governor of the state and important legislative officials are said to be in complete sympathy with the exhibitors and will lend their support when the plan of the theatre owners for tax repeal is placed before the state legislature at a special session called for August.

Ken Goldstone Sees Challenge from Britain

That British pictures will present a serious challenge to American product next season was the opinion expressed at Kansas City by Ken Goldsmith, president of Goldsmith Productions, on his way back to the Coast from a visit to London.

"They're gaining a remarkable knowledge of our production methods in England," Mr. Goldsmith said, "and their technical progress will be very noticeable in next year's releases." He added that business leaders in London are more optimistic than those in America.

Mr. Goldsmith was in London to extend his contract with Pathe Pictures for foreign distribution of the six feature dramas which he is to make for next season. Distribution in all American key cities has been set through independent exchanges, he said.

Detroit Closing Plan Dropped

The plan for closing Detroit theatres three days each week was canceled last week by Allied at a special meeting. Theatres already pledged were released. The plan collapsed when some theatres refused to comply because Publix would not agree to close its key houses part time.

Elliott Company Entering Theatre Field with Photos

The Elliott Service Corporation, New York organization which supplies a news photo advertising service to banks, industrial companies and merchants, plans the extension of the same service to theatres over the country, under the direction of Sidney Abel, formerly sales manager for the Photophone division of RCA.

The division handling the photographic service is known as Elliott Associated News. The special service designed for the outside of the theatre lobby has been prepared in the form of a 22x26-inch display. The company changes the news photo subjects weekly at a monthly cost to the exhibitor, according to the plan announced. It is designed to attract the attention of pedestrians to the theatre lobby.

Bucharest Roxy Honored On Newspaper Anniversary

The colorful history of the Roxy and Capitol theatres of Bucharest, Rumania, operated by Stefan L. Scherer and August Cont. Gusty, is traced in the fiftieth anniversary issue of the newspaper Universul, a comprehensive edition of many pages on June 5, and in color. A picture shows King Carol at the Capitol at a premiere.

Messrs. Scherer and Gusty provided the Rumanian capital with its first motion picture theatre.

Contests Trans-Lux Election

Ray L. Hall, owner of 100 shares of Trans-Lux Daylight Screen Corporation stock, has filed a petition in chancery court, Wilmington, Del., asking the court to determine the validity of the election of three directors on May 12 last.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

GOLDWYN'S "OR ELSE"

Determined, implacable in his independence, able producer Samuel Goldwyn this week gave active evidence of his intention of getting what he thinks is the right price for his product, "or else." From the Southland, where Saenger interests hold sway, recently came refusal to pay the percentage figure Mr. Goldwyn was determined his wares should bring. Immediately came the "or else" maneuver, as into the Saenger territory rushed a motorized train, equipped to show motion pictures, loaded with portable apparatus for exhibition in town hall, club room, store, even tent at a moment's notice, came to a halt in the Saenger stronghold, New Orleans. "The Kid from Spain," "Whoopee," will be the Goldwyn weapons of the moment. In towns where theatres acquiesce to the Goldwyn terms, deals will be struck. Where refusal lurks, the train of defiance will sweep into action. Planned shows: Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, with Earl Collins, Dewey Jones commanding the invasion. Many a time have producers threatened such retaliation for recalcitrance; few, if any, have turned threat into action. . . .

NEW PATRON

To town last week went Farmer Edward Valentine Gladstone, from his tract 13 miles from Murphy, N. C.—for the first time in 72 years. It was purely by accident, and Mr. Gladstone took a deep breath, summoned all his courage before stepping into the automobile ("afraid it would jump down the mountainside") which took him there. His wistful: "I'd kinda like to see that town before I die," at the local grist mill, was the cause of it all. In town he went to the pictures—and liked them so well that now he is talking of buying an automobile, actually moving to town—so that he may see them all. His visit over, he rushed home to tell 40-year-old daughter Willie May the whole story, for she has never been further than three miles from the farm. For the motion picture, another conquest. . . .

HYPNOTIC SUGGESTIONS

Earnest, sincere according to its lights is the indefatigable Women's Christian Temperance Union, ever on the alert for defamation of the national character. As always the motion picture forms a fertile field, is ever the objective of the crusading reformer. Last week in Milwaukee national convention assembled, WCTU heard from Miss Maud Aldrich, Gresham, Ore., motion picture department director, a firm indictment of today's motion picture. Exerting a "derogatory influence on the manners and morals of the nation," the film's "hypnotic suggestions have tended to break down the modesty of women; brought the manners and morals of the underworld to the top . . . have worn us down to the thinnest veneer of national decency." Controversial is director Aldrich's contention that prohibition is "the best friend the . . . industry ever had," because money spent in the saloon in "pre" days, is now spent for the recreation of the family. Once more the film "takes the rap." . . .

FILM'S PLACE

Hardly does it seem within the realm of possibility that a family of five, living on $16.14 per week, could attend the motion picture. Yet, as Miss Eva Smill, in her capacity as executive secretary of the Family Service Society of New Orleans, surveys it, that family can actually be cinema patrons to the extent of attendance twice each month. The erudite Miss Smill apportions 85 cents of her hypothetical family's "living" wage of $16.14 for recreation, and permits them two trips each month to a park where no admission is charged. It may well be borne in mind that the likely reference is to Louisiana, not New York. Complimented, however, is the motion picture that it is placed first in the category of entertainment in the daily activity of this, a family, hardly living, rather barely existing. . . .

BARRISTER'S DREAM

Anthony Hope Hawkins, young barrister-to-be in the London of the nineties, sat many a day with weighty legal tomes before him—but saw straight through them to a mythical kingdom of princes and princesses, hate and intrigue, melodrama and love. Then casting aside books and law, and his last name, Anthony Hope wrote "The Prisoner of Zenda," captured the fancy of two continents—and a fortune for himself—and became the rage of his time. Into the silent picture form were several of his novels of Ruritania and the daring dash of Rupert of Hentzau, keyed to the mind and heart of the lowly and the high-born, cast. And so to fame quickly rose Anthony Hope, vicar's son, later knighted by his king. Last week, in his beloved Walton, Surrey, Sir Anthony Hope, aged 70, passed away after a long illness, and with him passed the memory of an era in the history of the novel, and a once profitable idea in the motion picture. . . .

LUCKY LOEW

Soon to peculiar distinction may Arthur M. Loew, MGM's chief executive of foreign affairs, lay justifiable claim, much in the manner of the Prince of Wales, renowned periodical toppler from horses. Insatiable is Mr. Loew's appetite for airplane flights; undisturbed is he, apparently, by crackups, personal damage. Last year, air-touring the world, he crashed his plane—and headlines—taking off from the Zambesi River's famed Victoria Falls, in Africa. His pilot was killed, he was injured but slightly. From Roosevelt Field, Long Island, Sunday afternoon, Flier Loew took off for a short hop in his amphibian to his Glen Cove estate. Off the ground, Mr. Loew pulled the nose of his ship too high, the motor stalled 30 feet up, nosedived to earth, crashed. Out crawled Lucky Loew, shins scraped, neck cut, otherwise undamaged, improving his right to a doubtful distinction. . . .

$50,000 JOKE

Not wholly inapt was the parallel last week drawn by Hal Roach, pioneer comedy producer, before a business man's association in Kansas City, when he compared the production of a comedy with the telling of a joke. In effect: a joke heard may be extremely funny; retold, is a "flop." Starting production, a comedy appears funny; produced, may be a "flop." The sadly lurking difference, comic-concocter Roach emphasized, lay in the fact that a messed joke is costless, a comedy costs $50,000. Many and many a sad $50,000 joke have Hollywood producers told the public, the accountants. . . .

PRESS CRITICS TELL WHAT THEY THINK OF PUBLICITY

Newspaper Film Editors Say Press Representatives Are Writing Stereotyped Stories and Ignoring Policies

Urge Shorter Biographies, Restricted Output, Sincerity, Elimination of Superlatives, Cooperation with Publications

Press representatives of home office and theatre alike are passing up one opportunity after another to win space in newspapers for product and program, in the opinion of motion picture editors of the daily press.

With the new season opening and the abundance of fresh production material available, publicity men are falling into the worn groove of writing stereotyped stories and ignoring the requirements and policies of the individual newspapers, say the "Danas" of the motion picture pages.

"The press agent is as good as his mentality," wrote Eric M. Knight, of the Public Ledger at Philadelphia, adding that "some of them, then, haven't the sense of a two-reel comedy" while "others are keen, able, discerning." To him, "the general run of press agent gets stuff out that is good enough for the general run of movie scribbler on the general run of newspapers," but "if the newspaper is of the type that has what might be called metropolitan standards, 95 per cent of the press agent stuff is useless."

What the Editors Want

A composite picture of the out-of-town motion picture editor's expressed wants, which translate into what will appear in the newspaper at his selection, presents the following hints for the press agent:

Stories should be released simultaneously in all cities, large and small.

Biographies of players should be made shorter and snappier.

Good mats of stars and scenes are welcomed.

Special requests for material should be handled promptly.

Restrict the output of publicity stories.

Give superlative adjectives a well-earned rest.

Sincerity is essential to good advertising and publicity.

Follow through on publicity "breaks."

Stories written to feed the vanity of executives are valueless.

Misrepresentation is unnecessary and always has repercussions, with the editor "holding the bag"—but not more than once.

That the screen editor of the out-of-town newspaper is jealous of his publication's standing and of the independence of his own thought is evidenced in the general word of warning that what New York thinks may decidedly not be what the other city thinks.

"We don't give a good damn what New York critics think; in fact, we feel that we have a calmer and saner attitude than reigns in New York." This from Mr. Knight.

E. H. Gooding of the Buffalo Evening News expressed it this way: "Outside New York, forget how many stars Liberty or the Daily News gave any picture. Quote your local critics instead. They mean something in their town—New York tabloids don't."

Chester B. Bahn, of the Herald at Syracuse, N. Y., declared that "in the majority of provincial cities, including those with populations in excess of 200,000, motion picture publicity, as represented by the work of theatre press departments, is little more than a joke," and added: "A provincial editor occasionally can suggest a feature with local angles to the studio press department. A more general adoption of this practice might be beneficial all the way 'round."

An increasing critical-mindedness of the public itself, as noted by the editors, prompts the following "don'ts" from them:

Don't repeat.

Don't "expect a key city newspaper to fall for an asininely wild ballyhoo yarn just because you're out of New York."

Don't "sit back and cry hard times, and expect the newspaper to do all the selling."

Don't "whine when you get a poor notice."

Don't expect the exhibitor to be qualified to write a story capable of meeting city-room requirements.

Don't hand newspapers the sort of material that meets the standards of the more sensational screen fan magazines.

Don't try to sell anything blind to the newspaper. Call in the men whose aid you need.

Following are suggestions by various motion picture editors, presented in each instance to fulfill the double objective of pointing out what is "good copy" for them as well as potentially "good press" for the press representative:

ERIC M. KNIGHT
Philadelphia Public Ledger

"The press agent, like everything else, is as good as his mentality. Some of them, then, haven't the sense of a two-reel comedy. Others are keen, able, discerning. National P. A.'s, such as Lynn Farnol, are as able in providing good material as the movie editor who needs it. . . .

"If the newspaper is catering to subnormia, it's all simple. If the newspaper is of the type that has what might be called metropolitan standards, 95 per cent of the press agent stuff is useless. And the press agent of low mentality finds himself faced with the impossible problem of providing material of a standard he can't comprehend.

"It's all a matter of mass production. The press agent matter hits the norm, and the paper that isn't satisfied with average stuff has to dig up its own.

"Many out-of-town press agents come here convinced that all non-New York newspapermen are small-town hicks. They reason something like this. I live in New York. New York is a big city. I like New York. Therefore, every one else should like it. This bird is still on an out-of-town paper. Therefore he must be one of two things: not good enough to get a job in New York, or so utterly goofy he doesn't understand the glory of that big city. Thus he is either an idiot or an incompetent to be still on this paper. Therefore I can hand him any kind of guff.

"So they bring in the pictures that 'Gangland Dared Hollywood to Make' and that were 'Taken From Secret Archives,' and then they are outraged because the out-of-town critic doesn't accept his role of idiot and swallow the stuff. They say in choking tones: 'Why, the New York critics went for it.' To which our obvious reply is that we don't give a good damn what New York critics think; in fact, we feel we have a calmer and saner attitude than reigns in New York. The next move, generally, is to have some one in New York send us an important wire—saying that Moe Zook is a friend of Jim Zunk, who knows you well, and will you, therefore, give this picture a 'break.' All of which sets you to wondering if this is the method by which so many pieces of hogwash get such yelping sendoffs.

"The whole matter has a million ramifications. Nationally the mail-order publicity sent out hits the norm it wants to.

"But for the press agent traveling with a show or a film that is to be road-showed, there could be a few words of advice.

"Don't start telling the key cities what New York thinks. The key cities may be far more interested in their own thoughts.

Other Places to Live, Too

"Most of the people in the nation are not sold on the idea that New York is the home of truth, light, virtue and genius, as is proven by the fact that most of the people of the nation don't live in New York. There is even a faint possibility that a few people don't live there because they like their own city better as a place of living.

"Don't start to argue with a clipping about what Walter Winchell said. There is quite a chance that the out-of-town critic may think Walter Winchell a heel.

"Find out what sort of a newspaper you're trying to sell a story to. Remember that there are newspapers such as the Boston Transcript, the Providence Daily Journal, the Kansas City Star, the Baltimore Sun and the Philadelphia Ledger which, through many years of expert journalism and brilliant management, stand in their cities as dignified authorities, as daily publications that are not considered any less in stature than the New York Times.

"Don't expect a key-city newspaper to fall for an asininely wild ballyhoo yarn just because you're out of New York. Neither a movie editor nor a city editor gets his job on a paper that may run from 100,000 to 500,000 circulation because he's a gullible idiot.

"All the above does not mean that there are not press agents of skill and acumen traveling with the road-shows. There are. And they need no advice from me. But there are the other kind, too. They do need the advice; but they couldn't understand it if they got it."

DAN THOMPSON

Louisville Courier-Journal and Times

"I find that even after years of using short readers of from 10 to 15 lines no press agent ever sends in less than 30 or 40. Then, too, he is too often content to rewrite (and often not that) what he finds in the press book instead of trying to provide snappy, readable material of a near-feature type.

"For the movie press agent of producers we have more to say. Their weekly releases, including notes on newly-bought pictures, future plans and the like, are quite well handled for the purposes of the Times, although their idea of what newspapers want on their movie pages is too much akin to the standards set by the more sensational movie magazines. Their press books are often deplorably inadequate, dull and stilted. They are often badly edited, with absurd statements comparable only to the hyperbolic advertisements which adorn the pages of the newspapers and cause the public to think that only high-powered adjectives can be used to sell any picture.

"The one thing which every sincere movie editor must resent is the inclusion of 'reviews' in the press books.

"Another thing press agents should realize right now is that movie fans everywhere are becoming more cynical and more critical. Their reaction to trailers and advertisements which play up a coming attraction as the finest ever made is immediately antagonistic. Sincerity is needed in advertising and publicity, but ingenuity, originality, good style and a humorous treatment may often turn a piece of copy into readable entertainment. In other words, movie entertainment should be sold in an entertaining way. Let that idea sink in and publicity will soon be almost what it should be."

CHESTER B. BAHN

Syracuse Herald

"Editors are expected to find material in press books, of which the least said the better in at least 80 per cent of the cases, or to provide their own covering notices.

"It must be apparent that there is a decided loss in space beneficial to the box office. No editor relishes the attempt to cast him in a press agent role that a theatre may save a salary, nor is such a move likely to find favor with the publisher.

"Unfortunately, not all stories emanating from a studio publicity department are legitimate—that is, have a factual basis. On more than one occasion, I have found myself holding the bag.

"I should say that the first move to be made in any campaign to increase the efficiency of the studio publicity departments would be to restrict the output. Movie editors are swamped with too many trivial, frequently repetitious items. One suspects, and with reason, that they are written merely to keep the mimeographers busy and the postage bills at an impressive figure.

Written To Feed Vanity

"A second complaint, and an important one, relates to the distribution of stories that obviously have been written to feed the vanity of some executive. Their news value is insignificant, and yet it is usually these stories that, once discarded, turn up a second time as the gift-of-love from the manager of a local theatre with film company ties.

"Speaking generally, movie publicity, from squibs to features, is stereotyped. The outstanding exceptions are the feature releases from Warner Bros.-First National. These have a fresh, human-interest approach, as a rule, and are written so as to require little editing. Moreover, a request for special service brings an unusually cheerful and prompt response.

"A provincial editor, of course, occasionally can suggest a feature with local angles to the studio press department. I have done so for years. A more general adoption of this practice might be beneficial all the way 'round.

"Some companies attempt this sort of thing, but not exactly successfully. For example, I have had a request in for one story since last December, and am still waiting.

"The most intelligently edited daily news services, in my opinion, are those of Paramount and Fox. Either must be accepted as a model for the industry.

"As for press books, if a choice must be made, those of United Artists impress as the most competently written.

"For a final comment, this: Publicity mat services leave much to be desired, both in quality of art work and engraving as well as subject matter. The former is particularly atrocious, what with retouching and deep etching. Proof? Study the average press book or clip sheet. Or, perhaps better still, note how few publicity mats actually are used."

E. H. GOODING

Buffalo Evening News

"With signs of general business improvement manifest in many directions, there is too much of a tendency to sit back and cry hard times, to expect the newspapers to do all the selling.

"Where are the demon press agents of today—the type like the late Harry Reichenbach, who could make things happen that look like news? There is an appalling dearth of material that has general interest.

"The attitude of too many New York publicity departments, that editors of out-of-town papers are credulous fools catering to unobservant morons, makes it difficult to put across many good stories.

"Misrepresentation is unnecessary and always has repercussions. A high-pressure press agent had a picture of four Hollywood cuties in a plane, who had flown from the Coast to New York to deliver prints of a certain film. In his campaign in another town, he sent in the picture to the leading local daily, with the notation that the girls would drop a print of the film at the local airport. When the authenticity of his informaion was checked and found lacking, the picture naturally was doomed. Perhaps he wonders why.

"Another tip to exploitation men—don't try to sell anything blind to any newspaper. If you have a big picture you know has the goods and want newspaper help in putting it over, call in the men whose aid you need and screen it for them.

"Study the needs and rules of each individual sheet. It pays.

"Cross-questioning of one advance man who really knows his business revealed that several phoney newspaper tieup contests he was trying to put over were merely for the press-book, to impress company executives. They had no value to the paper or the picture in question. Thus the time of two men who could have been better employed was wasted.

"Comb the MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC thoroughly when planning a campaign in any town. The biographical section will reveal local connections of many players that you may never have suspected—and they make legitimate and valuable tieups.

"Don't continually use superlatives in advertising each week's picture. If you ballyhoo each one as the 'greatest,' you have nothing left to say when a really great one comes along. It is misleading advertising.

"Paramount's tag line on 'Jennie Gerhardt,' a truly inspired slogan if ever there was one, was more effective than a dozen superlatives—'The kind of picture every woman wants every man to see.'

"Don't waste your time and stir up the local critics' suspicion and displeasure by sending them all the favorable reviews you can find on a picture of which you are doubtful.

"And, above all, don't whine when you get a poor notice. If the picture is a flop, it won't help. If it has audience appeal, forget what he says and advertise and plug it to the limit."

PAUL WALKER (L.U.K.)

Harrisburg Telegraph

"The news (when such it be) is sent to the smaller cities several days after appearing in the New York papers. There's no reason why the items couldn't be released simultaneously in all cities.

"The biographies of actors prepared by some p. a.'s could be shortened, made more snappy.

"The matter of art! Smaller city dailies depend on mats. Good mats of stars and scenes from forthcoming pictures could be used by this writer. Mats in bulk are inexpensive.

"Special requests are overlooked. For instance, Spencer Charters is a Pennsylvania actor. For weeks I've been waiting for a biography and mat of him—from Warners'. None available, they say.*

"Too much repetition. Frequently the same story about a star turns up from two or three sources. Not much originality there.

"Why not some hot news to flavor the usual run of drivel. For instance, the readers of another column this writer turns out are clamoring for stork news. It's news, and the stars don't mind."

Portland (Ore.) News-Telegram

"It is my opinion that the average motion picture press agent hasn't the least idea as to what interests the readers in any particular city. I believe a good press agent should acquaint himself with the interests of the readers in the various cities.

"Also, the average press material received at my desk is too long to use in any average daily newspaper.

"If this could be overcome by the story coming immediately to the point and avoiding the use of overworked adjectives, I am sure it would pass muster in any leading city."

RESTRICT OUTPUT, SAYS CHESTER BAHN

ADMISSION PRICE RAISE DISCUSSED AS FILM CODE DRAFTING ADVANCES

Exhibitor Units Act on Tentative Draft; Hays Goes Over Ground with Studio Executives; Independents Meeting

With a decision more than probably imminent to fix a deadline for submission of industrial codes of fair competition to General Hugh S. Johnson, federal administrator of the Industrial Recovery Act, the motion picture industry this week continued discussions for formulation of codes for all branches. Tentative codes of exhibition and distribution have been drawn up by members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and the executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and these are being studied by various groups. Distributors in New York, both the larger companies and the independent, this week held conferences; Will H. Hays and Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel for the MPPDA, were in Hollywood discussing a production code with studio executives, and the executive committee of the MPTOA was in Chicago to conclude discussion of and possibly to ratify a code for exhibition.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, headed by P. S. Harrison, also has formulated rules and regulations in code form, governing independent production, exhibition and distribution. NAMPI will hold further discussions on this proposed code July 24-25 in New York.

Business Continues Upward

Throughout the nation this week business generally continued on the upward trend and the surest indication that conditions are getting better in the film industry is the talk, in many sections, of raising admission prices. In Pittsburgh exchangemen are planning to call an exhibitor meeting in an effort to bring about a general admission price increase. The Toledo Amusement Managers Association has appealed to exchange managers to enforce their contracts which call for a 10-cent minimum and have urged them to establish a minimum of 20 cents for first-runs. Business in Cleveland jumped more than 50 per cent last week when steel mills near Steubenville took on several thousand new employees, and admission price raises are being discussed by Cleveland exhibitors. There is talk in Los Angeles of scaling up admissions, in many cases as much as 40 per cent. Several New York theatres are discussing the situation and two first-runs, the RKO Roxy and the original Roxy Theatre, already have raised prices.

In Hollywood, Mr. Hays is devoting his time to calling upon producers individually for discussions of the industry's code in all its phases. When this has been accomplished a round table meeting of all large producers and studio leaders will be held to draw up at least a tentative outline for a production code.

Assailing a "small group of professional organizers who have set out to oppose the plans of the new Administration," Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, last week declared that these individuals are "trying to obstruct

Roosevelt Appoints Walker Head of New Council for National Recovery

Frank C. Walker was named on Tuesday by President Roosevelt to become executive secretary of a Recovery Council—a "super cabinet" of the federal government—to guide the nation along the road to recovery. Mr. Walker has been general counsel of the M. E. Comerford motion picture interests for eight years.

The creation of a Recovery Council to coordinate the activities of all the agencies of the Administration's "New Deal" was a vastly important departure in American governmental practice. In announcing the organization of the council, Mr. Marvin H. McIntyre, one of the President's secretaries, said:

"In order to coordinate the organization and work of the new governmental agencies" which are combating the nation's economic problems, the regular Tuesday Cabinet meetings with President Roosevelt "will be replaced by a Council meeting.

"To provide for the orderly presentation of business, and to coordinate interagency problems between the various departments and agencies, the President has asked Frank C. Walker to act as executive secretary of this council."

FRANK C. WALKER

Mr. Walker assumed his new duties immediately and the Council met for the first time on Tuesday afternoon in the Executive offices at the White House.

Members of the Council named Tuesday by President Roosevelt consist of the following heads of all of the newly created recovery agencies, and, in addition, the members of the Cabinet; Lewis W. Douglas, director of the Budget; Jesse L. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Henry Morganthau, Jr., governor of the Federal Farm Credit Administration; George N. Peek, administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act; General Hugh S. Johnson, administrator of the Industrial Recovery Act; Joseph B. Eastman, Federal Coordinator of Transportation; Harry Hopkins, Federal Relief Administrator; William F. Stevenson, chairman of the Home Loan Corporation; Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority; Robert Fechner, director of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Creation of the Recovery Council is another step toward national recovery. Its activities, therefore, will have a direct and most important bearing on the future economic activities of the motion picture industry and on every other business, assuming, as it does, concentrated executive control with President Roosevelt of all of the governmental armies recruited to campaign for business restoration.

Frank C. Walker reaches the pinnacle of an impressive career as "Grand Marshal" of the "New Deal." In his choice, the President has taken one of his most highly trusted personal friends and political associates.

Mr. Walker has been prominent in the motion picture world. Shortly after his seventh anniversary as general counsel of the expansive Comerford theatre interests in New York, Pennsylvania and New England, he was appointed, on Aug. 1, 1932, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee.

During the Roosevelt campaign, he was one of the key strategists. In that position there developed a closer association and friendship with Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. Walker was born 49 years ago at Plymouth, Pa. His parents moved to Butte, Mont., when he was a boy. Studies at Gonzaga College, Spokane, and at Notre Dame the development of a code." Mr. Kuykendall also said the MPTOA's tentative exhibition code is based on the principle of self-regulation.

"We believe," he said, "that the 'home rule' features are of great advantage to every exhibitor, that local arbitration boards with broad powers can and will remove abuses in connection with unreasonable protection, unfair buying, cut-throat competition, and so on, without actually injuring any exhibitor, large or small."

Jobs and Pay Scales Not Set

It has been said in Washington that the relief of unemployment and the establishment of minimum wage scales are the two chief considerations to any industry code which may be submitted to General Johnson. Thus far the film industry code representatives have not acted upon this phase, but it is expected that when the intricacies of unfair competition and trade practices are ironed out this matter will be dealt with.

While representatives of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences have not yet met the Hays group, meetings have been held regularly for ten days, with all creative and technical branches sitting in. The Academy code committee met Friday to decide how and when to present its recommendations to Mr. Hays. On Sunday film editors and assistant directors held a conference and this week art directors, camera maintenance divisions and sound men will meet. The writers' branch of the Academy met Sunday night at the Roosevelt hotel in a special session, the purpose of which was to afford an explanation and discussion of the draft of new by-laws for the Academy.

Producers in Hollywood Thursday approved the Academy's reorganization plan, but before formally placing themselves on record in favor of the new constitution it was decided to ask for a differentiation in classification between company heads and executive employees. A committee, composed of Jesse L. Lasky, Sam Briskin and William Wright, was named to find a new designation for the branch.

Independents Invited

The MPPDA office this week issued invitations to approximately 30 independent operators, mostly distributors and local New York exchanges, to a second meeting Wednesday, at which the minimum wage and employment conditions were discussed.

The Motion Picture Code Conference in Hollywood is studying alleged monopolistic trade practices. The Conference has decided not to submit its own code but to work in close cooperation with the Administration in coordinating interests of all employee groups, organized and unorganized, so that each may have a fair consideration in fixing a minumum wage and maximum hours. Conference officials recently made the statement that under normal conditions there were approximately 3,000 accredited players in Hollywood, of which not more than 10 per cent ever had regular or steady part-time employment. Seventeen thousand extras were registered, but only 800 averaged daily work.

Meanwhile, throughout the country, many meetings on code matters are being held by Allied, MPTOA and other groups. In Milwaukee, last week, drastic penalties in the form of loss of zone clearance were set forth in the uniform zoning and clearance schedule drawn up under the sponsorship of the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, under Fred S. Meyer. This schedule has been adopted by a majority of exhibitors in Milwaukee county. Provisions against double features, selling of coupons, thrift cards, gifts, premiums and giveaways, are included in the schedule. With reference to advertising, the schedule provides that no subsequent run shall advertise any coming attraction until completion of the first run showing in Milwaukee. No mention of admission prices may be made in newspaper advertising copy, is another provision. First-run theatres using vaudeville are required to charge a top admission equal to that of the first-run picture houses. The maximum running time of any one show must be limited to 150 minutes, with units limited to five or three with stage shows.

Wisconsin Indorses Draft

Ratification of the industry code as far as it has been worked out by the executive committee of the MPTOA in New York two weeks ago, was voted last week by the board of directors of the Wisconsin and Upper Michigan groups.

Allied of Iowa and Nebraska met in Des Moines Monday to study recommendations from the national headquarters for inclusion in any code which Allied may see fit to draw up. Independent Theatre Owners of Los Angeles approved the code of the MPTOA. Officers of Allied Theatre Owners of Texas met in Dallast Monday to draft a code of ethics.

Representatives of eastern laboratories met in New York to set in motion machinery for the drafting of a code.

In Kansas City a committee made up of one member from each industry in the state of Missouri will be named by Conrad Mann, president of the Associated Industries of Missouri, to present a united front on any provisions of the Industrial Recovery Act that have a bearing on that territory. Action committing the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association to a stand on the proposed exhibition code will be taken by the board July 18.

Dun & Bradstreet reports orders are being received from unexpected sources, many of them for amounts unequaled in years, while unemployment is being reduced each week and is accompanied by the encouraging announcements of more companies granting pay increases.

An increase of nearly $4,000,000,000 took place in the value of shares on the New York Stock Exchange during June, the monthly compilation of the Exchange shows. The average value increased from $25.10 to $28.29.

12 Banks Get Extension In Paramount Lien Case

Twelve defendant banks have been given additional time in which to file answers to a plenary action brought by Paramount-Publix trustees. Answers were originally scheduled to be filed in United States district court this week.

The action involves the transaction by which Film Productions Corporation had claims against Paramount-Publix transferred to Paramount Pictures Corporation. The 12 banks had a lien aggregating $13,200,000 against Film Productions Corporation, the trustees' action claiming the transfer of the claim constituted a preference for the banks over other creditors of Paramount-Publix.

Companies Ask New Trial

Arguments were presented before Federal Judge Baltzell in Indianapolis last week by attorneys for Fox, United Artists, Universal, Tiffany, Pathe and RKO, following the recent jury verdict of $120,000 awarded Harry Muller, exhibitor, in his suit against the companies. A new trial is asked by the defense. Decision is pending.

Walker Named to Recovery Board

fitted him for law and he began practicing at Butte. Notre Dame honored him with a trusteeship, about two years ago.

On his enerance into politics in Montana, Mr. Walker became a friend of the late Senator Thomas J. Walsh. He served as assistant district attorney of Silver Bow County, in which Butte is located, and later as a member of the Montana legislature.

Mr. Walker first met Mr. Roosevelt in 1920. He was chairman of the reception committee in Butte when Mr. Roosevelt stopped there during his campaign for the vice-presidency.

Eight years ago, M. E. Comerford called his nephew from Montana to assume the position of general counsel of his growing theatre interests. Later he was elected a vice-president. Mr. Walker located in New York.

Mr. Walker's close association with the Roosevelt organization started in 1930 in an obscure post on the citizens' campaign committee for Roosevelt's re-election as Governor of New York. Volunteering in behalf of Mr. Roosevelt's nomination for the presidency, he was drafted by Roosevelt to serve as treasurer of the Democratic national committee.

After the election, President Roosevelt offered Mr. Walker the choice of any post in the government, at home or abroad. Mr. Walker declined. The President later sought three or four times to draft him for official service: as Undersecretary of the Treasury; as temporary Comptroller of the Currency; as emergency director of the banking system, and for numerous other posts.

Frank Walker married the former Miss Hallie Boucher, of Butte. They have two children, Thomas J. and Laura Hallie.

Poli Seen Returning; Fox Met. Plan Due Soon

Sylvester Z. Poli, former owner and operator of the Poli circuit, with headquarters in New Haven, Conn., is reported there about to return to active exhibition, with his former circuit as a nucleus of operations. The move awaits action by the court to foreclose on Fox New England Theatres, which would dismiss the receivership. Decision is pending on a foreclosure motion.

Reorganization plans of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses are seen progressing rapidly, with a final plan expected shortly. The six months' receivership term expires on July 18 and a creditors' meeting is scheduled late this week in the United States district court to decide on a continuation of the receivership. Under the reorganization Skouras Brothers and Frisch and Rinzler will continue to operate the group of theatres now in their respective circuits. Numerous unprofitable houses are being weeded out.

U. S. FILM EXPORTS INCREASE IN SMALL EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

Factors Cited Include Loosening of Money Export, Quota and Tax Restrictions and Reduced Production in Germany

Several Countries Once Showing Chiefly German Product Turn to American; Morris Cites Improved Talker Technique

The market for distribution of American motion pictures in many small European countries is widening. A definite increase in exports of American film has been noted over a period of two and a half months. Varied reasons for the sudden change are advanced by executives of New York home office foreign distribution departments.

Not least among these reasons is the general loosening of prohibitions on money exports from countries like Jugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, with consequent relaxation on quota laws and taxation; a falling-off of production activities in Germany, for a long time the chief purveyor of cinematic entertainment for Holland, the Balkan states, particularly Rumania, and the Scandinavian countries, and political and public sentiment against Adolph Hitler's policies.

The "new" Germany has barred Jewish actors, directors and other creative studio workers from participation in production of motion pictures in Germany, promulgating a film law which stipulates that hereafter only 100 per cent Aryan pictures are to be classified as German productions. Foreign-born Germans are exempted if they have lived in the country for 10 years, but otherwise the law provides that a German film is "one made in Germany by a German company employing only persons of German origin." Joseph Goebbels, minister of propaganda, is authorized to permit the engagements of foreigners "only in cases of cultural or artistic necessity."

Hungarians Decry Action

In Hungary, critics and newspapers alike decry the German attitude and at the same time voice a welcome to American pictures. The people of Hungary have been surfeited with large numbers of "slow, dull and stodgy German pictures and we are glad of an opportunity to make room once more for good American films," said one critic.

Several other countries, which heretofore have imported chiefly German pictures, are now turning to the American producer for their film fare. Among these are Holland, the Balkans and the Scandinavian countries.

Norton Ritchey, vice-president and treasurer of Ritchey Export Corp., handling Monogram distribution abroad, last week reported an increase in business comparable to the boom period when the sound film was still a novelty. Since June, 1932, a 36 per cent increase has been made.

"Of course," Mr. Ritchey said, "we can never again hope to reach a peak anywhere nearly approximating that of the silent film, which was truly international, but during the past few weeks business has stepped forward in leaps and bounds. Many countries where we, a comparatively young company, have never done business, have put up barriers against German films and we are actually doing business there."

Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Jugoslavia, and a small section of Turkey have all begun to show signs of increased importation of American pictures, according to the United Artists foreign department, which is under supervision of Arthur W. Kelly. Egypt, too, is said to be getting away from the German film, but in the majority of these countries the improvement is chiefly the result of advancing monetary power and a loosening of tariff and quota restrictions.

Further indication of the ever-growing interest in the American motion picture is seen in the offer of subsidies by the Czechoslovakian government to American producers of pictures in that country. The large companies have not exported film to Czechoslovakia for more than a year, due to the exorbitant quota and heavy tax duty.

Joe Seidelman, of the Columbia foreign department, said this week that the increase in distribution activities now being noted abroad is due more to the falling off in production of German films than from any political feelings against German policy.

"There is a very marked stepping up of American distribution in Europe," said Mr. Siedelman.

Fox Film Corporation is looking forward to one of its biggest years in foreign business, according to Maurice Ahearn, assistant to Clayton Sheehan.

"In England particularly we expect to do enormous business," he said.

Fewer Showings in England

Wirespread sentiment against Germany's anti-Semitic policies has caused a sharp reduction in the showing of German productions in England. At Manchester, one of the largest industrial centers of the Empire, with a population of nearly two million, one-third of which is of Jewish origin, three first-run theatres, which hitherto had specialized on showing German pictures on certain days, were served with official notices from the city administration to discontinue this practice.

Universal's foreign department, under the guidance of N. L. Manheim, reported last week that very little change in the foreign market had been noticed.

Mr. Manheim also advanced the theory that the Hitler edict against Jews applies only to production and that distribution will not be affected, particularly as to Jewish-American representatives of distributors in Germany. One other company, however, already has taken steps to transfer its Jewish representatives to other countries.

In Berlin the decline in the number of first-run films, of all countries, shown in February and March continued through April with 21, 17 and 14, respectively, for these three months. This decline is still more noticeable for April as compared with the corresponding month of last year, when 21 first-run pictures were shown, a drop of 33 per cent. The number of first-runs in May was 12, of which eight were German-made, and four foreign, three of these American and one Italian.

This German share was 66 per cent as against 80 per cent in the preceding month, a further indication of the growing shortage of domestic product on the German market, especially when it is considered that the eight German films included one silent film and one synchronized version of an old Ufa picture, "Siegfried's Tod," produced more than eight years ago.

Of all the large countries, Germany has always imposed the most rigid restrictions on imports of motion pictures. Even in the days of the silent films, the Germans, as a whole, preferred to see domestic productions. American films have always been far too fast for them and the French product too delicate, according to one executive.

Morris Cites Improved Technique

Sam Morris, chief of Warners' foreign distribution, said this week that, in his opinion, whatever progress has been made is the result of an increasing appreciation of the technique of American films in countries which, since 1929, have been able to understand only home-made talking pictures and, recently, pictures dubbed in the native tongue.

"This is not merely a question of international sentiments and policies," Mr. Morris said. "It goes much deeper than that. When we sent sound pictures across the water the American film industry lost a great many potential patrons. The silent film was international, the talking film is not, and it was not until very recently that the dubbing process began to reach anything like perfection. The future, because of this dubbing, and because of the growing realization in this country that talk is not the fundamentally necessary part of a moving picture, will be correspondingly brighter for the American film abroad."

A considerable amount of agitation against importation of American motion pictures is under way in France. Louis Natan, of Pathe-Natan, one of the largest theatre circuits in Europe, two weeks ago presented recommendations to the government for either a complete embargo on American films or government subsidy of the domestic industry. Because the United States has reached its quota, the French government decided July 1 that no more American pictures can enter that country for the next three months. Film stock from Great Britain, Belgium and Germany will, however, be permitted to enter in reduced numbers.

If the Natan embargo plan goes through, distributors here are generally of the opinion that it eventually will harm the French industry, particularly the exhibition end. American distribution executives are confident that American pictures, with star names, are still in greater demand in France than pictures of any other country, even including their own. The offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America have, however, received no official pronouncements on the proposals.

'THE PICTURES MIGHT BUILD IT UP'

Says De Casseres of "The Mask and the Face"; Five Additional Play Possibilities Are Studied

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

THE MASK AND THE FACE

The Theatre Guild's last play of the season was a bizarre comedy, "The Mask and the Face," translated by Somerset Maugham from the Italian of Luigi Chiarelli.

The story sounds better than it acts. But here again the pictures might build it up into some farcical thrills. It is cock-eyed stuff. The theme is "Fidelity is not a virtue—it is stupid." But is it? That's the story.

Paola Grazia declares to a lot of post-war wiseheimers that if he caught his wife, Savina, with another fellow, he'd kill her.

Something happens to put Paola to the test. That very night Savina and another fellow are making whoopee. The Romeo makes a getaway. Paola tries to choke Savina, but he weakens. He gives her the air and declares that he sank the hussy in Lake Como.

The evidence against him is weak and he gets only six months. On the day he gets out Savina comes back heavily veiled (they always come back with black veils in Italian plays).

They get together again and have an old-time night when a body is dragged out of Como that looks like Savina. She is given a funeral while the married lovers clinch.

Picture value (Mack Sennett Prod.), 90 per cent.

HILDA CASSIDY

This story of the East Side, written by Henry and Sylvia Lieferant, calls for all the up-to-date sets in Hollywood: Sing-Sing, bootlegging joints, close-up of Irish sweepstakes tickets, cigar-store poolroom annex, a mistress' apartment—everything but a ship on fire in the old Paramount tank.

So you see "Hilda Cassidy" has some good old-stock picture material in it.

The atmosphere is respectable German East Side. Hilda's parents have broken with her because she married Tom. Tom has a Mamie Kimmel, whom he will not give up. Tom also snitches some of Hilda's savings, for he lost a hundred bucks on the ponies in the backroom of a cigar store.

By this time you, of course, know Hilda is about to bring a baby into the world. Tom keeps a-lying about the money and Mamie. (Atmosphere being sordid, better put Mamie for picture purposes in a near-swell dump.)

Ten years flit. The child is going to be confirmed. Tom is now selling stomach-boil hooch to the soldiers during the war. Mamie is still his side-issue. The latter wants more of Tom's time, and in a climacteric scene, which Hilda witnesses, Tom goes mistress 100 per cent.

Ten more years flit (1928). Tom coming out of Sing Sing for poisoning America. Big daughter now making the getaway with a swell racketeer to Europe. Tom is against it. Hilda, who has taken the count and has become a bit bored and cynical, is all for it. Whatthehell!

And Hilda wins. Honesty's the bunk. (Dat's jus' wot I think!)

Picture value, 70 per cent.

MAN BITES DOG

This is an hilarious farce, a brutal spoof at the tabloids, and might click on the screen if played fast and for brainless amusement purposes only. It's "Five-Star Final" inside out.

Doc. Sanger, managing editor (old war-horse Leo Donnelly), has got to put over his rag. It's in the red.

We see a rowdy city-room with the usual cynical and aged wisecracks from the copy-readers and dusty-Dick reporters. The publisher phones in that unless they get something big they can all fold up.

Well, the pipe-dream of all city-editors comes true: a murder takes place right in the city-room! They keep it under the Hinkel till Doc. can get out a special edition.

Now, the drunk who was shot at by the goil-in-red isn't dead at all. But the tab. is on the street and Doc. is near nuts.

Finally the girl, whom Doc. has got drunk, really does the job and Sanger's job is saved.

That's the kernel and nerts of the story. It's wild hokum and was a flat failure, although I got a lot of laughs out of it.

Picture value, 50 per cent.

UNTO THE THIRD

This solid comedy stuff centers around one big part, Lucien Case, Sr., played immaculately by Seth Arnold. This central character is recognizable as old John D., but there the Rockefeller matter ends.

Lucien is solid New England, hard-as-rocks, Big Business type. He runs his family on steam-roller lines.

His son, middle-aged, is yes-man to the old fellow. But there is a granddaughter, Muriel, who is hard-headed on her own account—she's of the no-no school.

The old man and his son count on Muriel marrying a fellow who was practically born in a bank. This alliance will sew up all the State's utilities for the Case dynasty.

But Muriel has gone hard for a son of the Governor, who (of course) is Honest to the Core and is the Foe of—well, you get it (he's the oldest picture character you know—the Interests of the People wheeze).

Muriel wins the kitty. The old man becomes human; and all ends as you and the Ebellians would wish.

Good old-fashioned picture here for the sane, home-loving zones.

Picture value, 60 per cent.

LITTLE OL' BOY

This might be called "The Last Mile" for boys. Albert Bein wrote "Little Ol' Boy," and it is a serious attempt to do something which seems ought to be done about reformatory schools.

I think we ought to have a good propaganda picture once in a while if it tells a hard-hitting story—like "Maedchen in Uniform." "Little Ol' Boy" has some strong business in it; but as a picture possibility, it would be a gamble. It is one of those things that no one knows anything about.

Nearly the whole thing, so far as the script is concerned, takes place in the bare room of a Mid-Western reform school.

Here we have thrashings, feuds, the squealer, the revolt of the boys, the knocking down of the guards, gun-play and the expiring kid.

It is effective drama and has some amusing characters as well as tragic faces.

The play left me up in the air as to picture possibilities. Personally, if I had the mazuma, I'd like to do it. It might break me, or I might clean up a million on it. So—

Picture value, unknown.

MARILYN'S AFFAIRS

This is a crazy shake of a play, but I've seen worse than this go swell-and-high in the pictures.

Marilyn and her girl pal, while swilling from a flask in a taxi, make a bet. Marilyn lays odds that she can make a man propose to her before another day yawns.

Marilyn—one of the bored debutante type—begins to flirt with Cortez, the taxi driver.

In a shoe-shine parlor they all bump into a cop who is looking for a taxi bandit.

All, including Tony, the shine-'em-up, go to Marilyn's Park avenue punk-house, and there she finds out what they want.

Tony wants to be a Caruso, Callahan, the cop, wants to be a detective, and the bandit taxi driver (for he's the fellow Callahan is looking for) wants nothing but Marilyn.

Now, you guess what happened in the third act, because I left after the second act for Murphy's speak-easy, next door.

Picture value, one Confederate dime.

EXHIBITOR REPORTS SHOW BRITISH FILMS HAVE ROW TO HOE IN U. S.

Briton Finds from "What the Picture Did for Me" Comment That Enthusiasm on Broadway Showing Has Him Confused

Blames Prejudice of Exhibitors for Coolness Toward Outstanding British Product, but Urges Elimination of Accent

by BERNARD CHARMAN
of the HERALD'S London Staff

As a journalist moving in British film circles, I have lately been keenly interested in the "What the Picture Did for Me" department of the HERALD. It's given me a fairer idea of the reaction to English-made product in the far-flung areas of your United States than all the blurb with which we constantly are fed over here about the manner in which our films are crashing the American market; moreover, it has given me furiously to think.

Because a few English pictures have lately had an average success on Broadway—though grossing for the most part figures far below the capacities of the several houses they have played—it has been taken for granted by too many of our film folk that they have at last got beyond your national prejudice and pried the field wide open. Alas! (and the interjection should be read with the sincerely sorrowful inflection that my own patriotic instincts compel) the opinions of a representative body of American showmen point in a very different direction. Pictures like "Rome Express," "After the Ball" and "Magic Night," regarded in the United Kingdom as stuff of good quality with strong box-office elements (and rightly so, at that), earn epithets in Florida, Illinois or Michigan like "worst of the worst," "worst picture in six months" or "biggest flop at the box office in months."

Must Be Considered

On the merit of the pictures in question as pictures, I honestly feel that these criticisms are "the bunk," but so long as they are the views of American moviegoers, as expressed through the mouths of theatre operators, they've got to be taken into consideration. It is a pretty big obstacle that the British producer has got to get by before he can shoot off any more hilarity about breaking the U. S. market.

The American exhibitor and his customers are not blameless by a long way. My considered verdict is (though I know you won't like it) that they are still prejudiced against all foreign product—and make no differentiation for British pictures, although they speak the same English language that the American is still glad to call his mother-tongue. Your patrons immediately get uneasy when they see in the credit titles that a picture is British, they make up their minds not to like it, look only for its faults, work themselves up to a state of high dudgeon—and walk out. Under these conditions our produce is not getting an even break.

But that's not the point. The thing that matters is, that if output of studios in the United Kingdom is to win its place in your market, British producers and distributors have got to be up and doing something about it. Some of them have allowed themselves to be hopelessly misled by the miracle of getting a showing on Broadway at all, not realizing that while, with the cosmopolitan population of New York, a good English picture stands as fair a chance as a good American one, the taste of the provincial American is completely insular. (It is only fair to say that the Hollywood producers allow themselves to be blinded by the same fallacy, thinking that the approval of a smart city audience is the passport to universal success.)

Though there is no clear indication yet on this side that British producers realize the difficulties before them, it is obvious that much has to be done.

> To get films into your market with a chance of success, motion picture makers in the United Kingdom must solve the problem of the English accent which is anathema to the average small towner of the Middlewest, must insure that their players are known outside England instead of remaining nonentities as at present, must, by advertising or similar means, create confidence in their product, and must, generally, undertake a much greater market research in the areas it is hoped to sell.

While it would be an unfortunate line of policy for British producers to endeavor to win these markets by a slavish imitation of American methods—that would be contributing just nothing to the solution of the problem—it would appear that in stories and backgrounds at least a more international outlook is necessary. One American showman put it bluntly when he said that his patrons were just not interested in what went on in England or on the Continent, but required subjects with backgrounds and characters they could recognize.

(That again shows proof of distinct bias. If the normal English fan, after being fed on American drama over many years, can find entertainment in elements so alien to his life as gangsters, your prison system, quick-fire marriage and divorce, baseball, and so on, it is only logical to suppose that his American prototype might, if sufficiently impartial, be entertained with characteristics of the United Kingdom to which he is not accustomed).*

Long Way To Go

In a London newspaper the other day it was naively suggested that the reason Fox was turning out subjects like "Cavalcade" and "Berkeley Square," with backgrounds that are entirely English, was because they knew they had the American market in their pocket and counted this way on producing a better return from the British Empire—which, when all the bits are pieced together, is a pretty big place. In theory that argument sounds very well, but the man who wrote it obviously has not read what American exhibitors have placed on record in respect of "Cavalcade." The back files of the HERALD would prove illuminating to him. The gratuitous insults that this fine picture have received from showmen whom Fox is supposed to have sewn up show just how the reporting exhibitors feel about its English atmosphere.

This, therefore, is why it is very apparent that Great Britain has a long way to go before the United States is wide open to her films, and why a great deal of spade-work and preparation of the soil needs to be undertaken. That is why, instead of patting ourselves on the back over a purely illusory success, we have got to be up and doing.

Unless, of course, the British producer is not particularly anxious, with the vast Empire markets before him, to waste his time on America. You hadn't thought of that? Nor had I!

Mr. Charman, in his contention that the American motion picture patron might properly be expected to be as much interested in and receptive of pictures with a British locale as the British audiences are of American atmosphere, action and color, does not take into consideration the very large difference in the world attitudes of the two publics.*

The Englishman looks upon the world as his own bowl of cherries. There's the old saw about the sun never setting on the British flag, literally true. Everything that happens anywhere is likely to be looked upon by the English as his business. The Englishman has been out wandering and colonizing and exploiting the world, India, Africa, China, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and sundry and assorted islands, while the American has been exploring and exploiting his own vast land. Kitchener, Clive, Rhodes are names that imply more mileage and reach farther around the world than Custer, Brigham Young and James J. Hill.

The average motion picture going American does his imaginative traveling all at home. He is not and never will be the world-minded person that the Englishman is in his tight little isle. It's the tightness that makes the Englishman so. Every time he leaves home for a few hours he is in foreign parts.

Urban, Famous as Artist of Stage And Screen, Dead

Joseph Urban, world famous artist, architect and scenic designer for stage and screen, for which he was most widely known in this country, died at the Hotel St. Regis, New York, on Monday, of a heart attack. He had undergone a serious operation in May, and was thought on the way to complete recovery when he was stricken. He was 61 years old.

Mr. Urban's last important work, which he supervised from his bed at the St. Regis, successfully completed, but never saw, was that as director of color and consultant of lighting for the World's Fair in Chicago. He also designed the panorama in the Fair's New York State exhibit.

The long and brilliant career of Mr. Urban, which found him importantly engaged, and attracting world attention in most of the capitals of Europe as well as in the United States, was studded with honors heaped upon him by the crowned heads and governments of the continent. He was most importantly known here for his rich stage designs, having done much work for the late Florenz Ziegfeld and Ziegfeld Follies, and designed the Ziegfeld theatre in New York, meant to house the "Glorifier's" shows, but today a motion picture theatre.

For the motion picture, Mr. Urban, who maintained a large studio at his estate in Yonkers, N. Y., contributed much in the way of scenic and set designs. At one time for several years he was art director for Cosmopolitan Productions and also did considerable art work for Fox.

Born in Vienna, in 1872, Mr. Urban was an indefatigable worker, shifting his tremendous energies from one phase of his artistic creating to another, from the time he won his first honors in his native city as a young man. He was already famous, as much for his illustrations of books as anything else, when he came to the United States in 1901, commissioned by the Austrian government to build and decorate several pavilions for the St. Louis Exposition. Returning to Vienna and added fame, Mr. Urban finally came again to America, in 1911, to stay, becoming a citizen in 1917. His film connection, work as art director of the Boston Opera House and as an illustrator preceded his long and happy relationship with the great impresario, Mr. Ziegfeld. From that time dated his most important work in the theatre in the United States.

He is survived by his wife, the former Mary Porter Beegle, who was with him when he died. Two sisters in Vienna also survive, as does a daughter by a previous marriage, Gretl Urban, an artist living in Paris. A second daughter, Mrs. Elly Marks, died in Boston last April.

Strike at Columbia Stops Production

Sound technicians at the Columbia studios in Hollywood went on strike last week end following refusal of the company to apply a general raise in the wage scale of this branch of studio labor. The walkout, which had been threatened several times during the past few weeks, left production at Columbia at a standstill and it was decided this week to suspend all such activity until an amicable agreement is effected.

On Tuesday the studio and the sound men were still deadlocked, despite a meeting of the union Monday night. In addition to a general raise in salary, the technicians are asking for contracts. The company refuses to comply with this demand.

Jack Cohn, vice-president in charge of distribution in New York, said Wednesday that the company will make a strenuous fight to abolish union labor from its studios.

"We never have serious trouble with non-union members of the production branch," he said, "and we are planning to put a stop to this sort of thing once and for all."

Dr. Arnold Dead; Developed Vacuum Tube, Acoustics

Dr. Harold DeForest Arnold, director of research of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, Inc., New York, whose scientific genius went far toward making the talking motion picture possible, died on Monday of a heart attack at his home in Summit, N. J. He was 49 years old.

Perhaps the greatest single accomplishment in the comparatively short, but extremely brilliant career of Dr. Arnold was the perfection of the modern three electrode high vacuum thermionic tube, adapted to commercial use in long distance wire and radio communication. The original tube was an invention of Dr. Lee DeForest.

Dr. Arnold was born in Woodstock, Conn., September 3, 1883, and was educated at Wesleyan University, continuing his studies as a fellow in physics at the University of Chicago. A year as professor of physics at Mount Allison University, Canada, was followed by a return to Chicago for graduate work under Dr. Robert A. Millikan, then professor there. In 1911 Dr. Frank B. Jewett, president of the Bell Laboratories, called upon Dr. Millikan for a research man familiar with electronics who could make possible telephonic communication from coast to coast, then impossible. Dr. Arnold, sent by Dr. Millikan to New York, was then but 27 years old. He solved his problem. Then came the development and perfection of Dr. DeForest's "audion" or vacuum tube.

Meanwhile Dr. Arnold worked on the radio tube as known today, without which the talking picture would have been impossible. Also, in the course of his Bell research work, he developed new methods of recording sound, making possible improved phonograph records and motion pictures with sound.

Dr. Arnold was credited with the virtual creation of the completely modern science of acoustics, so important to the motion picture theatre of today. He was a founder and executive councilor of the Acoustical Society of America.

Goebel and Seven Guilty of Fraud

The lengthy trial in New York federal court of Otto E. Goebel and seven officials and salesmen of the National Diversified Corporation, which went into bankruptcy in 1930, was concluded late last week when all defendants were found guilty before Judge John M. Woolsey of using the mails to defraud. The jury recommended mercy for one defendant, Miss Elizabeth M. Plautt.

The company had started a "clean pictures" movement in 1926 and had sold stock in the corporation to the amount of nearly $3,000,000 to Catholics throughout the country, it was charged. Beside Goebel and Miss Plautt, the defendants were Jerome D. Klein, James F. Cassidy, Franklyn Johnson, Robert J. Patterson, John Elder and Bernard J. Flynn.

Actual, authentic stories of the most unusual, notorious crimes that the Department has had to contend with over a period of years. In the pictures the crimes are reenacted exactly as they happened but of most importance is the picturization of government officers tracking down the criminals and bringing them to inescapable justice. Produced at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's own great studios with casts of feature players to enact each exciting role. Thrilling! Actionful! LEGAL BATTERY DIGS IN TO BLAST RADIO STATIONS, SAYS PUBLICATION

Would Reduce Stations From 600 to 100 and Place Under State Ownership, Barring Advertising, Says Metronome

That mysterious forces appear to be in action to undermine the radio, to loosen its competitive grip as an entertainment purveyor and cut off some $25,000,000 in revenue which it receives annually from national advertisers, is the thought advanced in the latest issue of Metronome, music trade journal. "Powerful influences are at work to curb radio by forcing a reduction of the number of broadcasting stations from 600 to 100," according to Metronome, which adds that the remaining stations would be placed under state ownership and all advertising would be eliminated from the air.

The radio has long been a strong competitor to all forms of amusement and to newspapers and magazines, publishers of which have charged that the broadcasters take unfair advantage of their position to divert millions of dollars from the advertising columns of the nation's press, to the coffers of the radio stations.

"For some time, the legal battery of these forces has been assembling statistics and facts which will be used in an attempt to prove by law that radio stations have no right to exist under their present forms of management and operation," said the Metronome article, and to try to show that radio stations "are harmful and destructive influences in many ways and that they are responsible for the havoc wrought, unfairly, on theatres, newspapers and magazines, among others."

Calls Legal Bombardment Near

"Every available avenue of attack will be used in the legal bombardment which is aimed at the air castles and may be touched off at any moment," continued the music trade publication. "One battery will be fed by the so-called National Industrial Recovery Act, now operative, the purpose of which is to 'encourage national industrial recovery and to foster fair competition.'"

"Radio's effect upon the music industry has been disastrous," it was pointed out. "It is held directly responsible for the fact that during the past eight years 20 piano roll and 17 phonograph record companies have been forced out of business, and total sales are now only one per cent of their 1925 volume. Sheet music sales have been reduced by 95 per cent. Dozens of publishers have been forced to the wall and hundreds of thousands of authors, composers, salesmen, instrument makers, and musicians find themselves without an opportunity to earn their livelihoods."

One direct form of radio competition to motion picture box-offices has been the broadcasting of musical comedy programs by stars of stage and screen, a procedure which, according to theatre owners, keeps prospective customers at home.

Coincidentally with the publication of Metronome's blast at radio broadcasting, the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association made public the results of a study of newspaper, magazine and radio broadcasting expenditures for advertising in 1932. The investigation showed that newspapers received about 59 per cent of the aggregate appropriations of 432 national advertisers, and were the preferred medium in 19 out of 30 leading groups. It was shown that this representative group of advertisers spent $116,200,000 in newspaper space, compared with $52,301,139 in magazines and $25,321,984 in broadcast, a total of $193,823,123. Of 342 newspaper advertisers, 150 also used magazines, while 111 also used radio.

Said Metronome:

"The indictment of radio will charge that the first broadcasting station was established for the purpose of presenting to the public programs (totally free of advertising) of such excellence that people might be induced to purchase radio receiving sets in order to receive these programs.

"Since then [the indictment will claim] the broadcasting industry, permitted to develop without control, has now developed into a species of advertising agency, motivated solely for profit. So long as the medium through which these radio telephonic communications are sent (obviously the property of the public) is permitted to be used for the private profit of people who are engaged primarily in the business of disseminating advertising, the public will suffer an injury far beyond any benefit that may result.

Declares System Destructive

"The continuous and uninterrupted flow of entertainment into the home, and particularly during the evening hours, has been and must continue to be destructive.

"Radio is competing unfairly with newspapers, magazines and the legitimate and vaudeville theatre, and the newspaper, the magazine and the theatre are certainly important in our system of society.

"The free press must be protected against unfair competition if our democratic institutions are to be preserved. The magazines and the theatres have been the channels through which educational material and cultural development have reached the masses of our people who otherwise would have been deprived of such benefits.

"The competition is not on a fair basis because the newspaper, magazine and theatre must all function through and with respect to private property without governmental protection and without governmental subsidy.

"Radio broadcasters, however, are permitted to use, without charge, the public property; namely, the medium through which their communications reach the public. They are protected against unrestricted competition because the Government controls the number of stations that are permitted to operate and the location of these stations."

Advertising on the air should be prohibited, Metronome held.

Protests Advertising on Air

"Advertising should be excluded from the air. Stations should be operated exclusively as a part of the educational system of the States and of the nation, permitting the use of these stations, however, for the dissemination of public information of great importance to the people when, and only when, the information cannot be disseminated with equal efficiency through the newspapers.

"If advertising is excluded from the air, the incentive to deluge the people in their homes with cheap entertainment will disappear. The elimination of advertising from the air should, in fact, stimulate an economic Renaissance."

Exhibitors Answer Cohn on 'Innocence'

The MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, in a communication to Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia, answers Mr. Cohn's charges regarding the organization's opposition to Columbia's "What Price Innocence." The letter said, in part:

"May we remind you that this organization simply endorsed the action of the Pennsylvania State Censors in condemning 'What Price Innocence' after that picture had been submitted to the Board for approval.

"'What Price Innocence' was viewed both prior to and after its rejection by certain officials of our organization and qualified to speak for that body. These officials felt then and feel now, that the picture, under the guise of a thinly veiled lesson, panders so strongly to the sex emotions, that it is not suitable for general showing to mixed audiences.

"This organization further believes that a picture which the Police Censors of Newark find necessary to ban, which instead of opening at a major first run in New York as the other Columbia Pictures, opens with a sensational advertising campaign at a small five-hundred seat house; that a picture which (to quote the Motion Picture Herald: 'goes to an extent beyond the pale, discoursing of things physiological, psychological and pathological'), is decidedly not an entertainment for children or adolescents.

"We cannot be influenced by 'sponsored testimonials.' We feel that the temporary profits accruing from the showing of so sexy a picture would be more than counteracted by the loss in character and prestige of our business.

"We believe that the time has come to take a firm stand against the conversion of the motion picture theatre into a clinic for the dissection of pathological discussions.

Fox Agrees To Supply Film Despite Low Admissions

The Fox Film Corporation has agreed not to refuse to furnish film to exhibitors of Allied Theatres, Inc., Detroit, who have contracts with Fox because of refusal or failure of the exhibitor to maintain a minimum admission charge of 15 cents.

The Fox decision is the result of a suit brought by Myron Schiffmen, attorney for Allied, on behalf of one of its members. The decision means that Fox will now supply film to 10-cent theatres.

Pioneer Studio Burned

The Atlas Film Studio, located on Carver Road, in Newton, Mass., and once used by Pathe and Pictures in Motion, film producers in the early days of the screen, was destroyed by fire last week. Quantities of scenery were lost. The studio, unused for several years, was owned by Leon E. Dadmun.

Tec-Art Studios Bankrupt

The Tec-Art studios, Hollywood, has been adjudged bankrupt. Debts, according to the schedule filed, total $274,268, while assets are noted at $391,772. Accounts receivable comprise $229,311 of the total assets.

1933-34 FEATURE TOTAL NOW 337; 28 FROM MONOGRAM; U.A. TO MEET

Increase of Product for New Season is Shown in Plans of Seven Large Companies; Double Bill Issue Revived

Nearing adjournment this week was the series of seasonal sales conventions of the large distributors. The last group of branch managers and salesmen shortly will return to their posts in the field to turn the new merchandise for 1933-34 into rental dollars, guided by the "pep" talks of distribution executives from New York, and by the inspirational messages telegraphed by studio operatives in Hollywood. Sales campaigns were launched with more determination than ever before, as all divisions predicted that the industry at large, and their companies in particular, were on the eve of an improved season.

W. Ray Johnston's Monogram Pictures added 28 features to 309 already announced by Columbia, Fox, Metro, Paramount and Universal, thereby raising the 1933-34 total to 337, compared with 320 released by the same companies in the current season.

A series of 13 short subjects from Monogram, and an additional group of six from MGM, brought the total number of one and two-reel subjects announced by these companies, and by Educational, to 764 for the new season. This total compares with 666 shorts released by the same group during 1933-34.

United Artists Meets Monday

United Artists will wind up the current series of sales meetings early next week in Chicago, announcing a minimum of 35 features and about 26 shorts. Warners, which probably will release 60 features next season, and 100 shorts, still had arranged no plans regarding the customary preseasonal sales conference, concentrating now on the windup of this season's product. Thus, an estimated 423 features from the nine largest companies, when added to another hundred, or more, from the independents and at least two dozen from abroad, obviously eliminates any possibility of a shortage of product.

Budgets were not reduced, indeed, and they were enlarged by some companies. Important to the exhibitor was the realization by producing branches that quality will be more essential than ever before; decentralization has removed much of the comparatively easy sales activities. The impending "buyers' market," too, offers a greater incentive.

Admissions a Barometer

Indications pointed further during the week to a strong rise in the industry's business barometer. For the first time since national recovery set in some few months ago, reports reached New York of increased admissions (see page 11), thereby signaling the actual beginning of a return to normalcy for motion pictures. Optimistic opinions of film leaders were being supplanted by the more tangible actions of operators in the field, who were beginning to feel that the time had finally arrived to raise the earning power of their box-offices from the low point of the final days of the depression last winter, when admission scales reached the lowest point in a decade.

The conservative New York Times attributed the new "hope and optimism of Hollywood" to a production budget of $73,000,000, for eight large companies, based on an average production cost of $200,000 each for 368 pictures. Since the Times estimate, however, final announcements have raised the total for this group to 404 releases, which, automatically, increases the publication's estimated budget to $81,000,000 for 1933-34.

The Times did not figure on independents' expenditures. If this division spends on an average of $50,000 for 100 pictures, or a total of $5,000,000, and if 2,000 reels of one and two-reel shorts from all companies cost about $10,000,000, the total budget might reach nearly $100,000,000. However, the 1933 MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC says that all production for 1932-33 cost $135,000,000, and, in view of current announcements pointing toward increases or even similar budgets for the new season, it appears reasonable to assume that the total for 1933-34 will approximate the figure of last season, at least. In any event, definite feature and short subject schedules already announced by seven large companies to date show numerical increases over 1932-33 programs, as follows:

Double Bills Up Again

While most of the sales policies still are tied up with the projected code of fair competition, certain of the distribution companies came forth during the week with tentative decisions on some phases of future operations.

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram, issued a denunciation of those favoring elimination of double bills. On the opposite side was Warner Brothers. A. W. Smith, as spokesman for that company, indicated that singles will be favored by Warners next season. E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, which is affiliated with Fox, said short feature production has been given a new impetus and fresh incentive by the decline of the double feature." Mr. Hammons said he believed "there will be the heaviest demand in years for short subjects starting in September."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week indicated that double featuring may be ended with the opening of the new season through clauses in proposed industry codes.

Duals Aid Grosses, Says Johnston

Mr. Johnston told sales and franchise delegates at Monogram's New York convention, last Saturday, that he had "talked to exhibitors from coast to coast and the only ones that are consistently keeping their theatres in the black are the runs that are using dual bills."

"I have talked to dozens of small theatre operators in Chicago, who claim they are definitely being driven out of business due to the exchange policy of refusing to allow pictures to be played on a double bill until a picture is a year old," he said. "Perhaps this is a great policy for the big fellow, but when you talk with the exhibitors who are interested in Monogram Pictures you can tell them for me that I am for their running theatres any way they see fit for their own personal good and that every Monogram picture is available to them for single or double featuring and on a live-and-let-live policy. There is plenty of room in this business for the little theatre and even room enough for the 4,000 theatres that have been wiped out due to the talkies. If we want to cooperate with President Roosevelt's Recovery Act, why not work out plans to put those 4,000 theatres back into operation to employ another 20,000 to 30,000 people, instead of working on plans to eliminate a few thousand more and leave the business in the hands of a few operators."

Minimum of 35 Features and About 26 Short Subjects to Be Announced by United Artists in Chicago Next Week

Standard Contract Debated

Discussing Warners' tentative plans further, A. W. Smith, who is a member of the sales cabinet, said this week that his company will not offer exhibitors the new standard exhibition contract as an optional form to their own agreement, unless the final form of the industry's code so specifies. Mr. Smith indicated that the standard form of contract, as it now exists, will not be the standard contract embraced by distributors and exhibitors in the final code.

"The present standard contract," said Mr. Smith, "requires an advance listing of pictures which hampers both the producer and the exhibitor, if the clause were to be lived up to. There are also legal objections to the contract in its present form."

However, it has been generally understood that the MPTOA's executive committee will insist that the present standard agreement be incorporated in the final industry code.

Columbia let it be known that it will ask a guarantee against percentage for important 1933-34 releases, and flat rentals for other features.

Newest development in the plan to change the present sales year to conform with the calendar year, was the tentative decision of Warner Brothers to postpone its current sales meeting at least until September as the first step.

Of direct interest to exhibitors of the nation were the following activities during the week in the distribution field, all pertaining to new product and sales policies for 1933-34:

Chesterfield

George R. Batcheller placed in work the third 1933-34 Chesterfield-Invincible release, titled "Notorious but Nice," Richard Thorpe directing, Marian Marsh and Betty Compton featured.

Columbia

Home office executives and studio officials attended a second two-day regional meeting, at Los Angeles. Abe Montague, sales manager, while en route westward, said at Kansas City that the company's sales policy for next season provides for guarantee against percentage for all important releases, and flat rentals for the remainder. The company announced last week 48 features and 130 shorts. George Sydner and Charlie Murray were signed for a two-reel series.

Delmar-Blondell

Harry Delmar and Arthur Blondell formed a partnership to make six one-reel musicals, to be directed by Delmar and produced in New York.

Ferrone

"Double Crosser," "Ghost Ship" and "Helen Hunts a Job" are titles of the first three of eight for the coming season, which Frank D. Ferrone will produce on the Coast.

Goldsmith

Ken Goldsmith will distribute independently six features, titled "Carnival Kid," "Working Wives," "Bargain Day," "Nobody's Children," "Taxi Dancer" and one untitled. Releasing starts in September. Mr. Goldsmith returned last week from London, where he made arrangements for British distribution with Pathe Pictures, Ltd.

Exchanges which have already lined up for the new Goldsmith product include: Hollywood Film, for New York, Philadelphia and Washington territories; Cameo, Boston; Cooperative, California; Selected, Cleveland; Excellent, Detroit; Security, Chicago; Affiliated, South; Associated, Kansas City; Sack, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas; Capital, Salt Lake, Denver; Capital, Portland, Seattle.

McCracken

Harold McCracken, explorer and vice-president of Standard Motion Pictures, will produce independently one feature in the West Indies and three in Africa, for 1933-34.

Majestic

Upon the return of Herman Gluckman, president, from Hollywood, where he now is conferring with Phil Goldstone, production head, Majestic's 1933-34 lineup will be made known at a sales convention July 29-31 at the Drake Hotel, Chicago.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

With executives of studio, home office and exchanges returned to their desks from conventions, Metro was fully prepared to launch an extensive sales compaign. Its program of 48 features and 105 one and two-reelers was increased this week by the addition of six single reels dealing with timely subjects, typical of which is "Inflation," first release.

Monogram

W. Ray Johnston, president, and Edward Golden, vice-president, launched the company's 1933-34 season last Saturday in New York at the first of four regional sales meetings, where franchise holders in the East and home office executives from New York heard outlined 20 dramas, eight westerns and 13 single reels, for release during the new season. This compares with 16 dramas and 12 westerns released this season. The complete lineup for 1933-34:

"King Kelly of the USA," musical by George Bertholon; screen play by Howard Higgins and John Craft.

"The Woman in White," by Wilkie Collins.

"Broken Dreams," from Olga Printzlau's "Two Little Arms," to be directed by Robert Vignola.

"Jane Eyre," by Charlotte Bronte, to be directed by Phil Rosen.

"The Moonstone," Wilkie Collins' detective story.

"Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," by Frances Hyland, based on the fraternity song.

"The Avenger," by John Goodwin, featuring Ralph Forbes and Adrienne Ames, directed by Edwin Marin.

"Money Means Everything," adaptation of William Anthony McGuire's "The Cost of Living."

"Mystery Liner," adaptation of Edgar Wallace's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Ghost of John Tolling." Adapted by Wellyn Totman.

"Beggars in Ermine," by Esther Lynd Day; adaptation by John Thomas Neville.

"Woman's Man," by Adela Rogers St. John; produced by Phil Rosen, screen play by Frances Hyland.

"Numbers of Monte Carlo," by E. Phillips Oppenheim, directed by Edwin Marin.

"Sixteen Fathoms Deep," by Eustace Adams, to be produced by Ben Verschleiser.

"The Loud Speaker," by Tristram Tupper, dialogue by Ralph Spence.

"Happy Landing," by Stuart Anthony, produced by Paul Malvern.

"Manhattan Love Song," musical suggested by Cornell Woolrich's novel.

"Sensation Hunters," by Whitman Chambers, produced by Charles Vidor; scenario by Paul Schofield and Albert DeMond; featuring Arline Judge and Preston Foster.

"He Couldn't Take It," by Albert Payson Terhune; adaptation by Wellyn Totman.

"City Limits," by Jack Woodward.

"Derby Day," by Tristram Tupper.

Eight outdoor pictures will star John Wayne.

Short subjects, none of which was on this year's schedule, will include 13 one-reel "Port o' Call" travel subjects.

"The Avenger" and "Sensation Hunters" have already been completed; also four of the shorts. "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" and "Broken Dreams" are on this month's production schedule.

Coincidentally with last Saturday's convention in New York, Monogram announced that the corporation's executive, sales, advertising-publicity, auditing and art departments will move early in August from the Powers Building on Seventh Avenue, to larger quarters on the 20th floor in the RKO Building at Rockefeller Center. The Ritchie Export Corp., Monogram's foreign affiliate, will join the parent organization. President Johnston announced that the move was prompted by a broad increase in the company's activities. He said that personnel will be added to and the company's producing budget for 1933-34 will be increased.

Executives and representatives from New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Albany, Buffalo, Pittsburgh and Washington attended the New York conference, at which addresses on policy and product were made by Mr. Johnston and by Edward Golden, sales manager; Harry Thomas, and various franchise holders.

Principal developments at the convention included an attack by Mr. Johnston against the writers of industry codes in which had been inserted clauses against double bills. Mr. Johnston told the delegates to bring back to their exhibitor clients word that "Monogram has taken a definite stand that it will not take part in any activity for the elimination of the dual bills."

Harry Thomas, who holds the Monogram franchise for New York and Philadelphia, said that subsequent-run houses in metropolitan centers will have an opportunity to obtain first-run bookings on Monogram product in the new season. Supplementing the policy is a plan whereby cooperative newspaper campaigns will be arranged on the new product both by Monogram and First Division. These campaigns will be designed to attract patrons' attention to the first-run bookings as such and to help increase the prestige of the subsequent-run theatres.

The company started the conventions with an increase in its sales force of 24 salesmen. There are now 155 throughout the nation. The increase is in line with the plans of all distributors to expand sales staffs to cover the widened territory which resulted from the recent theatre decentralization movement.

Mr. Golden said that increased sales effort and preferred playing time will be the company's objective in 1933-34, in order to balance the 50 per cent increase in the production budget.

Attending the session, besides the executives already mentioned, were:

Home office: J. V. Ritchey, Norton Ritchey, J. P. Friedhoff, John S. Harrington.

New York exchange: Budd Rogers, Otto Lederer, Dave Schmer, Jules Chapman, Dick Perry, Mike Thomas, William Benson, Bert Freese. Philadelphia: Al Blofson, Moe Sherman, Miss E. Segal. Boston: Herman Rifkin, E. H. Morey, Charles Wilson, Bob Cobe, Steve Cobe, Steve Broidy, Harry Goldman (New Haven). Albany: Bernard Mills, Sam Milberg, E. M. Loew, Miss M. Hawkins. Buffalo: Jack Berkowitz, H. Berkson, N. R. Sodikman. Pittsburgh: J. H. Alexander, S. A. Fineberg, H. M. Wheeler, C. A. Molte, A. R. Cherry. Washington: Sam and Jake Flax.

Edward Golden presided at the New Orleans convention, which opened Monday at the Jung Hotel. Present were: Arthur C. Bromberg, J. W. Mangham and P. H. Savin, from Atlanta; Carl Floyd, E. A. Dorsey, Tampa; H. H. Everett, J. H. Dillon, Jack London, Charlotte; L. A. Seichsnaydre, G. J. Broggi, New Orleans; Claud Ezell, W. G. Underwood, Leslie Wilkes, Doak Roberts, Dallas; Sol Davis, J. A. Smith, W. J. Cammer, Thelma Rhodd, Oklahoma City; B. F. Busby, Little Rock.

Mr. Golden explained to the delegates how to increase film rentals to meet the increased production costs.

On Saturday, Trem Carr, production chief, will arrive at Chicago to join Mr. Johnston and Mr. Golden at the third session, to be held at the Blackstone Hotel. Representatives and franchise holders will attend from Chicago, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Detroit, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Kansas City and Omaha.

The executives will then travel westward and hold the final convention, for the entire west coast, at Los Angeles, on July 22.

Paramount

Paramount concluded its series of three regional conventions with a two-day gathering of far western forces, at Los Angeles. Direct contact between the distribution and the production divisions was established by addresses of Adolph Zukor and Emanuel Cohen, who spoke to salesmen and managers from San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Portland, Denver, Salt Lake.

The keynote was that Paramount is determined to resume its position in the van of producing organizations.

Mr. Cohen said that the production department had been reorganized during the year on the basis of complete cooperation, and that with a spirit of enthusiasm "permeating the entire personnel," there is "a guarantee of good pictures" for 1933-34.

George Schaefer, distribution head, outlined the new product and concluded with the remark, "As a result of stringent efficiency measures effected in all branches of the organization, Paramount has sufficient money on hand now to carry out its 1933-34 production program of 65 features and 229 shorts, without having to borrow a single penny from the banks." Never before, he told the delegates, has this financial condition existed in Paramount.

Executives attending were, from the home office: Mr. Schaefer, Neil Agnew, G. B. Frawley, A. J. Dunne, Bob Gillham, Fred Le Roy, Knox Haddow and Al Wilkie; from the studio: Mr. Zukor and Cohen, Tom Bailey, Bill Pine, Teet Carle, Blake McVeigh, Cliff Lewis.

Paramount's newest plans provide for no less than 10 feature musical comedies for 1933-34. They will star such combinations as the Marx Brothers, Ruggles and Boland, Burns and Allen, Fields and Skipworth, Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie, Jack Haley, Skeets Gallagher.

Progressive

Meyer Davis, orchestra leader, formed Progressive Pictures to produce 13 shorts, in two series. One group will be musicals, the other comedies, production in the East, in charge of Jerry Wald and Monte Shaff.

Radio

The third and final Radio sales convention, held last week at the St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, was addressed by B. B. Kahane, president, and Merian C. Cooper, vice-president in charge of production. Both gave first-hand reports on the new season's schedule, which totals 52 features and 106 shorts. Forthcoming production plans were outlined to the public by means of a local radio hookup.

Fifty-two managers and salesmen attended from Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Sale Lake and Vancouver. The home office group included Ned E. Depinet, Jules Levy, A. A. Schubart, Al Mertz, Robert F. Sisk, Michael Poller. Studio delegates, besides Mr. Kahane and Mr. Cooper, included Cliff Reid and Eddy Eckels. Jack Pegler represented Lord and Thomas advertising agency, and Fred McConnell spoke on behalf of Van Beuren shorts.

An outline of new season's product was given the delegates, similar to discussions held at New York and Chicago. Jules Levy, who talked about sales policies for 1933-34, said that theatre business might be stimulated by the reopening of dark houses for the showing of specials.

During the week, Radio signed Ann Harding again to a two-year contract, calling for six features. Ginger Rogers was given a term contract, in place of a previous picture-to-picture agreement. Lillian Gish came out of retirement, signing with Radio for at least one picture for the new season.

Regent

Starmark Pictures completed its first feature in New York, to be released by Regent as "Get That Venus!" instead of "The Unwanted Venus." Ernest Truex and Jean Arthur are featured.

Ross

Herman Ross organized a new Jewish producing company, which, he said, is to be similar in scope to the Yiddish Art Theatre. Jacob Ben-Ami was signed for the first, "The Wandering Jew," which Mr. Ross had previously announced as a release for Ross Enterprises. George Roland is directing.

Tower Pictures

J. Simmonds, president, sailed from New York for Los Angeles to start work on the final four features of a series of eight for 1932-33. Six will be produced for 1933-34, at a higher budget, according to Mr. Simmonds.

United Artists

Executives from New York and Hollywood and salesmen and managers from the field were en route to Chicago, where United Artists will hold its annual convention, beginning Monday, at the Drake hotel. Between 35 and 40 features will be announced, an increase from 14 released this season.

Joseph M. Schenck, president, will preside, with Al Lichtman, vice-president, in charge of sales. Both will talk about new policies and product. Samuel Goldwyn will be on hand from Hollywood; also, Hal Horne, director of advertising and publicity; Edward Finney, assistant to Mr. Horne, and Lynn Farnol, Goldwyn representative.

Others from headquarters in New York will include: Harry Gold, assistant to Lichtman; Monroe Greenthal, director of exploitation; Carroll S. Trowbridge, representative for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks; James Mulvey, Goldwyn aide; W. P. Phillips; Sadie Feurstein; Dennis O'Brien, counsel; Leon Lee, sales promotion manager; Sam Cohen, foreign publicity department; Paul Burger, Martin Moskowitz, Gummo Marx, Jack Von Tilzer, Moe Streimer, David Burkan, Meyer Lieberman, Nat Beier, Leon Harman, Edward Mullen, E. J. Smith, S. W. McGrath and Jack Dacy.

Exhibitor clients of United Artists will be kept advised of the convention program through special dispatches of each day's happenings, which will be mailed daily after adjournment. On the final day, probably Wednesday, an open forum will be held for prominent exhibitors. Ninety-nine branch managers and salesmen will attend from 31 exchanges in the United States and Canada.

Universal

Executives and managers and salesmen in the field had returned from Universal's San Francisco convention, the second of two regionals, the first having been held at Chicago.

A bright future for the country and the motion picture industry was forecast in a message by Carl Laemmle, which was read to the managers and their assistants from San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland, Seattle, Salt Lake and Denver.

L. J. Schlaifer, general sales manager, presided, covering much the same ground as in Chicago, where he outlined 42 features and 111 shorts. Mr. Schlaifer predicted better pictures from all for 1933-34, although he said that the style of pictures will remain much the same as now, likewise the type of programs. "What producers need most of all is good stories," he said. The executives all stressed the merchandising of shorts. E. T. Gomersall, assistant sales manager, and W. J. Heineman, western district manager, also spoke.

The company already has launched production on eight features, seven of which will be released before September 1.

Wafilms

Walter Futter's company this week announced the removal of headquarters from 729 7th Avenue, New York, to the RKO Building in Rockefeller City. Establishment of the new offices will be accompanied by an increased production schedule for 1933-34, during which Wafilms plans to release 13 "Travelaughs," four four-reel novelty-adventures and two features.

Warners

With the announcement this week that 53 players were under contract, Warners said that it will not have to resort to much outside borrowing of stars in the new season, a practice which is growing rapidly in Hollywood. At the same time, the company let it be known that "Gold Diggers of 1933" will be the first release of the new season, and that its sales division will favor single feature programs in 1933-34.

Warners will not offer the new standard exhibition contract as an optional form, according to A. W. Smith, sales executive, but will continue to use its own contract unless a standard form is specified in the industry's proposed code.

The company will distribute eight features in July and August, thereby extending the current schedule. It now appears likely that the annual sales convention launching the 1933-34 period will not be held until September. Deferring of Warners' annual meeting is the first step of a large distributor to bring about a release schedule which conforms with the calendar year, a plan which is now being discussed by most companies, to begin in 1934. Details of the idea were published in Motion Picture Herald on July 8, page 31. In any event, Mr. Smith said the company's schedule will be a flexible one to permit the studio to schedule features according to popular demand, and the distribution division to sell in accord with prevailing conditions. Fifty-three features and six westerns are on the current schedule.

Weeks, Long Ill, Leaves Mayfair

George W. Weeks this week resigned as president of Mayfair Pictures Corporation. After two years of ill health, the Mayfair president, who was formerly general manager of distribution for Paramount, decided that a vacation of several months was needed if he is to continue his previously active work in the industry.

Following his vacation, Mr. Weeks plans a new picture venture, which has been discussed tentatively during the past few weeks. As it will not entail the work or responsibilities of his post with Mayfair, he feels he can safely carry through without endangering his health.

It is understood the new product planned by Mr. Weeks is intended to be of better quality than that being sold on the independent market at present. "I feel that the day of cheap negatives is passed," he said this week. "The public is shopping for entertainment as never before. Only good pictures will attract good business."

Universal Loses Theatre Lease Action in Kansas

Judgment for $18,596 was awarded by Judge Richard B. Hopkins in Topeka, Kan., U. S. district court last week in favor of Kathryn T. Wagner and William H. Wagner against Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., in a suit involving a theatre lease in Independence, Kan. The Wagners leased the Beldorf in Independence to Universal in 1925, when the company was assembling a circuit.

Universal sub-leased the theatre to the Glen W. Dickinson circuit in 1928 and ceased paying rent in 1931. The company tried to cancel the lease without success.

WILL'S A DRY—BUT HE SAYS HE'LL BUY

Will H. Hays arrived at San Francisco the other day, with his wife and son. Immediately, the press of the town besieged him with questions about the motion picture industry. The "general," however, was more willing to talk about the Eighteenth amendment than about films. He said, so the papers say:

"I'm for repeal because I'm for temperance. The dry experiment is a complete failure. Furthermore, I am a great believer in personal liberty, though I have never taken a drink of whiskey, wine or beer in my life. But I have bought hundreds, even thousands of dollars worth of liquor during the past ten years. For entertainment."

Metro averages 86 minutes per feature, out of 24 released. Fox averages 75 minutes, out of 26. Paramount's average is 74, for 37 releases; Warner-First National hits about 72, out of 26 films, and Universal, about 71 minutes for 19 releases. Radio and Columbia consistently turn out the shortest features tying with 69 minutes per picture, out of 32 and 24 releases, respectively.

TWO OR MORE STARS TO FIGURE IN AT LEAST DOZEN MGM FILMS

New Policy Calls for Number of Multi-Star Casts, Following Precedent of "Grand Hotel" and "Rasputin"

Emphasis on multi-star casts provides a new note in activities of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in preparation for the new season. Plans have been made for a dozen productions in which two or more stars will appear and others are certain to be added to this list later.

The return of Norma Shearer and Greta Garbo from abroad, and the resumption of activity by Marie Dressler—added to the current roster of MGM stars—gives this company the most impressive star array it ever has had to draw from, and the success of "Grand Hotel," "Rasputin and the Empress" and other pictures of the kind provides precedent for the new season policy.

The Culver City studios are in the midst of their biggest production drive in several years. Sixteen pictures are in various stages of production, and many others are being prepared. Every star on the lot is busy, some with more than one production, and indications are that the summer will be the most active one of the past five years.

"Eskimo," Arctic film, and "Another Language," based on the Broadway stage hit, are in final stages of shooting, while "Night Flight," with five starring names in its cast, is almost completed. King Vidor has finished "Stranger's Return," with Lionel Barrymore and Miriam Hopkins, and Tod Browning is busy with "Bride of the Bayou." Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery are co-starred in "Tugboat Annie," and Greta Garbo is at work in her first film since her return from Sweden. Joan Crawford is doing "Dancing Lady" and Marion Davies is completing preparations for her new vehicle, "Paid to Laugh." "Penthouse," an adaptation of Arthur Somers Roche's new serial, is under way, as are "Beauty Parlor," "Tarzan and His Mate" and Lee Tracy's "Turn Back the Clock."

Four Musicals in Work

Four musicals are currently under way, which in itself sets a precedent at the Coast lot. "The Hollywood Party" and "The March of Time" will present fifteen starring names each. Ed Wynn's forthcoming picture will be in line with his radio continuities and will be known as "The Fire Chief." Jack Pearl, who has just arrived at the coast, is teamed with Jimmy Durante and Stuart Irwin in a three-star comedy, with music, tentatively called "The Big Liar."

"Dinner at Eight," which is David O. Selznick's first MGM production and has more starring names than any other dramatic production yet attempted, not excluding "Grand Hotel," will be given road-showings throughout the country, according to present plans. In the cast of this picturization of the stage play by George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber are Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, Jean Harlow, John and Lionel Barrymore, Edmund Lowe, Billie Burke, Madge Evans, Lee Tracy and Phillips Holmes.

In addition to its emphasis on star strength, the coming program is the most diversified in ten years, with locales ranging from the Arctic to the Tropics, and periods ranging from Biblical times to the present day.

Instead of a trend toward any restricted types of entertainment, the Culver City studios are drawing from a fund of story material that permits the widest scope in theme and treatment. Drama and adventure, sophistication and simplicity, romance, thrills and humor, all are represented. This is exemplified in the six most important productions slated by MGM in its program of 46 attractions.

"Night Flight," with an all-star cast, is a drama of commercial aviation. It is based on Antoine de St. Exupery's prize French novel of adventure in South America and directed by Clarence Brown. John and Lionel Barrymore, Helen Hayes, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery and others are in the cast. In contrast is another multi-star picture, "The Hollywood Party," with its locale modern Hollywood. This is a musical picture with a novel plot. It was written by Edmund Goulding and Howard Dietz with elaborate ballets and novelties. Marie Dressler, Joan Crawford, Jean Harlow, Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Lee Tracy, Jack Pearl and other stars are to entertain musically and otherwise.

Soviet Russia is to be portrayed in "Soviet," drama of the Russia of today, with Wallace Beery, Clark Gable and Jean Harlow. "Tarzan and His Mate" will see Johnny Weismuller, Maureen O'Sullivan and Neil Hamilton in adventures in the African jungles. Marie Dressler is to star in "Mrs. Van Kleek," a modern story laid in the South Seas of today, while a spectacular romance comparable to "Ben-Hur" is planned in "Two Thieves," in which Robert Montgomery and Clark Gable are to appear in a filmization of Manuel Komroff's novel.

Locations Widely Spread

Far-flung locations figure more importantly than in many months. "Eskimo," filmed by the MGM polar expedition to the Arctic, with a native cast, is to take audiences to the land of the Midnight Sun. "The Good Earth," based on Pearl S. Buck's book, has its local in the Chinese countryside. "Laughing Boy," Oliver La Farge's novel, a vehicle for Ramon Novarro, has the Navajo Indian country as its locale. "Vive Villa," in which Wallace Beery is to enact the Mexican bandit chief, is to be filmed in Mexico. "Bride of the Bayou" is being filmed in the shrimp camps of Lake Barataria and the land of the Louisiana Cajuns, descendants of the Acadians of "Evangeline." "The Garden of Allah," from Robert Hichens' novel, has as its locale the African desert in the vicinity of Ouled Nail, while "The Paradine Case," also based on a Hitchens' novel, has an exotic background and a cast headed by Diana Wynyard, John and Lionel Barrymore. The settings of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," stage hit, are in the pre-Victorian period when Robert Browning courted Elizabeth Barrett Browning. "The Late Christopher Bean" is another Broadway stage play, with its setting in rural New England. Stefan Zweig's "Marie Antoinette" is a drama of the French Revolution, and Somerset Maugham's "The Painted Veil," is a drama laid against a tropical background. Irving Thalberg returns to the studio this month. Mr. Thalberg, whose production activities were interrupted by illness, has entirely recovered his health and with his wife, Norma Shearer, sailed from Southampton, July 12, on the Majestic.

The production personnel has been strengthened under the sponsorship of Nicholas M. Schenck, president of MGM, and Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production. David O. Selznick, as associate producer, has been added to the list, which includes Edward Mannix, Harry Rapf, Hunt Stromberg, Al Lewin, Bernard Hyman, Lawrence Weingarten, Walter Wanger, Lucien Hubbard, Howard Hawks, Sidney Franklin, John Considine, Jr., Lou Edelman and Frank Davis.

"HOLD YOUR MAN" LEADING M-G-M DRAW

"Hold Your Man," co-starring Jean Harlow and Clark Gable, has proved itself the biggest box-office draw released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in recent months," says the home office.

At the Capitol theatre, New York, "Hold Your Man," during one of the summer's hot spells, was held over for a second week. At Columbus, Ohio, the picture ran up a bigger box office intake than any other M-G-M production shown in 1933 except "Rasputin and the Empress." At Dayton, Ohio, the figures were ahead of those on "Rasputin," "Grand Hotel" and "Red Dust." This is the second picture in which Miss Harlow and Gable have been paired. Their first appearance together was in "Red Dust."

Saenger Shows Income of $285,518 in Three Months

A report, filed in New Orleans federal court by E. V. Richards, receiver for Saenger Theatres, shows as a result of his operations from January 27 to April 29, a total income from 28 theatres of $285,518. Eight of the 28 houses are now closed, the figure indicating a net loss of $23,957. The cash balance on April 29 was $8,928.

EUROPE WANTS MORE ACTION IN U.S. FILMS; THE CONTINENTAL SITUATION

Restrictions by Governments Declared Strongest Influence Against American Product; 30 Millions 1932 Film Cost

[Details of the German Government's new all-embracing plans for complete subsidization of the motion picture industry appeared on page 13, in the issue of June 3. A subsequent article on the German situation appears in this issue on page —]

Official reports received last week at the Motion Picture Bureau in Washington, directly from United States Department of Commerce attaches abroad, indicated that

More action, less dialogue, is essential to success for U. S. pictures in Europe.

Official government restrictions were the strongest influence against American product.

European studios spend $30,000,000 for production; activities reaching over-production stage.

Five hundred motion picture theatres, with capacity for 300,000, were erected or renovated.

French import decree on films was made known.

First-run films were temporarily discontinued in Turkey.

Swedish motion picture market was growing.

Accelerated action with decreased dialogue unquestionably would help to restore American motion pictures in Europe to the dominating position which they held in the silent picture era, according to George R. Canty, U. S. Trade Commissioner, who has headquarters at Berlin.

The technical superiority of the American talking picture, Mr. Canty said, is generally recognized, but Continental countries naturally prefer pictures which use the local language. "Dubbed" pictures, wherein the local language is substituted for the original version, have grown in importance in rerent months, but Mr. Canty believes that unless an improved process is found it is likely that the popularity of this type of picture will decline. Dubbing of American films is usually done in the production centers, principally Paris, London and Berlin.

Future of U. S. Films in Europe

Of timely importance, in view of President Roosevelt's current attempts to negotiate tariff and trade barrier moratoria with European countries, was Mr. Canty's conclusion that official restrictions have been chiefly responsible for the decreased demand for American films on the Continent.

In the United Kingdom, American film companies were reported to have had a prosperous year, and the same was said to be true in Sweden and Poland.

Referring to the future prospects of the American talking film in Europe, Mr. Canty pointed out that the best possibilities lie (1) in the release of films made in the local language, these helping to sell films made in the United States; (2) dubbed films; (3) English dialogue films with superimposed titles in the local language; and (4) synchronized versions.

The existing depression, he revealed, has little effect on production of motion pictures in European studios. Total expenditures in 1932 amounted to approximately $30,000,000, practically the same figure recorded for the preceding year. Germany, France and Great Britain together accounted for 73 per cent of production and 86 per cent of the total negative investment.

Fifteen sound studios were constructed in 12 months in Europe, the total now amounting to 68, Great Britain having 17, France 14, and Germany 13. They offer further competition to American pictures.

Nearly 500 houses with 300,000 seating capacity were constructed or renovated. However, a large number of houses permanently closed.

There were 16,850 wired theatres in Europe (Russia not included), 4,000 of these having been equipped for sound in 1932. It is probable, according to Mr. Canty, that in 1933 there will be little additional wiring, except in connection with new theatres. Great Britain now has 4,300 wired theatres, Germany 3,500, and France 2,000.

French Import Quota on Raw Film

With further reference to the decrees of April and May, 1932, governing the importation of positive raw film into France, it is now officially announced that during the period from April 1 to June 30, 1933; these imports are not to exceed 17,301 kilograms. The division of the quota follows:

Country	Kilograms
United States	12,315
Belgium Luxemburg	2,841
Great Britain	1,855
Canada	290
Germany and other countries	0*
	17,301

(*Note—In view of the fact that raw film imports from these countries considerably exceeded the quota during the preceding contingent period, no imports are allowed for the three month period in question.)

The Situation in Sweden

(Reported by Vice-Consul Edward P. Maffitt, Stockholm)

Since the advent of talking pictures into Sweden, the Swedish film industry has made great strides in placing its product on the Swedish market. During 1932 there were 1,226,089 meters of Swedish film censored, compared with 1,776,783 meters of American, and 937,181 meters of other foreign pictures. The respective figures for 1931 were: 2,155,206 meters of American pictures, 1,076,463 Swedish and 1,072,716 meters of other pictures. The corresponding figures for the first month of 1933 are Swedish 84,739 meters, American 121,304, and other foreign, 99,527. By "other foreign pictures" are meant mostly German with some French, English and Italian films.

Though the amount of film produced in Sweden in February, 1933, continued to fall, that portion which was of Swedish-make rose closer to the figure for American importations. The figures are: Sweden 75,803 meters, American 86,030, other foreign 71,185.

First Runs Discontinued in Turkey

(Reported by Assistant Trade Commissioner Henry Stebbins, Istanbul)

In Turkey, exhibitors say it does not pay them to show first run films from May 1 to September 1, so first-runs re-exhibit pictures at reduced prices.

Films Censored in England

(Reported by Trade Commissioner Martin Kennedy, London)

The British Board of Film Censors reported that the total number of feature films passed during March, 1933, was 57, a decrease of five as compared with March, 1932, and 19 less than February, 1933.

All 57 were sound films. The total number of shorts passed by the board during March, 1933, was 76—all sound—as compared with 96 in March, 1932, and 101 in February, 1933.

Attendance and Income in Norway

(Reported by Trade Commissioner Gudrun Carlson, Oslo)

Corrected figures concerning attendance and income for motion picture theatres operated by the municipality of Oslo show that in 1931 attendance was 2,574,354 and income Kr. 3,679,783.10. In 1932, attendance was 2,397,637 and income Kr. 3,253,108.20.

The luxury tax paid to the government during 1932 totalled Kr. 326,584.57 as against Kr. 371,082 in 1931. The surplus, after administration expenses, amounted to Kr. 731,210.82 as against Kr. 712,722.53.

The number of premier showings of films dropped to 224 in 1932, from 266 in 1931, a drop of about 100 annually since the talking pictures took hold in the fall of 1929, evidencing that the talking pictures attract the public longer. Of the 266 premiers in 1931, there were 158 American and 108 European films, and of the 224 in 1932 there were 124 American and 100 European.

Encourage Independent Producers, Says Fineman

B. P. Fineman, long an associate producer for MGM and now an independent, told the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at a recent luncheon that the industry will suffer unless the movement to encourage independent producers is encouraged.

"I am convinced," he said, "that more fine entertainment and more box-office naturals will be made only when the industry reverts to that form of production which allowed men like Louis B. Mayer, Irving Thalberg, Harry Rapf, Charles Rogers, Hunt Stromberg, the Warners and many others the opportunity to make pictures individually and independently."

Warners Opening Nine Foreign Branch Offices

Warner Bros. is opening nine new offices abroad, with branches in Rome, Naples, Milan and Florence already opened and Barcelona, Madrid, Seville, Balboa and Valencia branches scheduled to open. A Lisbon branch is contemplated and by fall Warners expect to have offices in operation at Cairo and Alexandria.

"HOLLYWOOD FAIRYLAND TUMBLING"

FAIRYLAND TOPPLING

To the Editor of the Herald:

I read with a great deal of interest Mr. Earle E. Griggs' letter about taking the glamour out of the movies. There is no question but what he is right. Even authentic shots in pictures will be pronounced by the picture public as faked. The less they know of the technical part of this business the better it will be for all of us.

He is right in saying that much that has come out of Hollywood about the making of pictures should have been censored before they reached the public eye.

In the good old days a marvellous shot would be accepted, and they liked to be fooled (and have been by a lot of poor pictures), but when it comes to the actual making of pictures, the less said about the technique of pictures the less cricical they would be.

At one time pictures were the fairyland of the public, but the shots that Mr. Griggs criticizes have tumbled the Fairyland down, to the detriment of the box office.

There is no other business that has the limelight thrown onto it as has this business that we are in.

I hope that the powers that be in Hollywood will take his article to their board rooms and give it some consideration.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

"DIRT IS DYNAMITE"

To the Editor of the Herald:

J. C. Jenkins certainly hit the bull's-eye in defining one of the fundamental things that is wrong with motion picture business.

I, too, have had the experience of having traveled for the past three years from the Mexican border to the Canadian border through six states, selling theatre equipment, and I know for a fact that dirt has been much of the cause for poor business.

For ten years, I was an exhibitor in Florence and Canon City, Colo., and I recently made a deal with Fox (in Colorado) to take my houses back and have begun operating them.

Producers certainly must be in the business to make money, and this being true, I do not see how they can afford to ignore the danger signals that have been flashing constantly from coast to coast for many months. The majority of the editors of our leading trade papers are constantly warning that "dirt is dynamite," and Will Hays, the czar of movie-land, in his annual message to the industry repeated the warnings that he has given before, that the industry should "Clean House" of its own accord instead of being forced to do so.

Hays admitted that many producers were shortsighted in believing that dirt was profitable, if there was a chance of immediate profit. Mr. Hays stated that permanent profits and a healthy industry depended on cleaner pictures and a greater respect for the likes and dislikes of the greatest number of people. These are not the exact words, but I believe that is the thought he intended to convey.

Since taking over my theatres, I have received a veritable storm of protest about some of the pictures that have been made and shown the past several months. The mothers and many business men tell me that they go to the show less, because of the trash turned out by the producers, pictures that contain dirt for the sake of dirt and without a single moral excuse for dragging it into the story.

Here is a concrete example in this city, showing how some director or the writer of the story evidently lost sleep, thinking up some scheme to actually go out of his way to drag in a piece of dirt by the heels and place a black mark against one of the (otherwise) finest pictures and box office attractions of the year.

That picture was "State Fair" and I am told that a committee of mothers in Florence and Canon City came to the managers and protested against the showing of "State Fair" because of the one episode of just plain dirt in the production. I understand that the Denver branch eliminated that part of the picture from all prints, before it was shown in these towns, the thing that would have benefited the industry had this been done at the studio.

"State Fair" was a national success (except as above mentioned) and it proves that the great American family trade can help a sick box office. A simple story of the average family life on the farm made a hit. (And I am not forgetting that Will Rogers and his co-stars did much to make this picture a box office bet.)

This one example of how a streak of dirt hurt a wonderful picture should be food for thought to the director and the producer that is in business to make money.

I am convinced of the fact that the majority of people that support this great institution of ours are perfectly willing to leave it to their imagination as to just how bad a skunk smells, without me hanging one up in my fresh air system each night, to convince them that a skunk does stink.

I also believe that the vast majority of millions of movie-going people would much prefer to draw on their imagination about some of the things that might be or might happen in the unfolding of a story on the screen. Stark reality and plain facts, as have been portrayed on the screen for many months, have caused many a showman to avoid seeing his patrons when the show was over.

I dare the producers and directors to take a vote from every theatre in the U. S. A. to verify if this statement is true or false. There may be a sufficient number of people in the large cities to roll up big B. O. receipts when these ultra-modern, loud sex pictures and plain dirt pictures are shown. But I ask you to turn to the pages of "What the Picture Did for Me" department of the Herald and read the fatal verdict in the vast majority of average theatres.

I remember a review I saw years ago on "Greed" (it cost a fortune and I believe it was a flop—I refused to show it) and that reviewer stated that he was willing to conclude that a sewer was filthy, without crawling through it. I believe that there are today, and always will be, millions and millions of people that will agree with that statement and I wish that every director, every writer and every producer would have the above quoted statement printed and framed as a constant reminder that dirt is dynamite.

There is a vast difference between dirt that is cheap, trashy, vulgar and repulsive, and that which we accept as spicy and yet with a fair amount of respect for decency in it.

I own three theatres. I have two others leased. This represents my life earnings. I feel vitally interested in the business of tomorrow as well as today. I refuse to exhibit a product that will destroy business. I believe I am helping the producer by taking this stand and I believe that hundreds and hundreds of exhibitors feel the same as I do and would vote for national censorship (as much as it would cost us and the industry—as much as we hate it), if producers do not clean house.—B. P. McCormick, Jones Theatre, Canon City, Col.

CALLS PUBLIC SICK OF OBJECTIONABLE FILMS

To the Editor of the Herald:

I read with a great deal of interest the interviews of Sidney Kent and J. C. Jenkins. If this were not so serious it would be comical to think that a man occupying the position Mr. Kent does could be so ignorant of the taste of the public in their picture fare.

The public have been sick for months of the dirt these producers put into pictures. About six months ago I asked a certain gentleman why he and his family never attended the theatre any more. He told me that his daughter is now 16 years old and on account of the sex and dirt in pictures they would not let their daughter go to the show and of course they would not go somewhere they forbade their daughter to go. Multiply this by a million or so times and you have the answer for dropped theatre attendance.

Recently I was in the Fox theatre in St. Louis and for a wonder the film and stage show was clean. The m.c. cracked a dirty joke about a nude woman. He failed to get even a snicker and so he repeated twice more that the woman was nude and still he never got a laugh. According to Mr. Kent's idea that smutty joke was just what the audience was craving.

Of course, the exhibitors do not know what their patrons want and so they have to take what the producers force down their throats by block booking. It's too bad that pictures are the only things made in this country that are sold, not on their merits, but by force. If the brains of the industry want to find out what kind of pictures the public will patronize, why, let them do away with block buying for one year and they will realize in short order what the answer will be.—H. G. Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla.

The Stranger's Return

(MGM-King Vidor)

Drama and Comedy

Principally a character drama of rural Americana, this show, devoid of anything that excites spontaneous enthusiasm, nevertheless brings a decided novelty. Localed on a prosperous generations-old American farm, all the interest centers in the personality of Grandpa Storr. Thus the supporting love story element as well as the comedy, situation drama and related human interest are subordinate to the attention that is given this irrascible, eccentric, old man. While coming within the family classification, being clean, wholesome and sometimes laughingly funny, the main appeal undoubtedly will be to the more mature in your audiences.

Storr is one of these independent old codgers, and continually makes life miserable for his in-law relations, Allen, Nettie and Thelma. Simon, the cornwhisky-addicted farmhand, is the only one in whom he seems to have any confidence. Enters Louise, a blood relative but divorced. Evidently there's heresy in the wheat belt, for as she and Grandpa hit it off admirably, the others become inimical.

Romance is introduced as Louise falls in love with Guy, who apparently is happily married, and Storr shams insanity to find out where his real friends are. As the in-laws call in the County Insanity Board, Storr reveals his hypocrisy, and a new will in which Louise comes into the entire estate upon his death; the in-laws receiving only meagre remembrances.

Shows of this type certainly should have a patron interest. The difficult matter will be to get the idea over to them in terse, crisp suggestions. Cast names will be of valuable assistance. You can do all the shouting you want about Lionel Barrymore, for there is no question that he is the whole picture. In fact, when he or his influence is off screen there is hardly anything else. The urban operator can make good use of atmospheric farm ballyhoo to stress the show's novelty, while the small town and rural showman can stress the familiarity of the theme, inasmuch as many American rural families have characters like Storr in their lineage.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Private Detective 62

(Warner)

Drama

Smooth and suave, William Powell not only has a popular motion picture patron following, but also makes an interesting and intelligent detective. In this case his name is a good, and the best, marquee decoration, with Margaret Lindsay, attractive English player, perhaps not too widely known, but worth building up for future appearances, in the leading role opposite.

There are several standbys in the cast, including Ruth Donnelly, Arthur Byron, Natalie Moorhead, all performing satisfactorily. Powell has appeared in this type of role before and the patrons should be half sold in advance by a knowledge of star and title. Stress the angle of Powell as a different kind of detective, one mixed up in a divorce racket and not too ethical private detective agency, without quite realizing just the sort of thing his unscrupulous partner is doing.

It is a salable, active, lively and believable yarn, having comparatively little of intensity, yet making for good entertainment, chiefly by reason of the smooth performance of Powell. It may be sold as rapid moving and entertaining material, with a slight mystery angle which, incidentally, is quite obvious, a murder, and a girl. The idea of the girl, supposed to be under the surveillance of Powell, with whom he later falls in love, and saves from a difficult situation, forms an angle which should make for good selling copy. Assigned to shadow the girl, he turns to protect her.

Powell, secret agent of the American government in France, fails in a mission, is arrested and deported to the United States as an undesirable alien. Escaping from the ship in New York, he finally, down at heel, goes into the private detective agency business with Arthur Hohl, specializing in divorces. Luxury and money come to the business when Hohl links himself with racketeer Gordon Westcott. Miss Lindsay, successfully gambling in Westcott's place, wins $50,000, and Powell is ordered to get something on her, so that Westcott will not have to pay. She is framed into believing she killed him when attempting to collect the money, and goes to Powell for advice. Later Westcott is really murdered. Their friendship had previously been broken by the revelation that Powell was a private detective shadowing her. Powell succeeds in unearthing the fact that his former partner, Hohl, was back of the "frame-up," planning to get Westcott's money and blackmail Miss Lindsay. Powell and Miss Lindsay finish the picture in expected fashion.

Powell, a private detective really by accident, who becomes enmeshed in a racket. In love, he is forced to shadow the one and only girl, and finally clears her of murder suspicion and himself of her suspicions. It's a lively selling theme. Offer it as active entertainment with a touch of good comedy. There can be no objection to youngsters seeing it.—Aaronson, New York.

Lady for A Day

Comedy-Drama

Gauged by preview audience enthusiasm, "Lady for a Day" may prove one of the new season's surprise hits. Sparkling dialogue and situation comedy that inspired almost continual laughter and provoked loud applause in scores of spots is the motivating theme. Acting that extracted full value from the related drama, romance, suspense and human interest endows the show with an emotion stirring sock which should appeal to all types of fans.

Modernly metropolitan in atmosphere, the story is packed with down-to-earth entertainment. From its intriguing opening to the surprisingly hectic finale it is rife with novelty and punch. Gamblers, gangsters, pool-sharks, apple sellers, tough guys, sweet, demure girls and a hard boiled one, titled European grandees, mayors, governors, cops and newspapermen romp through the story.

In the yarn, The Dude is a big shot gambler, who superstitiously patronizes Apple Annie before he sits in on a big game. Annie has a daughter, kept in convent school, who thinks her mother is a social registerite. Louise, loved by Carlos, finds the way to romance tough since his father, Count Romero, wants to look up the social standing of her mother. Complications are hard to imagine as the gambling Dude, pool-shark Judge, Missouri, Happy, Shakespeare try to help the old girl out in staging an impressive reception. A kidnaping intervenes, and the mayor, governor, as well as the police get mixed up in the turmoil of mirth. But, of course in the exciting climax everything works out to the satisfaction of the preview audience.

Besides cast names, there is plenty in "Lady for a Day" to stimulate patron interest. No one should overlook the fact that the original is by Damon Runyon. In this connection possibilities for effecting unusual newspaper contacts are unlimited. The respect which all members of the writing craft have for Runyon should make it a simple matter to get notices in sections of your local papers never touched before.

But accepting the fact that this show has a good deal that modern audiences want in screen entertainment, the most effective way to build it up to the consideration it deserves is by convincing your audiences in advance that you have a real treat in store for them. A campaign that sparkles as the picture does should bring in business. Do not be afraid to put your personal endorsement on it. Sell it to the whole family. There is just as much interest for the women as for the men and it is the kind of entertainment the youngsters should appreciate.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Frank Capra. Original story by Damon Runyon. Screen play by Robert Riskin. Photographed by Joseph Walker. Release date, not determined.

The Man Who Dared

(Fox)

Romantic Drama

Introduced by a credit line describing it as "an imaginative biography," the production actually is a romantic and dramatic pictorial recording of the life of Anton Cermak, late Chicago mayor. It is so amply laden with appeal that, aside from its educational value, its merit as a popular attraction should inspire showmen to forceful methods.

There is a definite novelty about "The Man Who Dared." Jon Novak is not heroized. The life story of Jon, son of obscure Bohemian immigrants, provides all the romance, drama and human interest.

Only the barest outline of story should be necessary to describe the picture. The coming to America of the elder Novaks, their arrival at Chicago simultaneously with the great fire, precede first glimpses of the boy Jon. Studious, his hopes are dashed as his father dies, in a coal mine. Then we see Jon the miner getting into politics, an assemblyman fighting the miners' battles in the legislature, under the eye of the political boss, McGuinness, and the counsel of his friend, Foley. Then follow his marriage to Teena, his election as mayor of Chicago, his fight to wipe out gangsterism, the shooting at Miami, where he goes to meet President-elect Roosevelt, his dying words, "I'm glad it was I, not you."

More than any screen occurrence in years, "The Man Who Dared" affords showmen the opportunity to proclaim that with this show motion pictures are fulfilling one of their most cherished functions. It is not entertainment as that word is commonly interpreted. Yet it is more than entertainment.

No one should hesitate to announce that "The Man Who Dared" is the story of Anton Cermak's life, as that is the picture's greatest box office value. Contacts should be made with civic units and schools. Editorial indorsements, as well as indorsements from civic, educational and business leaders, should be sought.

The title and cast probably will not sell this show to anything like its full possibilities unless the individual exhibitor puts his shoulder to the wheel.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Hamilton MacFadden. Original screen play by Dudley Nichols and Lamar Trotti. Photographed by Arthur Miller. Running time, 75 minutes. Release date, July 14, 1933.

Mama Loves Papa

(Paramount)

Comedy

Showmen anxious to give their patrons something zestfully different should find "Papa Loves Mama" just what the doctor ordered. A delightful domestic comedy, it's alive with farcical gags, hilarious dialogue and situations, clean, clever, intriguing, yet never pretentious. The show is a striking example of the showmanship and entertainment values that can be achieved in what probably will be considered a program picture when fine natural acting and thoughtful direction are fused with thorough preparation. The preview audience was thoroughly enthusiastic.

The plot is simple; it's just the old gag of permitting the world to laugh at another's misfortunes until the worm turns. Wilbur is a tolerantly henpecked husband who, Jessie thinks, lacks only a superiority complex to transform him into a flaming genius. Given to smartcrack poppycockery, he blithely sails along despite jeers and jibes of friends and co-workers. Then Jessie sends him off to work in formal morning attire. Wilbur's life changes. Kirkwood, adamant to all explanations, believes a death has occurred in the Todd family and gives him the day off. Follows a hectic escapade as a radical mob takes after him because of his attire. At an unveiling celebration there is more hectic fun, as the fleeing Wilbur is mistaken for the missing park commissioner. Photographed with the exotic Mrs. McIntosh, the picture's publication doesn't add to his standing at home, but does make him the commissioner and a politician. At Boss McIntosh's reception, much to Jessie's amazement, Wilbur gets giddy with Mrs. McIntosh. Nor is McIntosh any too keen for the frivolity, but he has under way a big deal for playground equipment with philanthropic Pierrepont and wants Wilbur to recommend his line. Wilbur stuns them by condemning the McIntosh brand as unsafe and flees to the haven of home. Jessie is just about to walk out, when in comes Kirkwood to tell his missing but now widely publicized clerk to forget all this foolishness and come back to work. The show winds up in a broad grin.

A glance at the cast might suggest that romance is missing, but there's plenty of love interest. The human sympathy phase, which seemed to register most effectively with the preview crowd, is worthy of an important part in any selling campaign, and for all age groups.

There's ample room for real ballyhoo. Ruggles measuring off the dimensions of his living room on a crowded depot platform is good for a dumb walking gag.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Norman McLeod. From a story by Keene Thompson and Douglas MacLean. Screen play by Nunnally Johnson and Arthur Kober. Photographed by Gilbert Warrenton. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date July 14, 1933.

Crashing Broadway

Western

Clean and fast-moving, this Rex Bell western comedy is one which exhibitors should not find difficult to sell. "Crashing Broadway" is a western with a definite plot that has a lot of rhyme and reason to it and it does not indulge too much in the well-known heroics of a great majority of the "horse operas." Besides this, customers may be assured that the picture is nicely sprinkled with comedy which Mr. Bell puts across with sureness, and, at the same time, just enough of the more serious side of life thrown in to give him adequate opportunity to exercise his right and his six-shooter.

The story, set in the early 1900's, concerns the adventures of a young cowboy who goes to New York to make his name as an actor. By luck he stumbles into a variety act and goes on "cold." The performance is a complete failure and the lad is heartbroken. However, the several members of the "profession" who live at Bell's boarding house receive an offer to "play the sticks" and he goes along with them in a covered wagon. Arriving at a western hamlet they discover that the theatre has been burned down by a jealous rival of the owner. How Bell, with the aid of the entire cast of the traveling show, binngs the villain to justice is exciting fare for the lover of westerns. There is action, comedy and fast riding, and love interest supplied by Doris Hill.

In localities where western picture are still in demand the exhibitor has something in this picture to place before his public, with Rex Bell on the marquee and the age-old, but still good, theme of right over wrong for explotitation purposes. It's natural fare for children.—Ayer, New York.

Produced and distributed by Monogram. Directed by J. P. McCarthy. Story by Wellyn Totman. Cameraman, Faxon Dean. Sound engineer, Dave Stoner. Release date, June 1, 1933. Running time, 55 minutes.

Money for Speed

(British-United Artists)

Speedway Drama

This is the first British picture to capitalize the popular sport of speedway racing, in which motorcycles dash in a hair-raising manner round a quarter-mile cinder track. Made in an unambitious manner by an unknown unit, it is a production that should coin money because of its thrills alone, and it should present an easy task to the showman.

It's the type of picture that certainly will need advance ballyhoo—all sorts of stunts with motorcycles and motor racing men suggest themselves. I foresee no difficulty in stimulating interest in a dangerous and stirring entertainment that attracts thousands of young men and women nightly in the major towns of England and the Antipodes.

The story is about two rivals, English and Australian champions, in their struggles on the track, culminating in a running fight at about 50 miles an hour in which the Englishman crashes into a belt of burning petrol. As if that were not enough, the later stages of the plot take the development to a carnival ground, where the hero rides his machine on the "Wall of Death," a bowl-shaped structure with vertical sides which the riders dash round. The final scene shows rider and machine shooting over the top of the bowl into a rickety net, which collapses.

There is a running succession of such thrills, mingled with humor and romance. There is a laughter-bringing "old fashioned cottage" racket, which the American tourist who can appreciate a joke against himself will find exceptionally funny. The track scenes were shot on a big London speedway, with the assistance of well-known exponents of the art, and are in every way convincing. Acting, photography and direction (the latter by Bernard Vorhaus) are all excellent. If British pictures can maintain the entertainment standard of this one they will soon become a force to reckon with.—Charman, London.

Produced by Hall Mark Films. Distributed in England by United Artists. Story and direction by Bernard Vorhaus. Adaptation by Vera Allenson. Camera work by Eric Cross and Fred Ford. Recording by G. Burgess. Editing by David Lean. Running time, 67 minutes.

Inflation

(M-G-M)

Business Booster

One reel of dialogue and pictures of industry presenting a dissertation by Pete Smith on the economic history of the depression and its current sequel of inflation and re-employment. It, being a picture for the masses, explains nothing but conveys optimism and promise with pictorial relief. It has the standard current wisecrack treatment religiously applied to all shorts by producers. This short may be made the text of cooperative promotions among business men, commercial clubs and bankers in the lesser communities. Any Rotary club will endorse it. It concludes with a laudation, an effervescent laudation with music, of President Roosevelt. It was directed by Zion Myers for MGM, and is said to initiate a series of like one-reelers dealing with subjects of topical and current public interest.—TR.

THE CATCHIEST

No. 729 Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle,
President of the Universal Pictures Corporation

It's "Moonlight and Pretzels."

It is the spirit of this very day!

Moonlight for romance, pretzels for fun.

Youth and beauty, snappiness, vim, vigor and vitality.

Tunes that will set your feet to tapping. A story, light as a feather, but pleasing.

Performers who know their stuff. Screen stars. Radio stars. Stage stars.

All in one smart, showy, noisy, glad mixture of fun and frolic and moonlight and . . . pretzels.

I've tried this title "Moonlight and Pretzels" on people who know nothing about the show business, and people who know everything about it.

Without exception it brings a gleam to their eyes.

It's not just a movie title. It's not just another "musical" picture. It is the new spirit of the times, the spirit which drives away dull care and brings back joy, confidence, hope, pleasure and . . . entertainment.

Youth and beauty, I said.

Such youth and such beauty as you have seldom feasted your eyes on.

Produced by the most amazing lot of smart talent the screen has had arrayed in any one picture for a very long time.

All your fans are right now hearing some of the catchy musical numbers of "Moonlight and Pretzels" on their radios. You can turn this into money by the very simple expedient of announcing that "Moonlight and Pretzels" is booked by your theatre.

Just tell your people that the "Moonlight and Pretzels" which you are about to show is the same "Moonlight and Pretzels" which everybody is talking about and . . . your job is done!

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Allied

MAN'S LAND, A: Hoot Gibson—Played this one during the hottest spell of the month and had a band concert for opposition. Results in two days were just a trifle more than film rental. The picture is just average. Recording on film very good. Played June 21-22.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp, James Murray, Thelma Todd—A picture of the old meller drama type, but a knockout from every angle. Sell the fact that it is taken from the True Story Magazine, and you have a box office cinch. Running time, 67 minutes. Played May 19-20.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN: Barbara Stanwyck, Nils Asther—Excellent production, excellent story, excellent acting, and superb directing, but too high-class for the average patron. Business average. Running time, 89 minutes. Played June 19-20.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

COCKTAIL HOUR: Bebe Daniels—This picture may be okay for the de luxe houses, but out here in the country it moves too slow. Ten years ago, Bebe was a drawing card. Today she is ancient history. People here want pictures with more comedy and action. Sound was only fair. Played June 24-25.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

FIGHTING FOR JUSTICE: Tim McCoy—Another good Columbia western. A fast moving picture well liked by the type of people that sees these pictures. Running time, 60 minutes. Played July 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN—Jack Holt, Lillian Miles—A very good program picture. Played on a double bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MAN OF ACTION: Tim McCoy—Played on double bill with "Transatlantic" (Fox) and made a satisfactory Saturday show. Both quantity and some quality. The more you give them, the more they expect for nothing.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

OBEY THE LAW: Leo Carrillo—Only fair picture. No drawing power for adults, but due to the fact that Dickie Moore plays in it, it will draw the kids. Play this only one day and then at Kiddies' matinee (if you have them). Carrillo not liked here and business was only fair. We would like to see more good pictures and pray that the producers will get away from these gangster pictures. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 28.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PAROLE GIRL: Mae Clarke, Ralph Bellamy—A mighty fine and entertaining picture, one of the best that Columbia has given us. The crowd praised this picture highly. Give it a little extra advertising. We are sorry that we did not run it two days instead of "Below the Sea." Played June 27.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Regis Toomey, Anita Page—An excellent melodrama filled with lots of fast action. Splendid program for bargain night. This kind of a picture always make a hit with the kids. Recording on film very good. Played June 29.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Regis Toomey, Anita Page—Still more praise to the action type production. Nothing big, yet bigger than any supposedly masterpiece put out this season. Played June 9-10.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

SPEED DEMON: William Collier, Jr., Joan Marsh—The racing scenes are very exciting, the rest of the story is rather thin. Business off, due to hot weather. Played June 18-19.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Evalyn Knapp, Regis Toomey—Another one of the ace melodramas that Columbia has turned out this season. If only the other producers would have the nerve to put out something like this, instead of the mush that is being dished out, the small town exhibitors would have it soft. Great for Saturday. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 2-3.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evalyn Knapp—This is a very pleasing picture. Story good, acting fine, played on a double bill and satisfied a Saturday crowd.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SUNDOWN RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—Excellent western. Plenty action. Clean and a good story. No smut in this one. Running time, 69 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

VIRTUE: Carole Lombard, Pat O'Brien—This number has its share of entertainment, and should please, even though it hasn't much drawing power. We played it on bargain night, so it went over nicely, in spite of the hottest June day in this state in 63 years. You can sell this picture exactly the same as "Pick Up," as the similarity of the two films seems almost plagiarism.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

First National

BLONDIE JOHNSON: Joan Blondell, Chester Morris—"Blondie" moves along at a rapid pace, and keeps the customers tense and excited. Joan Blondell is extremely popular here, and no one can deny that the girl is good. Played it on Friday and Saturday to unusually good business. We recommend playing up "Blondie Johnson" as Joan Blondell's first starring picture, calling her "Miss Racketeer" in the ads, saying she is "out to get her man." Miss Blondell has had better pictures, but I cannot recall that she has ever given a better performance.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—Set this picture to replace a newer one that we did not believe would draw here, and it certainly brought in the business. It's a little old, but would suggest small towns play it if they have not already done so. Played June 26-27.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—A fine bit of entertainment. Exceptionally good story which, when all is said and done, is the chief requisite of any picture. Barthlemess at his best and Tom Brown and Sally Eilers vie with him in making this just a darn good picture. Airplane stuff is fine. Director Wellman did a good job and he had something to work with. It's not often nowadays that you get such a combination, good story, good cast, good direction. Makes you wonder why they waste some of the film they do. Running time, 8 reels. Played June 25-27.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—The kind of show it is a pleasure to exhibit. Funny as they make 'em but clean. Joe is a favorite here, especially with the men and boys. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 21-22.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Went over in great style on Sunday and Monday. Big business on first day matinee, because it's a natural for the kids. You know how to sell Joe E. Brown. Go to it.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—I think this is the best Joe ever made. Pleased all, young and old. Clean and full of pep from start to finish. If you like comedy, do not pass this one. Running time, 74 minutes. Played June 21.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

EMPLOYEES ENTRANCE: Warren William, Loretta Young—This is an extra good entertaining picture. The star great and balance of cast good. Loretta Young always good and Alice White was there, too, with a lot of comedy. Played June 22-23.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LAWYER MAN: William Powell, Joan Blondell—This is a mighty good program picture. Better than lots of the specials. Both stars fine. Story good and interesting. All liked it. Played June 27-28.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LILLY TURNER: Ruth Chatterton, George Brent—A mighty sorry picture for the great Chatterton to appear in. After "Frisco Jenny" I thought perhaps she was headed for a comeback, but this has ruined any chance she might have had. From now on we show Chatterton pictures on our cheap admission night. Just another good star killed by poor stories. First, "The Crash," and now this mess. No star can overcome two pictures like these in one season. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 2-3.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

MIND READER, THE: Warren William—Pretty weak stuff. They just had nothing to do the week they made this. Lowest mid-week draw on record and I don't blame the folks much. Constance Cummings too good a lead to waste this way. Running time, 8 reels. Played June 21-22.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—Some thought this picture adorable, others didn't like it. Pleased about 60%. Business below the usual Gaynor pictures. Our patrons will not accept pictures with foreign locale. Too much pomp that did not spell entertainment, although lavishly produced and music okay. Running time, 83 minutes. Played June 18-19-20-21.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Marian Nixon, "Buddy" Rogers—It is one swell picture. Dandy family entertainment. Play it on your best days and get behind it for it will make you money. Pleased 100%. This is the kind of entertainment people want, so why not give it to them. Done good business with weather 104°. Played Sunday-Monday, June 25-26.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—A marvelous production killed by cockney English accent. Some walkouts, some good comments. Must be put over to the better class of trade or will be a terrific flop. This should have been the big draw of the year but misses by a mile. Running time, 110 minutes.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. General patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—Not so hot at the box office, but a great picture, and no intelligent person can deny it. Sure wish pictures of this type would go over. They certainly deserve it! A great cast, a fine production, altogether, an immeasurably splendid production. Play it for prestige. —Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook—This is the poorest so-called special I ever ran. Nothing to it but a lot of noise. Clive Brooks was the only one you could understand. Running time, 105 minutes. Played July 2-3.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—It knocked them cold in New York; they stood up on the seats and yelled in Chicago; it laid them in the aisles in Kansas City, while in Clyde it nose-dived with a dull, sickening thud. Just try and ram that English lingo down the throats of an American small town audience and see how far you get. If you have not shown it yet you have a pain in the neck coming. and before the run is finished the pain will be at the end of your spine. It's more spinach, and I say to hell with it. Running time, 110 minutes. Played June 17-18-19 to less than film rental.—F. S. Crane, Plaza Theatre, Clyde, Kansas. General patronage.

GOLDEN WEST, THE: George O'Brien—Played this one a little old, but it seemed to please. The result was a fair business. Plenty of Indians and action for Saturday crowd. Played June 9-10.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory, El Brendel, Buster Phelps—Excellent. Played this Saturday matinee and it pleased 100 per cent. Buster Phelps is a wow. A grand family show. Comedy, romance, drama, it will please them all from six to a hundred six. Not an unfavorable comment.

RKO IS RELEASING MONEY PICTURES NOW!

Wish I could book one once a week as good as this for family night.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn—Just the kind of pictures Fox has been making all year. They are either good pictures with no drawing power, or terrible pictures that disgust the patrons. Let us hope that they don't rest on the merits of "State Fair" all year. Business fair. Played June 26-27.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

HELLO SISTER: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—Did not see it, but patrons reports were "very poor" and box office reports were not much better. Help! Murder! Fox is killing Jimmy Dunn—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Their best since "Bad Girl," thoroughly enjoyed by all. Business normal. Running time, 71 minutes. Played June 25-26-27-28.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HUMANITY: Boots Mallory—A money loser. Does not give satisfaction. Don't see how even Fox can make money on this.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. General patronage.

IT'S GREAT TO BE ALIVE: Raul Roulien, Edna May Oliver—A semi-musical that a producer that knew what it was all about would have made a real box office picture, but it misses that by a slight margin due evidently to cheapening the production after it had started; at least that is the impression that it gives. Also this new star Roulien is decidedly hammish in his portrayal of the last man in the world. He has the appearance of being camera conscious most of the time during the picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

IT'S GREAT TO BE ALIVE: Raul Roulien, Edna May Oliver—Something different. Pleased all patrons, young and old. Plenty of music all the way. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 23-24.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tray, Joan Bennett—A dandy little picture that will please after you get them in, but just try to get them in. It is suicide to run pictures of this caliber during the hot months. Business off on bargain nights. Played June 28-29.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—It seems that the only thing Fox can make is westerns, and they are just fair. Business below normal. Running time, 64 minutes. Played June 23-24.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—Here's a type picture that, affectionately speaking, has "it," and does it deliver at the box office! Will Rogers has a large following due to his radio talks and daily paper articles. Played June 5-6.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Gave very good satisfaction. Business fair. Played June 21-22.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Drew the usual Rogers fans. Well liked. Played June 14-15.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC: Edmund Lowe—Played on double bill with "Man of Action" (Columbia) and made a satisfactory Saturday show. Both quantity and some quality. The more you give them the more they expect for nothing.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, Ernest Truex, David Manners—A very good production. Personally thought it a knockout and the majority of patrons liked it. However, there will be a few in the small towns who are bound to pan a costume picture like this, but the better class of trade will like it.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. General patronage.

Invincible

FLAMING SIGNALS: Noah Beery, Marceline Day—Just a picture. Did not strengthen the program much.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

M-G-M

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro, Myrna Loy—This is romantic stuff—desert nights, a tropical moon, passion on the sands, and all that sort of thing and must be sold directly to women. It should be plugged along the lines of "The Pagan," although, if memory serves me right, it is not nearly so good as the earlier picture. However, "The Barbarian" is entertaining, and if advertised along simple, yet more or less passionate lines, it should draw. Like this: "Romantic Ramon Novarro, loving fiercely, in 'The Barbarian' with Myrna Loy."—"Women could not resist him, and you are no exception."—"He kidnapped and held her captive in his desert palace—the only ransom was her love."—"While she bathed in the pool of rose petals—he watched—with burning passion in his eyes." You can't tell them it's a great picture (it isn't even a very good one), so if you launch on a freak advertising campaign you may be able to hold most of the business you would otherwise lose, because Ramon Novarro doesn't mean much at the box office anymore. Played Sunday and Monday. Good business.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson—Excellent family picture. Suited fine for Friday-Saturday trade. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

FAST WORKERS: John Gilbert, Robert Armstrong, Mae Clarke—As usual we can not get a play on a picture that Gilbert is starred in. His voice does not record well; it has a peculiar toneless quality that does not add to the picture. The picture has some action and should have got money, for Armstrong and Mae Clarke are liked but John Gilbert is too much of a liability to put any picture over here. Played Friday and Saturday. A good picture for those days had anyone headed the cast but Gilbert.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FAST WORKERS: John Gilbert, Mae Clarke—The star with the help of Robert Armstrong and Mae Clarke made a fair program picture out of this thin story. Some liked it and others said just another picture, and there you are.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston, Karen Morley—A star in Metro's crown for this one. A wonderful picture but small crowd. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 86 minutes. Played June 26-27.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston, Karen Morley—One of the best pictures we ever played. But it did not draw at the box office. They don't want the truth nowadays. This picture had ought to be played in every school in America. They need the education this picture teaches. Story facts, and the acting wonderful.—Played June 19-20.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—Here's a super special, so Metro said, with great possibilities! It hasn't pleased anyone, anywhere, at any time. It has all the advantages that constitute an extraordinary flop. Failed to get even rental and played it at almost half of what they first wanted for rental. Entertainment value is good for less than one-half of one per cent. Played May 8-9.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans—A marvelous picture, full of thrills and excitement from beginning to finish. Only Metro could produce such a picture as this. We cannot begin to tell you of the story, but by all means play it and give it all the time you can. We had some critics say it was the best picture they have ever seen and after you play it you will agree with them. Business above average. Running time, 106 minutes. Played June 29-30.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy—Here's a honey. Story just suited for Lee Tracy, and how he puts it over. And that's not all. He had wonderful support. Frank Morgan portrays a character that reminds one of Lionel Barrymore; in fact the similarity is uncanny. Madge Evans blossoms forth as never before and Charles Butterworth as Tracy's "stooge" could not be improved. Give us more of this type and Lee Tracy will mean something at the box office. Oodles of good comedy and it drew better than usual. Played June 25-26.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—Strictly a class picture, one on which the opinions of our patrons were much divided. Some thought it great and others did not care for it. But that is the way with pictures of this type. There is no question but what the director did a good job following the historical angle of Russia during the reign of the Romanoffs.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies, J. Farrell MacDonald, Onslow Stevens—A nice clean picture, a little gooey in spots, but Metro has done nice work in bringing back this old favorite. There are some beautiful voices in the old Irish songs that help out and you can play it as a good picture for the family. Clean, wholesome entertainment, with a great pooch in Michael, the mutt. You won't have to hide when they come out on this one. If you can get in on a reissue, the picture will please them. I will say this much: it is done better than many of the old pictures that have been brought back, only to take a nose dive at the box office.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, Ind. General patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—A wonderful picture expertly produced, directed and the acting is marvelous. We cannot recommend this picture too highly. Give all the playing time you can stand. However, this is not the type of picture for the small towns, as only the high class of people will be able to understand it. Business was only fair owing to the heavy drama, but it is the year's best picture. Running time, 122 minutes. Played June 26-27.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—It's a mighty big historical picture, in fact, too big for a small town theatre and it takes from 7:30 P. M. till almost 12 o'clock midnight to complete two showings. No more of its kind for me, I truly hope. When the last showing was over I sure had one big job waking them up and getting them out. As my theatre is kept cool there were several sleeping miles and miles a minute. It was the young folks who were asleep. So you see it is a picture for the older set in a town like mine. Running time, 130 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro—Just about as sorry a picture as produced, from an entertainment and more important productive angle. I am at a loss to understand why any producer will produce these Chinese pictures. I have yet to see my first one click. My patrons shy around them like horses did the first autos. Played May 29-30.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—This is another of Metro's much-a-do-about specials that go through their regular routine of flopping. It is awful hard for Metro to turn out a good program picture during these much needed times, besides clotting up theatre attendance with such pictures as their super-specials, which turn out to be only "super-chargers." Played May 22-23.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

Paramount

DEVIL IS DRIVING, THE: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—All I can say for this one, just another picture that has no drawing power after the first night's showing. At least that is what it did for me. Running time, 70 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March, Cary Grant, Jack Oakie—While this is another of the cycle of "air" pictures it is very good and pleased with a fair draw. But my patrons are fed up on "air pictures." If they were stretched out over a period it would not be so bad, but they come in bunches of close releases; that makes it monotonous. Played June 27-28.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March, Cary Grant—Dramatic air stuff, well played. Four good names here in March, Grant, Carole Lombard, and Jack Oakie. Played Friday and Saturday. Average business.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

HELLO EVERYBODY: Kate Smith—Business terrible, the worst in the history of the house. Show pleased the few who came. Played June 28-29.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MURDERS IN THE ZOO: Charlie Ruggles, Lionel Atwill—Very good picture of its type; Charlie Ruggles was the main attraction here. Our patrons fed up on murder pictures. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 22-23-24.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable, Carole Lombard—A batch of the worst recording ever put through my projector. Simply wore the volume control out running it up and down. Evidently it was this bird's first attempt at recording. Clark Gable's miscast, that is, providing he would fit in any part. Carole Lombard did very well with the little two-bit part she had. Not so hot, says I, not even fair.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—This little picture knocked them for a loop. Plenty snappy. My folks delighted with it. Mae West, bless her, is a real trouper. This is a splendid picture. Tell 'em it's raw. Try to make it worse than it is. They'll be crazy to see it. It has enough life to make it good. Well acted. Splendid sound, good cast.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

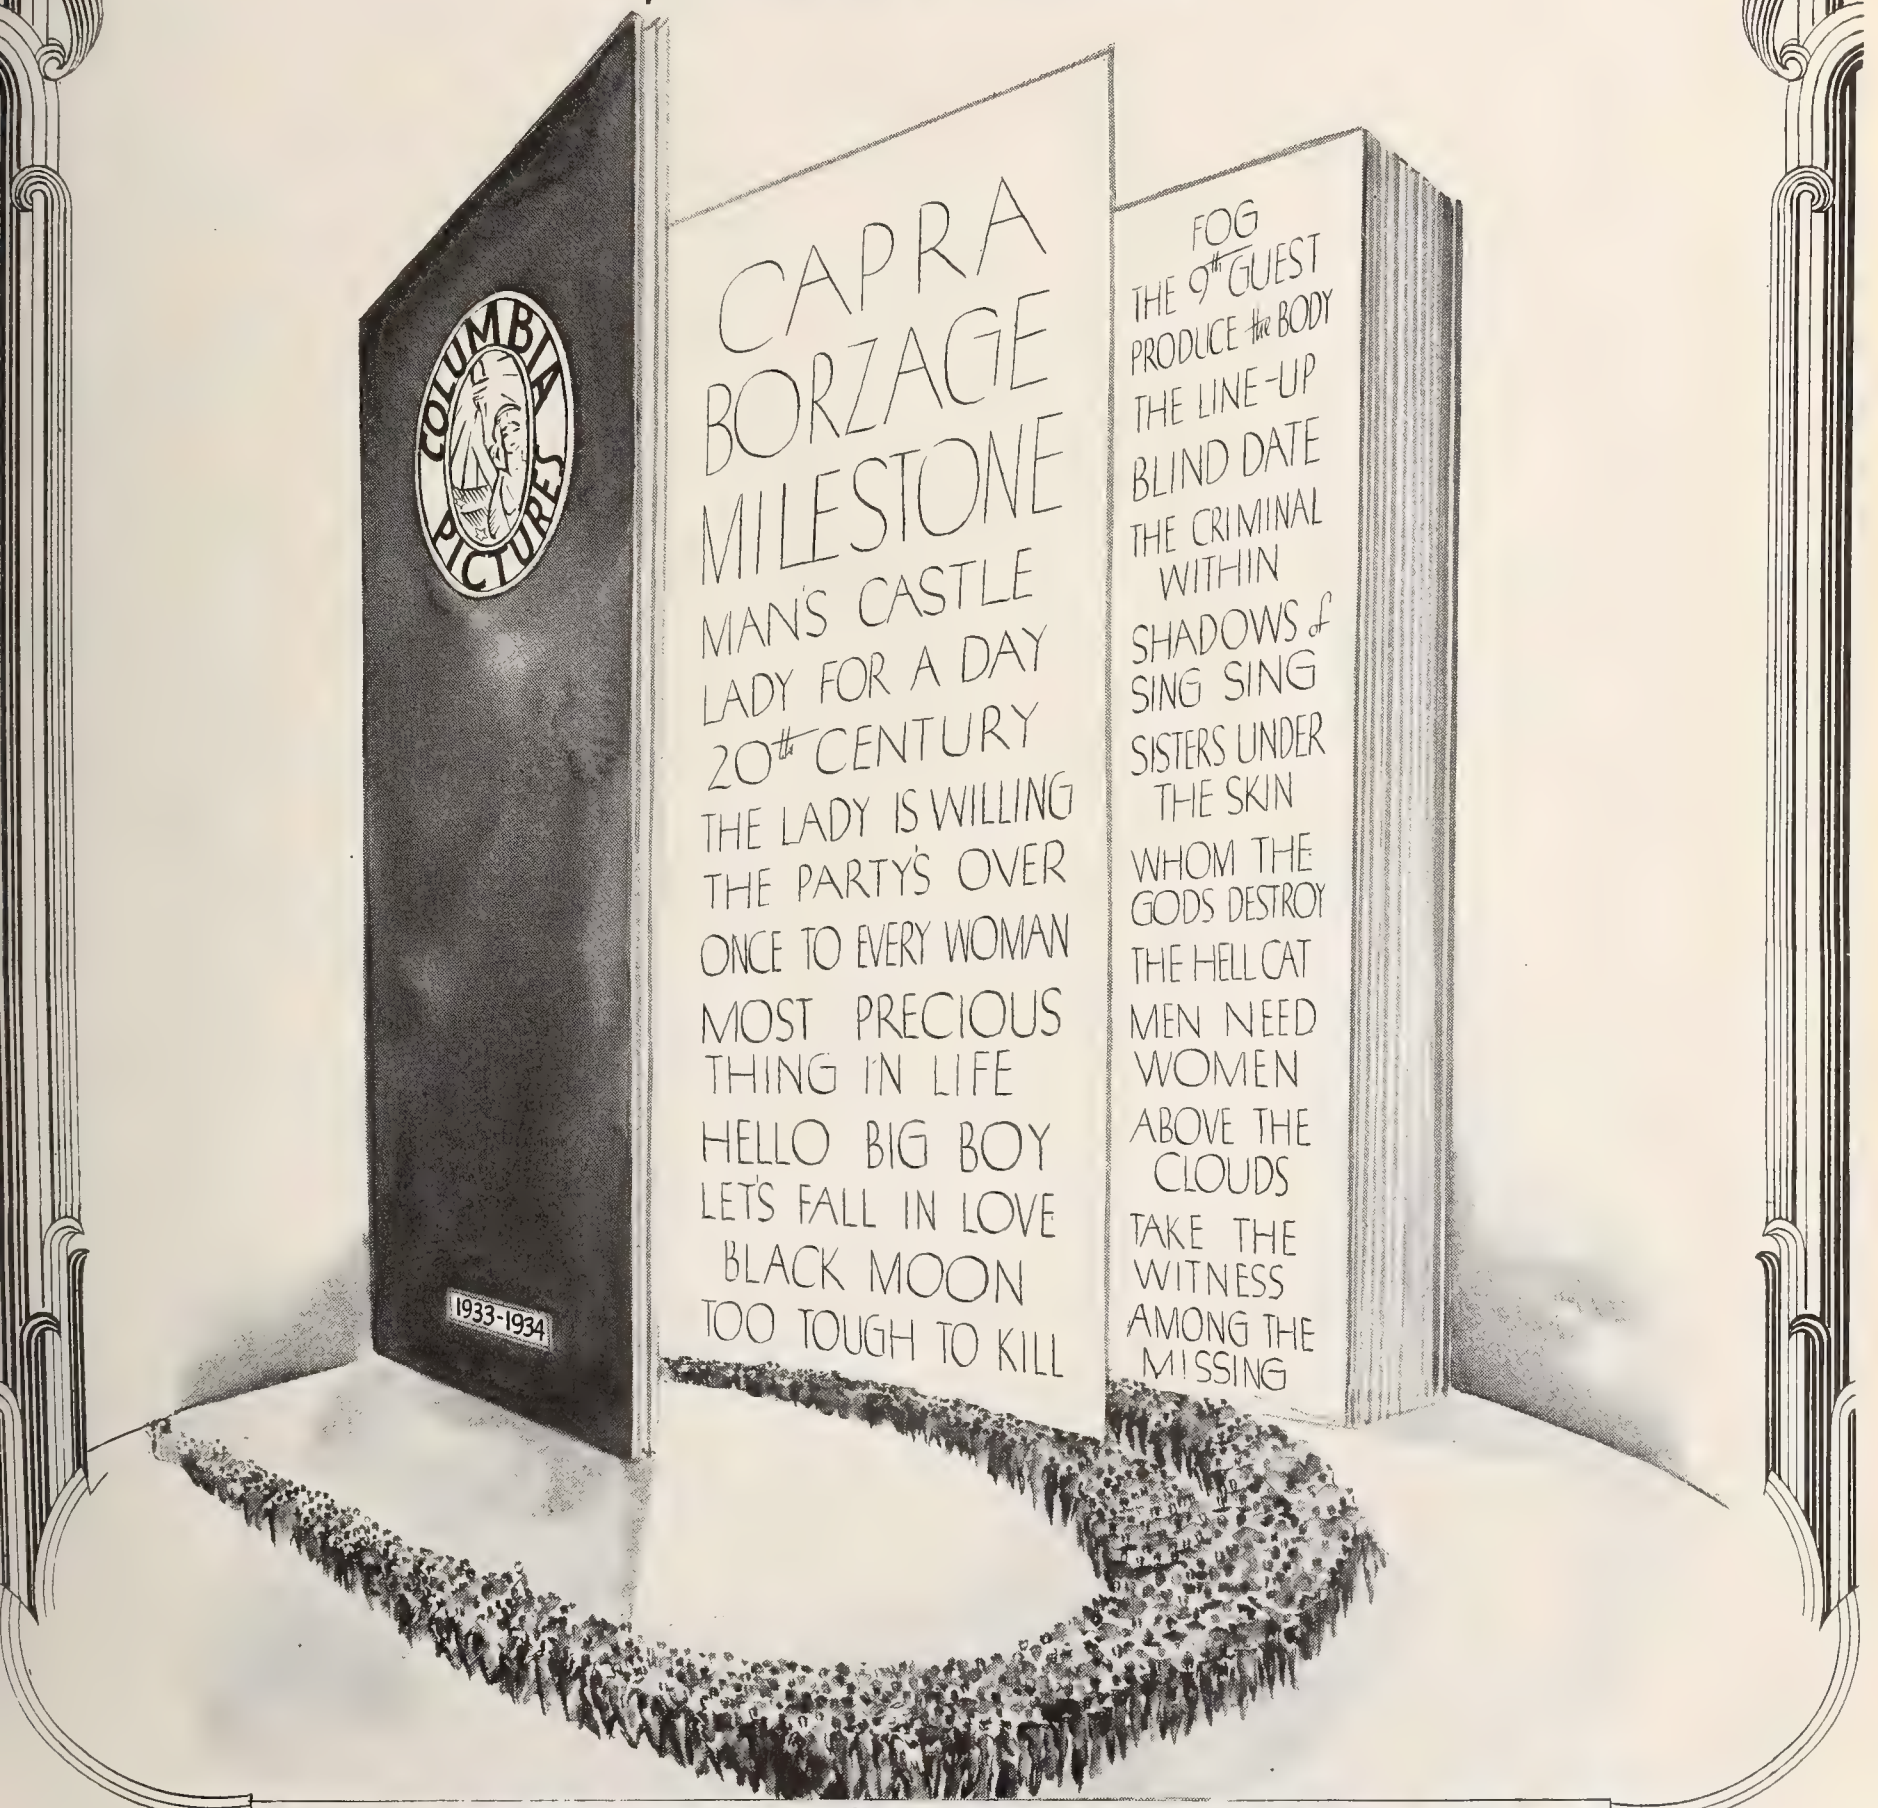
SONG OF THE EAGLE: Richard Arlen, Mary Brian, Charles Bickford—A fairly entertaining picture that did fairly good Saturday night business. Rather hard to sell. The "beer" angle doesn't mean much any more. Once you get a thing you don't care to hear about it after that.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

TONIGHT IS OURS: Fredric March, Claudette Colbert—This type picture usually pleases them, more so with the combination of March and Colbert. March has developed fast and consistently since "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" into one of the screen's greatest actors. Played June 2-3.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin—A

THE GATEWAY TO GREATER BOX-OFFICE

for 1933 · 1934



March Forward with Columbia!

good Zane Grey western that isn't too rough to please average audience. Personally thought Erwin's best performance recently. Played June 16-17.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

RKO

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT, A: John Barrymore—Good work by a great cast. Drew some of the highbrows who seldom come to pictures, and did fair business. Played June 16-17.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHRISTOPHER STRONG: Katharine Hepburn—Another crow from RKO. Boy, oh boy, will RKO ever quit sending us these rotten box office pictures. This one takes the prize as a box office lemon, drawing very little first night, and almost nothing the second. This is one of those pictures where the whole cast talks English as it's talked in dear old England and you can understand about every tenth word. Hepburn does her best with a bad story that was made worse by the treatment it was given. Lots of walkouts on this one. Played June 28-29.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

CHRISTOPHER STRONG: Katharine Hepburn, Ralph Forbes—This girl Hepburn that is the composite of Garbo and Dietrich by all reports has suffered in this picture. The picture is dialogued to death, there are about six reels that is nothing but talk. RKO seems to have the propensity to give their women stars stories that do not click. I can't for life of me see why they are not smart enough to build up this star with different stuff than this lemon "Christopher Strong." Its title should have been "Christopher Weak," and no one would have kicked on the title and say that it did not represent the picture, for it did. They did the same thing with Bennett until she was not worth a nickel at the box office and now they are doing the same thing with an actress that, given the right kind of stories, should go far. But they will have to come better than this one, if she keeps out on top.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CONQUERORS, THE: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—Wonderful picture, a little old, but very timely. Drew well first night. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 1-2.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

CONQUERORS, THE: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—Old but extremely good. Very timely story material excellently handled. Should go over in any small town late as it is and you can pick it up right. Local conditions hurt the draw the days we ran it but it was worth running. I agree with many previous reports. We all know babies have to be born and have been for many years, but the screen is no place to reveal the fact to the present younger generation and the kids. Running time, 9 reels. Played June 18-20.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This picture appears to have been just thrown together without rhyme or reason; the same people that made "Cuckoos" and "Rio Rita" with this pair evidently have lost what it takes to make a picture with this pair. The poorest they have had and evidently something went wrong with the recording, for some of the talk is not plain and it is not in the system, which is W. E.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—A picture that did not draw and did not give 100 per cent satisfaction. The story a little raw. The acting good for what they tried to make out of the story, but these little snappy spots in the pictures are keeping patrons away from the theatres and putting us all out of the picture business. We will have to go back to stock companies and vaudeville to get the admissions back and get patronage. Played June 25-26.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—The best faked picture we have ever seen. Good drawing power, and pleased all, even though many of the kids were scared. One picture of this type is enough. Running time, 100 mintes. Played June 29-30.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: Bill Boyd—Exciting picture that seemed to please, but I still think it's wrong to expose these screen illusions. Played June 25-26.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: Bill Boyd—One of the fastest thrill pictures ever screened. Plenty good for any theatre in any town. You tell 'em not big names, but these people can act rings around two-thirds of the so-called big shots. It has everything to please. A real audience picture. Grab it, boost it, play it for a run. They will come a second time to see it.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: Bill Boyd—This is a mighty good program picture. Pleased them all. Played June 20-21.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MEN OF AMERICA: Bill Boyd—Good week-end picture. Not a cowboy opera but a pretty good yarn well told and should prove satisfactory anywhere that action is needed on Saturdays, yet it's above the usual run of shoot 'em ups. Running time, 7 reels. Played June 23-24.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

PAST OF MARY HOLMES, THE: Helen MacKellar, Eric Linden—Just another picture but better than the RKO average. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 25-26.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SAILOR BE GOOD: Jack Oakie, Vivienne Osborne—Good, funny picture, played on a double bill. Gave satisfaction. Played June 15-16.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Universal

AFRAID TO TALK: Eric Linden, Sidney Fox—One of those pictures where nearly everyone gets killed, and the balance get a nervous breakdown, including the audience. Who ever told Sidney Fox that she could act. She must be camera shy, as one never got a glimpse of her face. Running time, 76 minutes. Played June 21-22.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty, Anita Page—Very good picture of its kind. Played June 2-3-4.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty, Anita Page—A fine circus picture. Beatty is great and picture exciting, but my patrons are sick of animal pictures. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 30-July 1.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DESTINATION UNKNOWN: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—A strange mixture of religion and rum running, and it seemed to please our crowd on our cheap admission night. They try to work the miracle man stunt in this one, but it falls rather flat and is liable to offend church people. Drew average business for us. Played June 30.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

DESTRY RIDES AGAIN: Tom Mix—One of the best Tom Mix pictures released. Wonderful entertainment for the entire family. Box office very good. Running time, 53 minutes. Played June 28-29.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman—This is the reissued picture and it has been cut down some. There is not so much of Paul and more of the other acts. A welcome change and the picture is great entertainment from every angle. The ballet work of the Russell Markert dancers is marvelous in precision and beauty. This will give Universal a chance to get some of their money back when they came out behind the gun on musicals with this one. Well liked and the patronage that it drew shows that they are ready for a change to good musicals, but it is my opinion that if they are not made in color they will flop.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman—A timely revival of the most glorious musical ever produced, and was greatly enjoyed. Excellent drawing power.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—This is a knockout. It's about the funniest thing we've ever thrown on our screen. It's rich, spicy, real and human. It sizzles and snaps and is entertainment plus. It will completely satisfy the most city-bred sophisticate, or the most countrified hick that ever came out of Mud Creek Center. It is positively the grandest comedy that you could possibly wish for. Yes, I'm raving, and in spite of the fact that I am probably the worst crab about what I laugh at in the whole state. I don't pretend to be one of the intelligentsia, but when I laugh at a show, as I did at this one, it's got to be good! "Out All Night" just couldn't be better, and in these times it's a regular tonic. Not since "The Cohens and Kellys" have we viewed a picture that dug so deep into the hearts and funnybones of our patrons. Never have I seen faces so completely pleased over a comedy. Slim and Zasu are at their very best here, and Laura Hope Crews as Slim's doting mother gives an unforgettable funny performance. The story is a natural for exploitation, and Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville are positively the biggest money-making team on the screen today, bar none! Mr. Exhibitor, wherever you are, don't fail to play this picture. We know it will pack your house, as it did ours. We know it will give your patrons more honest-to-goodness enjoyment than they have had in years. We know you'll thank Universal for giving you a humdinger of a show. Perhaps we've made some pretty broad statements on this film—but "Out All Night" deserves every one of them—and more!—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Fair picture, but too overdone. There was too much picture for the story. Had it been cut in half, the production might have fitted the story. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 12-13.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—An excellent picture as far as production and story goes, but you can't cram war pictures down the customers' throats. Business below average. Running time, 89 minutes. Played May 29-30.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Pleasing entertainment. Good business. I hope they don't give any more suggestive lines to this pair, because they can be funny without being dirty. Played June 23-24.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Nothing to this. No entertainment, just vulgar and smutty. My patrons are getting tired seeing such junk. These producers nowadays think it takes sex to make a good picture. They do not realize that what they want are pictures with clean stories, not sex. Too much sex is killing the picture business in these small towns today. When will the producers wake up and give us pictures with clean stories. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

Warner

42D STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Almost broke our house record. Can add nothing to what other exhibitors have said. Played June 24-25.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss, Bette Davis—A fine picture for any night. I thought it Arliss' best picture. Pleased all who saw it but for some reason Arliss is not box office here. Think he is too good an actor for small town patronage. This picture cannot help but please all who see it. Running time, 67 minutes. Played June 24-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

World Wide

CONSTANT WOMAN, THE: Conrad Nagel, Leila Hyams—Very good program picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 30-July 1.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

CROOKED CIRCLE, THE: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts, Ben Lyon—A darn good audience picture. If you can get a full house the crowd will enjoy it. The best of the spooky pictures, spiced with much comedy contributed by Gleason and Pitts.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. General patronage.

HYPNOTIZED: Moran and Mack—Poor. A big flop at the box office. Running time, 71 minutes. Played June 25-26.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhod patronage.

MAN FROM HELL'S EDGES, THE: Bob Steele—A very good western. Bob Steele can be counted upon to put a lot of pep and action in his pictures. The western fans ate it up.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BLACK SHEEP: Scrappy Cartoon—Very ordinary. But seemed to please.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

CURIOSITIES—This one is about average, but then the whole series should be discontinued. Why should the producers continue to put off something as sorry as this one on the exhibitors. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HEAR 'EM AND WEEP: Lambs Gambol—I was mistaken. Thought that the Lambs Gambols could not get worse, but found out they could. Running time, too long.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

HEAR 'EM AND WEEP: Lambs Gambols—This is the best comedy we have played from Columbia this season. However, it is only fair entertainment and not up to the standard comedies. Many songs of yesterday, and the music is very good. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LAMBS ALL-STAR GAMBOL: Lambs Gambols—This is the second one of this group that we have shown. What I want to know is "Who told Columbia that they could make comedies?"—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

SCRAPPY: Cartoon—As good a cartoon as any. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

Educational

AS THE CROWS FLY: Moran and Mack—A very funny comedy. Better than the average comedies we are getting nowadays.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FOOL ABOUT WOMEN, A: Andy Clyde—All of Andy's comedies are good. Lots of laughs. This one is a little extra funny.— Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TORCHY'S KITTY COUP: Ray Cooke—A very good comedy. Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

M-G-M

CHALK UP: Sport Champions—A very interesting one reeler showing billiard and pool shots by the world famous Willie Hoppe. One of the best of this series. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAIDS A LA MODE: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Slap stick in the worst way. They are funny and go farther for a laugh than any other team.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MUSH AND MILK: Our Gang—A good Gang comedy. These kids are funny and direction of these comedies better than most comedies.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MUSIC LESSON, THE: Flip the Frog—A fine cartoon that all the kids and some of the older patrons waited to see the second time.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ONE TRACK MINDS: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Very good from the girls. Some of their comedies of late have not been so hot. But this one is better than usual, if not one of their best.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

STRANGE INNERTUBE: Taxi Boys—Awful. Where did the Taxi Boys get the idea they are funny? This is the second one of these so-called comedies I have run and if I never see another one of them it will be soon enough. This one goes on and on, like Tennyson's Brook and when it is over you don't know what it was about. Running time, too long.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

THEIR FIRST MISTAKE: Laurel and Hardy—As usual Laurel and Hardy go over well. There should be more short subjects on this order. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S CRAZY INVENTIONS: Talkartoon—A very good cartoon comedy that will please any audience. A little silly, but all cartoons are. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RHAPSODY IN BLACK AND BLUE: Louis Armstrong—One of the hottest orchestra reels I have ever run. Very good. Running time, one reel.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS: No. 8—After our first screening we decided to put this one on the shelf and not play it in our house. The entire series has been rotten. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ART IN THE RAW: Edgar Kennedy—A funny comedy. This man is a comedian different from the rest. Always gets plenty of laughs.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PARLOR, BEDROOM AND WRATH: Ed Kennedy—Not funny enough.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PIANO TUNERS: Tom and Jerry Series—This whole series is good. Some clever art work and swell music. Running time, one reel.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

SILVERY MOON: Aesop Fable—Excellent. Running time, one reel.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

SO THIS IS HARRIS: Phil Harris—A musical comedy that will help any program. Why don't the producers get wise and make more like this one. Wonderful entertainment. Running time, 27 minutes.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

THROUGH THIN AND THICKET: Masquers Comedy—A few laughs—and no sense.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

United Artists

THREE LITTLE PIGS: Silly Symphony—These technicolor cartoons are in a class by themselves. Hear as many comments on these as we do the feature. Disney should have a medal for the entertainment and beautiful color he puts into these cartoons.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

Universal

GOING TO BLAZES: Oswald Cartoon—Good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HUNTING TROUBLE: Louise Fazenda—Rowdy farce comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BOSKO THE DRAWBACK: Looney Tune—Pretty good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhod patronage.

CURIOUS CUSTOMS OF THE WORLD: E. M. Newman World Adventure Series—Interesting. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HEY, HEY, WESTERNER: Broadway Brevity—Another good musical comedy all in colors. We would like to have more of these, as they always please and as a rule are very good. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I WISH I HAD WINGS: Merry Melody—One of the best cartoons we have run. Running time, 8 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

TEE FOR TWO: Broadway Brevity—A splendid technicolor picture. Best we have had. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Rural and small town patronage.

YOU CALL IT MADNESS: Richy Craig, Jr.—Poor. Nothing to it; it seems Vitaphone is slipping. They sure will if they make many like this one. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

WAKE UP THE GYPSY IN ME: Merry Melody—An excellent cartoon.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Serials

Universal

CLANCY OF THE MOUNTED: Tom Tyler—Say what you like, but these serials are real business builders. Get off to a good start, and you are sitting pretty for 12 weeks. Running time, 18 minutes per chapter.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

JUNGLE MYSTERY: Tom Tyler—Good jungle serial; almost too much wild animal stuff. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

We note that Carlysle Jones, a publicity writer for Warner-First National, is reported to have said, "Hollywood should go whoopee wild. It's been too tame the last few years—doesn't pack the "kick" for fans it did in the days before the morality code. There have been too many happy marriages, too many babies and too few love scandals. People no longer regard stars as goddesses and supermen, but just routine folks like the rest of us.

"A few well publicized jamborees would put Hollywood back on the map and give the world something to talk about besides the salaries of the industry."

Carlysle was raised in our town. We knew him before he put on his rompers, and this statement, coming from the son of as fine a mother as the sun ever shone on, is indeed a surprise, not to say shock.

Carlysle's perspective is evidently confined to Wilshire, Sunset and Hollywood boulevards, but it is our candid belief that there are still a few people outside the confines of Hollywood who have not yet discarded the "morality code," notwithstanding the almost super-human efforts of some producers to make them do so.

The nastiness in "So This Is Africa," the bedroom scene in "State Fair" and the suggested rape scene in "Temple Drake," are probably what Carlysle meant by putting in a "kick" in the picture. We are personally acquainted with at least seven thousand independent exhibitors who will not put their stamp of approval on the Jones theory.

If the picture industry must be built upon the premise that "there are too many happy marriages, too many babies and too few love scandals," then let the industry sink. The country survived before motion pictures were known and it could survive after they have been forgotten. We resent the imputation that the success of the industry depends upon the exploitation of immorality.

We would like to suggest to our very good friend, Lin Bonner, that he instruct his protege, Carlysle, that in the future he should think before he takes up his pen to write that kind of publicity for the industry, for the Lord knows we have had altogether too much of it already.

If the reader hasn't anything better to do—and we doubt if he could find anything better to do—he should get the HERALD under date of June 10th, and read two editorials, one by William Randolph Hearst and the other by George P. Skouras, both dwelling on the present tendency toward smut and vulgarity of the screen.

No one can question the ability of Mr. Hearst as an editorial writer, and no one can doubt his sincerity when he attaches his signature to an editorial, and no one can say that he lacks in knowledge of the effect of the motion picture on the public mind.

Among other things Mr. Hearst had this to say: "There may be an element of the public which patronizes prurience and vulgarity, but the screen should appeal to the better element of the public."

We are glad Mr. Hearst said that. Coming from him this should have some weight with production heads. It might be a good thing if that statement of his were posted over every desk in Hollywood.

To say that the public taste demands "sex," "smut" and "vulgarity" in its entertainment is to bring an indictment against the intelligence of the American people, an indictment that no producer has a moral right to bring.

Quite frequently we see this sign posted in front of a theatre, "Children under sixteen not admitted." Why bar children from a picture that is suitable for the adult? That sign of itself is evidence of the degenerating effect it might have on the child mind. If that be the effect then why make the picture at all? If this business is to build and hold its rightful place among the legitimate industries of the country it must be built upon decency and public respect. Dirt won't do it.

Mr. Skouras also brings an indictment against unclean pictures, and Mr. Skouras ought to know, for he operates several hundred theatres and he knows the effect that unclean pictures have on his box office receipts, but in spite of what Mr. Skouras says, in spite of what Mr. Hearst says, in spite of what the public says, and in spite of what thousands of exhibitors say, dirt and vulgarity will continue to creep into pictures so long as there is an element in Hollywood who are dirt-minded. The specter of censorship has hung over the industry ever since Theda Bara started playing vampire roles, and whose fault is it? Certainly not the public's.

If "too many happy marriages" and "too many babies" and "too few love scandals" are the anchors that are holding this business back, then may God help the industry, but we are not one who believes that the industry has sunk to such a level. There are too many excellent people connected with the production end to admit of such a belief, but there are also too many in authority who have not yet subscribed to the "morality code."

We have tried to preach the gospel of clean entertainment so long that it is becoming tiresome, but when the clamor for decency has been dinged into our ears by thousands of exhibitors day after day, week after week and year after year, it is pretty hard to keep away from it.

We are in receipt of a letter from Harry E. Schiller advising us that he has taken over the management of the Granada theatre at Norfolk, Nebraska. This theatre has been under management and control of Publix.

Mr. Schiller has two theatres in Grand Island, Nebraska, which are being managed by Mrs. Schiller while Harry gives his personal attention to the Granada at Norfolk. We are expecting that under the able direction of Mr. Schiller the Granada will be put upon a paying basis, a condition that has been absent from the Granada ever since it has been under Publix control.

Art Brisbane says that Prof. C. Judson Herrick, a doctor of science of the University of Chicago, says that if you will write the figure 1 and follow it by fifteen million zeros it wouldn't represent the number of telephone lines connecting the cells in a man's brain. Gee whiz, that's some telephone system. It must take a lotta "Hello girls" to handle that system.

We've got our opinion of a man who, when you get set to drive off the tee, will say, "Now be careful and don't hook it into the cornfield or slice it into the river." That guy ought to be shot at sunrise, or before, preferably before.

In the June 24 issue of the HERALD Mr. Ramsaye says that the Galton Society, in evaluating the percentage of illiteracy of the various states, gives Washington first place with a percentage of 9.03. California 8.92. New York 3.51 and he says "Connecticut, wherein reside so many of the Motion Picture Herald staff, is away up in fifth position with a rating of 7.53." Yeah, but why leave out Nebraska? Out here, "where the frost is on the pumpkin and the fodder is in the shock," our rating is nothing minus. Guess that'll hold 'em.

THREE CORNERED MOON

Paramount-Schulberg

A hectic up-to-date modern comedy, which carries a keen romantic twist. The story revolves around the Rimplegars, a crazy composite of a modern American family living in Flatbush. Produced by B. P. Schulberg, the picture is based on the play of the same title by Gertrude Tonkonogy, which enjoyed considerable New York success. Supposed to be a broad chronology of the author's own family life, the scenarists, S. K. Lauren and Ray Harris, have taken liberal license in developing its comedy aspects for the screen. Photography is by Leon Shamray, direction by Elliott Nugent.

Save for the daughter (Claudette Colbert), the Rimplegar family is modernly screwy and more or less worthless. One wants to be an actor, another a writer, the third an artist. The mother (Mary Boland) inherits a wad of dough, stock markets it and goes broke. She dolls up in swell clothes to break the news to her fledglings and much fun ensues, as, forced by circumstances, they are compelled to make good on their ambitions.

The script calls for plenty of color and lots of excitement, with plenty of opportunity for the entire cast to turn in an audience-intriguing performance. Claudette Colbert, Richard Arlen and Mary Boland, who is rapidly becoming popular, are featured. Others in the cast are Wallace Ford, Lyda Roberti, Tom Brown, Joan Marsh, Hardie Albright, William Bakewell, Sam Hardy and Clara Blandick. The dialogue is clever, and while the show builds up in series form, it is not episodic.

THIS DAY AND AGE

Paramount-Cecil B. DeMille

A powerful drama, involving present day conditions that seems destined to be one of the year's most talked about pictures. A Cecil B. DeMille production, it departs radically from his glamorous technique, but introduces a new note in mass-mob spectacle. The story is by Bartlett Cormack, remembered as the author of "The Racket," and is done in the same imagination-drawing style. It involves the gangster-politician alliance, court workings, newspaper crusading, popular hysteria, and the effects all have on the younger generation.

A group of high school kids see a man killed. Brought into court as witnesses, they are amazed to see the murderer go free. Deciding to take the law into their own hands, they round up the gangster boss and his gorillas, hold a kangaroo court and mete out justice in their own way.

The cast is extensive. Charles Bickford is the gangster. Richard Cromwell is the boy leader of the kids. Other names are Judith Allen, Harry Green (his first appearance in a Hollywood production in quite a while), Eddie Nugent, Ben Alexander, Louise Carter, George Barbier, Charles Middleton, Warner Richmond, Fuzzy Knight, Arthur Vinton and Billy Gilbert. In connection with this show, it might be interesting to note that Bickford is returning to the DeMille banner under which he scored his first big hit in "Dynamite."

Production values, majoring in excitement creation that threatens continuously to burst beyond control, should be of particular importance in driving home the punch.

THE WAY TO LOVE

Paramount-Glazer

With Maurice Chevalier and Sylvia Sidney in the leads, "The Way to Love" is a dramatic romance that has a distinctly "Seventh Heaven" atmosphere. The story and screen play are by Benjamin Glazer, who did the screen play on "Seventh Heaven," and Gene Fowler. It is being directed by Norman Taurog, who made "Skippy" as well as the last Chevalier picture, "A Bedtime Story." Although Chevalier sings only a few songs, principal of which is the "Laughing Song," by means of which he tries to make the sad-faced girl smile, music by Ralph Rainger and Walter Donaldson and lyrics by Leo Robin and Gus Kahn are effective in the scoring and swing of the show.

Localed in Paris, Chevalier is a soft-hearted, good-natured jack of all trades who'll tackle any kind of job, even to patching up tangled romances. Chiefly he wants to be a tourist battlefield guide, but he is willing to do anything his boss, Horton, orders him to do. Happy-go-lucky, he comes across a street carnival, where Sylvia Sidney is the abused target for a ruthless knife-thrower. Trying to cheer her up, they fall in love and elope to the roof tops of Paris. A little dog, the same one as used in "Peg o' My Heart," is brought into the story as Chevalier's aid in making Sydney happy.

Down to the earth human interest prevails all the way, and although there is a certain somberness, it is more than offset by the romantic development of the theme. The supporting cast includes Edward Everett Horton, Arthur Pierson, Minna Gombell, Blanche Friderici, Nydia Westman, George Rigas, Douglas Dumbrille, Sidney Toler and Arthur Housman.

THE DEATH WATCH

Radio

A creepy mystery story, premised on an occult medium-police detective angle, which combines an interesting love story, copious comedy and plenty of the eerie stuff that goes toward making a good old-fashioned melodrama. Authored by Edgar Wallace, adapted by Garrett Fort and directed by Irving Pichel, the script calls for tense situations, with dialogue held to a minimum.

Stuart Erwin and Dorothy Wilson have the lead roles and Warner Oland and Dudley Digges are in the principal supporting parts. All have roles aptly suited to the screen characters. Comedy centers around Erwin, the other three providing the predominant melodrama.

Erwin, a detective, is cleaning up quacks. Pinching Dorothy Wilson, a clairvoyant, he sells his chief the idea of using her in detective work. Numerous thrillers follow until the story settles down in a cobwebby old house. Wilson's father, Digges, an avaricious character, is killed trying to grab the gold horde, by Oland, a nutty scientist. Erwin and Wilson enter for more squeamy stuff, which climaxes with Oland luring the girl to a death trap as Erwin stands helplessly and comically by. Then the thrill cleanup.

Timeliness and popularity of the theme being acknowledged, production values will do much to increase the punch and power of the show.

New Orleans Independents Organize for Policy Shifts

An informal meeting of New Orleans exhibitors recently attempted to organize independent theatres with a view to bringing about a change in the Sunday opening hour, an increase in the admission for children and definite action on the allotting of prizes.

Hope is held out for an agreement between Independent and United Theatres interests, the new group undertaking the problem which failed of solution last year in negotiations between Allied and United. Theatres participating in the movement are Imperial, Cortez, Casino, Avenue, Gentilly, Gaiety, Laurel, Famous and Happy Hour.

Sales Promotion Firm To Serve Independents Only

The Braumeister Company, New York advertising firm, specializing in sales promotion, has entered the motion picture field with the intention of serving independents. The company plans the production of pressbooks, trade paper advertising and publicity, novelty accessories and the like.

Headquarters of the company is at 35 West 45th street, the Pathe Building. Jack Kyle and Jack Level, both formerly with Pathe, are president and vice president, respectively, while Guy Fowler, formerly with Fox, is in charge of trade copy and press books. Frank Ayres and James Boyle, also once with Pathe, are among the artists.

Court Holds Theatre Is "Accountable" for Injury

The Nebraska supreme court, in a recent decision, ruled that theatres and other amusement places are "more strictly accountable" for injuries to patrons than owners of private property. The case which brought forth the ruling was that of Amanda Emery against the Midwest Amusement Company, owner of a Scottbluff, Neb., theatre.

Torrence Left $10,000

Ernest Torrence, veteran screen actor who died recently left an estate of less than $10,000 in personal property. The will, in the real name of the actor, Ernest Torrence Tomason, left the entire estate to his widow, Elise Reamer Torrence.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THAT CODE

Nope, we're not going to write one. Plenty already written and more coming. A Round Tabler last week wanted to know how the expected motion picture code would affect the manager. He thought it a good idea for your chairman to submit a manual of business practice for the exhibitor and manager.

We refused. Why? Because real showmen managers and smart exhibitor business men need each other too much—the others won't last. You don't need rules for a manager who is at the theatre early and late because he prefers to be there and not because he must be there. You can't state in so many words that a manager has to do this and is not compelled to do that—not so long as you have theatre men who are seeking new "thisses" and "thats" to conquer.

Of what use is such a code to the exhibitor who realizes the concrete value of a real showman; who gives his manager the same regard and consideration as the most cherished dividend-paying possession.

No, we won't submit a code. But we'll tell a story. It really happened. Listen:

Not so long ago in a certain Kansas town, a well-kept, well-run movie was returning a comfortable profit (and no doubt still is) to a showman who worked hard to keep it so. The exhibitor in a neighboring town, a conscientious newspaper reader and professional "viewer-with-alarm," dropped over for a bit of a chat just slopping over with bad news and foreboding.

Spreading himself over the busy desk of the local manager, the visiting brother went into his monologue:

"Boy, business is sure shot to the dogs. Did you see today's paper? Starving miners won't settle strike. Farmers can't give away wheat. Washington can't collect debts. Millions unemployed. What's gonna happen?"

"I don't know," returned the busy manager. "To tell the truth, I'm so on the go all day running this theatre that I haven't had a chance in weeks to read a newspaper."

IT WORKED BEFORE

Film salesmen can help managers put over pictures. It has been done and no doubt it still is being accomplished by many road men out of the branch offices.

Years ago, in Portland, Ore., with the assistance of Harry Hunter, now Washington Paramount branch manager, we planned and put over a series of meetings wherein we gathered with small-town exhibitors and managers at centrally located points throughout the territory for a day's discussion and exploitation of the new season's product.

These meetings proved of definite exhibitor value to such an extent that all Paramount salesmen out of that office began to carry, for manager information, ads, tear sheets and photos of successful campaigns put over by other exhibitors in that territory. Some of this advertising was supplied by the exploitation department, but quite a bit was collected locally by the salesmen.

A similar service can be rendered today, even though it takes most of a salesman's time and effort to arrange satisfactory film rentals. But we know that in many cases the road man who really wants to render this extra service can find time for it. Practical aid of this sort builds up valuable good will, and is also an argument in favor of acceptable rentals.

SWAPPING MANAGERS

A New York circuit initiates a novel plan, which if nothing else, makes an interesting experiment. For a period of two weeks, the manager of each theatre has been transferred to another house of the circuit, the thought behind the idea being in new surroundings and a different environment the weary manager will be aided in avoiding the ever-menacing rut that is supposed to soften up showmanly initiative.

Well, it sounds refreshing, and we are curious to know what benefits accrue from this new plan. Ball players are known to take on new life when traded to another club, and it may be that this similar deal will result in a floodtide of box office showmanship and rising salaries.

If it solves the problem of what to do with the manager who for one reason or another isn't clicking as well as he might—it has the makings of a grand idea.

WHAT'S SHOWMANSHIP?

W. P. Grossman manages the Circle, in Nevada, Iowa, a smart little theatre, judging from the picture he sends us which is reproduced on page 94 of this issue. This showman had booked in an air picture for a Sunday showing and discovered that he was having opposition that day in the form of a travelling 10-cent tent show.

So Bill chewed his nails a bit and did some tall thinking. He remembered a dismantled abandoned plane rotting away in a nearby vacant lot, and promoting the air wagon for a few passes, patched it up and created a front that not only brought in plenty of extra admissions, but just about ruined the tent opposition.

That's showmanship!

Pace Grows Hotter and Hotter As Managers Race in Last Half July Contest for World's Fair Prizes

Two Weeks and Three Days Remain In Feature Drive for United States and Canadian Showmen; Week's All-Expense Awards to Chicago and Century of Progress Exposition for Highlight July Exploitation Sponsored by Managers Round Table Bring OKays from Theatre Men and Film Executives

By A-MIKE VOGEL

What's that smoke? No, 'taint smoke, boy, it's a cloud of dust, yes sir, and what a cloud—kicked up by the flying heels of those going managers in that continent-wide July drive that leads to that She-cah-go and how they do-go in that steppin' burg on Lake Michigan.

Just about half of the thirty-one important July days have "came and went"—two weeks and three days, plenty of hours, are still left and many a sock campaign is on the fire preparing to be whammed over in that Round Table exploitation contest that will send seven managers to the Fair at the expense of seven film companies.

Step up, folks, and see the big shows! "Street of Paris," where you can join the "art" classes and sketch from living models (oh yeah!). Have you ever really seen sound pictures made on a real set? "Hollywood" will show you. Autos assembled before your very eyes, and a host of inviting brew and food spots to rest your dogs when you get tired of sightseeing.

The above are just a few of the attractions at the Fair, and when you want other diversion, remember your trip includes big league ballgames, golf, swimming, nightclubs, and a host of other entertainments Chicago is noted for. Without, we repeat, any expense to you.

REMEMBER THIS—

Campaigns on subsequent runs will receive equal consideration with the first runs and world premieres. You don't have to be a managing director to win one of the prizes. So sock right in and do your stuff. We specialize in plain managers and home cooking.

MAMMY!

But you'll have to work for it as there is keen competition from managers from coast to coast, from way up in Canada to way down in Texas. Campaigns are coming in. If you've sent one in, don't stop. If you haven't, then get busy—you still have plenty of time.

Getting away from the rest and pleasure angle, do you realize the winners will add to their own value and worth in the eyes of superiors and brother showmen. Stands to reason, doesn't it, that a manager good enough to land one of the prizes against nation-wide competition is going to be regarded highly for his ability. Don't lose sight of what that means to you and your future.

Expressions from executives of other film donor companies indicate that this thought has been considered by thinking showmen.

Gabe Yorke, advertising, manager, Fox Films, has this to say:

"The fullest value to the exhibitor of an individual showing of any feature picture depends to an extent on the theatre manager and what he does through his showmanship to extract every possible dime of revenue at his box office.

"Especially so in the summer months, and therefore the Round Table exploitation contest is to be commended for the opportunity it gives the manager to be rewarded for his work in what is assumed to be a dull month.

"Fox pictures for July availability are gauged to assist in making this month a more profitable one. "Life In The Raw" with George O'Brien and Claire Trevor; "The Man Who Dared" with Zita Johann and Preston Foster; "Devil's In Love with Victor Jory and Loretta Young; "F P 1" with Conrad Veidt and Leslie Fenton, and "Shanghai Madness" with Spencer Tracy and Claire Trevor are features that we feel will aid that bolstering box office."

Bob Sisk, genial Radio ad chief, gives us a little inside on what RKO Radio pictures are wide open for the contest.

"Live-wire showmen need no contest to lead them into exploitation action BUT further incentive never deterred any action and genius is deserving of reward—at least in this contest. And this sporting, timely contest is just the stimulation to pep up the box-office, and call attention to the ability of the manager.

"RKO Radio Pictures is glad to be in on something that ought to lure business during the hot month of July. We join in, happy in the thought that it can contribute some summer releases that will afford enterprising showmen something to work on.

"Take 'Melody Cruise' the novelty musical with girls, tunes and Charlie Ruggles—a girl-show is always good but in summer it's a natural. 'Double Harness' is doubly geared with Ann Harding and William Powell. You've exploited both of these stars alone. Now let's see what you can do with them both in the same show.

" 'Bed of Roses,' a Constance Bennett vehicle, quite different from Connie's usual society stuff. It's a new type of show. Ingenuity is going to show itself in selling this one. 'Professional Sweetheart' is a sweetie for stunts. With Ginger Rogers topping the talent list and an inside story on radio broadcasting studios it ought to bring forth some big time exploitation. 'Tomorrow at Seven,' a murder mystery that brings the jig-saw into a strange solution, and 'The Big Brain' that gives George E. Stone that Starring spot he's deserved for so long, and Richard Dix's latest 'No Marriage Ties.'

"I just took in the World's Fair in Chicago and believe me, showmen, the Round Table selected the ace prize of the year for this contest."

Mike Simmons, who put words and pictures on paper and billboards for Ray Johnson's Monogram crew, shoots us a word from Hollywood.

"Monogram is with you. We endorse with great enthusiasm the Round Table contest. Now if ever is the logical time for a real exploitation drive, the results of which will send seven fortunate managers to the World's Fair.

"Available for July playing dates, we offer the following pictures: 'Return of Casey Jones,' with Chas. Starrett, Ruth Hall and Jackie Searl; 'The Sphinx,' with Lionel Atwill and Sheila Terry; 'Black Beauty,' with Esther Ralston and Alexander Kirkland, and 'Phantom Broadcast,' with Ralph Forbes and Vivienne Osborne."

Now you've absorbed all the dope, you know the rules, so settle right back into the harness and for the next seventeen days, eat and sleep World's Fair. We'll see you there.

AND THIS—

If you are putting on a stunt that will run into the playing time of more than one picture, you may send it in as the campaign or part of a campaign on any one individual picture. We have had more than one request for a decision on this question, so we assume that many big ideas are being projected. Smart thinking!

Managers Say—

Anna Bell Ward
Strand, Lexington, Ky.

"It is very pleasing to know that the contest committee has thrown the competition open to every manager—which of course includes the girls. I don't know how many of us will be in the fight, but in their behalf, I will promise a real battle."

Louis Charninsky
Capitol, Dallas, Texas

"Just a word from my new assignment. Depend upon me for every effort to be there when the band starts playing. Gangway for the 'Lone Star showmen'."

Ben Cohen
State, Manchester, Conn.

"A very good idea and solves the vacation problem for me—I hope. Congratulations to the Round Table Club for putting over this timely contest for the manager."

Bunny Bryan
Belmont Theatre, Chicago

"From one already on the ground, I can promise the winners they will have a marvelous week at the Fair. But if I win, I understand that I will not go unrewarded although I am a Chicagoan. Yes?
(Ed.: Yes, Bunny. Go to it. If you hit, you won't lose a thing.)

Monty MacLevy
Savoy, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Let me say that all Randforce managers are in this contest up to the last second. The prizes are corkers and I look forward to some tall battling between live managers who are competing. Best of luck."

AND ALSO THIS—

Don't worry about the smallness of your advertising appropriation for your prize campaigns. Just use the old beano in spending your bucks, many or few, and leave the budget headaches to Roosevelt. From what we hear, many managers are spending little more than their time in putting over their contest entries. Worry over how your stuff stands up—not what it costs!

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Well, boys, here's one we're not even going to caption for you. Just hope you get the kick out of it that we did.

RAILROAD ENDORSES COPPOCK EXCURSION RATES FOR PATRONS

Regular bi-weekly theatre excursion specials that tap 74 communities, is the masterstroke of exploitation recently arranged by Manager Sedge Coppock, Paramount Theatre, Stapleton, Staten Island.

For months Sedge has been working with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Baltimore and Ohio to designate their trains leaving the southern end of the island at 1:17 P. M., and 7:17 P. M. on Mondays and Thursdays as theatre specials.

In the past, patrons living in communities served by the road have had to pay a lot of fare to go to the movies which, of course, cut down their attendance frequency. But now the road has made a 50% round trip train fare reduction on the specials and the increase in travel has encouraged the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade to arrange for merchants' sales on these days, the railroad extending the return time to allow for shopping.

Sedge had a tough battle to get the concession, but won by hammering on the point that as the road was running these trains on a regular schedule and that the times designated were off travel periods, the added income would be obtained without any cost to the rail people.

In addition, Coppock has been able to plant posters in every station, when the ad agencies have been turned down regularly on platform concessions. Also, the railroad is distributing excursion handbills and paying for newspaper space to spread the word without cost to the theatre. In return, Sedge runs a credit one frame trailer and uses a lobby card with similar copy.

Coppock says the deal was started at a Kiwanis lunch and put over by a little socializing with some of the R. R. execs. That's a good point to keep in mind, as the right amount of mixing evidently has its rewards.

All in all, it was a splendidly conceived and flawlessly executed campaign and is bound to help the theatre and create all kinds of good will among cooperating merchants. It is the finest kind of showmanship and Sedge Coppock is entitled to a deep bow for his good work.

CAGED LIONS GAVE DENVER AUDIENCES FREE STREET SHOW

That ace purveyor of Denver showmanship, Louis Hellborn, manager of the Denham Theatre, achieved another personal triumph recently by his handling of "The Big Cage," in which his ace feature was the appearance of a cage of African lions and other wild game in front of a local newspaper office.

Captain Hart, veteran animal trainer, put the beasts through their paces before a fast swelling crowd of thousands. The performance received plenty of word-of-mouth publicity, and was then repeated in front of the theatre for the evening show.

The local newspaper sponsored the matinee stunt, and gave it plenty of advance and current publicity in its columns, all of which tended to swell box-office receipts during the run of the picture.

A huge jigsaw puzzle, planted in the window of a local store, attracted a lot of attention, particularly so since the general public was invited to step into the window and try to put it together in an hour. Another effective tie-up was obtained on the various book stores through the medium of the volume written by Captain Beatty, around whom "The Big Cage" was filmed. We'd like to have some more of Hellborn's work to pass along to the Club, as we are sure his fellow showmen will find it interesting. How about it, Louis?

VARIOUS CAMPAIGNS ON "GABRIEL" CLICK FROM EAST TO WEST

Frank Steffy, Mgr.
Don Alexander, Publicity
State Theatre
Minneapolis, Minn.

Front page box announcing newspaper tieup. Paper took pictures on street, blew these up to four col. jig cut. Those who identified themselves after putting jig together received passes. Governor Olson was given personal invitation to attend opening night with party and letters sent to prominent political leaders. 30-24 sheets spotted, unusual, as this type of posting not used lately.

Edward Hussong, Mgr.
San Mateo Theatre
San Mateo, Cal.

Newspaper sponsored preview and ran endorsements and review in advance. On opening day, San Francisco papers distributed in San Mateo carried broadside inserts on picture, reverse side containing ads, which paid for cost of special printing.

Department stores ran endorsements in ads; Karen Morley "Eyes" contest put over with local paper—eyes of six prominent woman stars including Morley's and readers asked to identify. Boy Scout special showing, also, one for Italian Society were other helpful angles.

Edward J. Melnicker, Mgr.
Loew's Rochester
Rochester, N. Y.

Presidents of the U. S. identification contest with one paper which gave theatre six 18-inch ads free for five days. Another paper ran "What Would You Do If You Were President " contest to good returns. One hundred special neon signs planted in standout windows. Inserts were placed in 5,000 magazines and 3,000 department store packages. Book stores all used windows.

Direct broadcast from theatre stage included sound effects from regular picture trailer which occasioned city wide comment. Melniker will use this on future pictures.

Ralph Allen, Mgr.
Fox Senator Theatre
Sacramento, Cal.

This city is capitol of California, and legislature was in session, so Governor Rolph, state officials, members of assembly and senate were invited to special screening by Secretary of State before elective body. Newspaper sponsored preview, using paper stationery, and invites were signed by publisher and editor.

Day before opening,, truckload of boxes labeled "Dynamite" was used as bally. Rest of banner read "Dramatic Dynamite When Gabriel Opens at Fox Senator." Veteran fife and drum corps paraded with truck.

Children at Saturday morning show were told Dickie Moore was in picture, and on last day of showing college band made stage appearance.

These four campaigns on "Gabriel" cover every possible box office angle, resulting in satisfactory grosses in the four theatres. The similarity of the preview handling shows well-knit teamwork between managers.

FRANKLIN PROMOTES LITTLE WORLD'S FAIR IN THEATRE LOBBY

A mammoth industrial exposition in the Cleveland RKO Palace lobby sponsored and put over by J. J. Franklin, divisional manager, endorsed by Governor White, Mayor Miller, Chamber of Commerce and other business bureaus is reported by Al Gregg, publicity chief of RKO Palace, who worked with Franklin on the campaign.

J. J. wanted something novel for his tremendous lobby and hit upon the exposition idea with this twist, that exhibit space would be sold in the same manner of any similar show. In addition, merchants and manufacturers were required to purchase a certain amount of regular admission tickets which guaranteed a month's business for the theatre.

Space sold from a map went quickly, and J. J. printed 500,000 lucky number tickets for prize drawings the last week of the expo. The prizes were, among others, foodstuffs, boat trips, watches, clothing, electrical appliances, theatre passes, pony, saddle and bridle.

The exhibits represented everything from beer dispensing equipment to flowers, and included beauty shops, jewelers, newspapers, telephones, band instruments, antiques, diving equipment, radio station remote control hook-up and articles of equal interest.

Publicity was handled over the city desk as straight news, and according to Gregg, more stuff was landed than the theatre has received on any idea in recent years. Exhibitors were more than satisfied with results, one reporting trebling his business.

Theatre business skyrocketed for the month of the expo., exceeding by a big margin receipts of previous individual months, and J. J. has gained for the Palace an increased prestige that money could not buy.

Evidently the little world's fair idea is catching on. Smart managers are realizing the sales possibilities of lobby space and are having little difficulty in promoting outside cooperation.

That such keen showmen as Morris Kinzler of the New York Roxy and J. J. Franklin have made this stunt more than pay in the hot weather is sufficient tipoff to other new idea hunters.

Whether or not merchants will pay for lobby space in the smaller cities, they should be made to go for a certain number of admissions, thus insuring a guaranteed box office return.

LEVEE PROMOTED

William A. (Bill) Levee, formerly at the Northport Theatre in Northport, L. I., has been promoted to the Capitol Theatre in Riverhead, L. I. Go to it, Bill, you can't keep a good man down and you know we're rootin' for yuh.

ATTENTION

Drop everything now and turn to the Sound Chart, page 25, with explanatory notes on page 24, July 1 issue of Better Theatres, which is edited by our perspicacious colleague, George Schutz.

Probably many of you are already acquainted with this chart. Those who are not, should be. It was drawn up expressly for managers, and not only is a handy source of immediate information, but will prove a great help to many managers and house personnel in detecting flaws in sound and appreciating their significance. If you missed the Sound Chart, or intended to give it further study and then forgot about it, look it up now—and keep it handy. With this chart even your ushers can help keep proper check on sound conditions.

SMART SHOWMANSHIP WITH COSTLESS GAG LICKS OPPOSITION

Good showmen do not welcome opposition, but they certainly fight hard when such appears. W. P. Grossman, manager, Circle Theatre, Nevada, Iowa, had a Sunday ten cent tent show to battle, and utilized a wrecked plane on "Central Airport," which he reports got plenty extra business.

The ship had been lying dismantled on a vacant lot for some time, and for a few passes, Grossman was permitted to assemble and plant it in front of the theatre as shown above. That's Bill under the ship, and Howard Mills, assistant, who did the lettering, is the gent in the white pants.

GENE'S "KING KONG" CREATED PLENTY OF BUSINESS FOR HIM

We've had plenty in this Department on "King Kong," but it took Gene Stutenroth of the Holme Theatre in Holmsburg, Pa., to put over the piece de resistance.

He constructed a 30-foot ape on frame and compo board, the shot where Kong is standing with an airplane in one hand and a girl in the other. This giant cutout was placed in the foyer. An exploitation record from the picture with roars of the giant gorilla and screams of the girl was used at the break. The real girl who was placed in Kong's palm went through all the motions of a struggle, while the record emitted her shrieks.

At various times the girl dropped down programs to the men and, being very attractive (Gene would pick a good looker), few of the boys passed her up.

We understand Gene did business, so we'll have to hand it to him for putting it over.

THE GUEST EDITORIALS

COMMUNITY SPIRIT

by PETE EGAN

Manager Palace Theatre, Calgary, Canada

A FEW days ago I drove through two Alberta towns. One was larger than the other, it is true, but nonetheless, one would be blind, deaf and dumb, and totally paralyzed not to notice the difference between these two unnamed places.

In one there were very few trees—many unpainted houses—few signs of energetic action on the part of the people to make their town attractive. In the other well planned streets were lined with trees, the lawns were green and abundant, the business section was very much alive, and everywhere were many evidences that this town was on the map. What is the cause of all this? I feel that I am safe in saying that 75% of the explanation lies in this—a proper community spirit.

A proper community spirit can transform a village into a town that is talked about—a town into a city, and it can and does keep a city before the eyes of the public. The lack of it can ruin the best place on earth. Now if this thing we call a proper community spirit is so valuable it would be well for us to consider for a little just what it is. Can you buy this spirit in the market of the world? Are you able to import it from other countries? Can you erect an institution in which this strong spirit may be distilled for public use? This necessary factor in a community's life is neither bought nor sold, for it costs nothing, and yet it is one of the most valuable of all the assets of any place.

It is as contagious as measles, and yet the health department of every city lives in hope that it will always be at the epidemic stage.

It is given freely by the right-minded people of the place and withheld sometimes as though it cost the world's wealth to give it. The name of its mother is co-operation. Let a city develop the factional spirit—the spirit of distrust and jealousy—the knocking attitude and the false methods of the gang, and that city is really on the fair way to ruin.

Now a theatre is one of the institutions of a town or city. We are in the business of exchange just as a bank, or a mercantile establishment, or a firm of brokers is in business. We are selling entertainment on the same basis as a merchant sells shoes—cost plus a reasonable margin of profit. There are elements which enter into our work which are different and which are unique, but the bedrock principle is the same. Hence, a theatre will suffer from the lack of community spirit on the same proportion as all business will suffer, and likewise it will benefit from a proper community spirit.

I mean by that, simply, that in a place where this spirit is properly developed there will be a wholesome enthusiasm for our programmers. There will be more than that. Where there is a proper community spirit the patrons of the theatre will give the management the advantage of constructive citicism. Where this spirit is lacking the criticism will be made to the detriment of the theatre.

Again, when a community project is on the theatre can help greatly by extending the courtesy of five minutes' time to a selected speaker on the enterprise (by this I mean matters like the Red Cross, etc.). Just here, of course, care must be exercised in case someone may take advantage of this to occupy more time than the patrons will stand for. However, I believe, used with discrimination this spirit of service to the community invariably tends to make friends for the theatre.

In connection with the occasional free entertainment—there are some things which we can do which will help to develop a proper community spirit. In most cities there is a crippled kiddies' hospital. Several of the little people are always at a stage in their treatment where they can be brought to a show, and any service club in the city or town is always willing to provide transportation to and from the theatre.

After all the problem of community life is one of the basic problems of all life. The problem is that of learning to live together. The liquid air professor told us the other day in Calgary that even molecules get together when the temperature goes down. So in the presence of all the pressing needs of life with prejudice towards none we need to learn to get together. And the true basis of this is friendship that overlaps all barriers of race, creed, politics and natural prejudice.

Then we are told that he who would have friends must show himself friendly. If a theatre shows itself friendly it will certainly have friends, too. And our business, like every other business, needs to live in the midst of such a spirit.

BABY LEROY OKAYS MOST POPULAR BABY

"A BEDTIME STORY"

Paramount Theatre
Rutland, Vermont

HARRY BOTWICK, Manager

Second annual baby popularity contest, which ran five weeks and one day, entries from one to five years of age. Contestants judged by photos supplied by theatre, furnished by photographer in return for publicity and accruing extra business which proved very satisfactory. One 8x10 print of each baby given free to theatre and these placed in lobby, numbered. Winners decided on votes.

Votes given out free of charge by ten merchants who supplied prizes and came in on two co-op pages, one at beginning of contest, other at finish; during contest ran special baby sales and window displays.

Entry blanks in triplicate, obtained at theatre. One blank for contestant, one for photographer, one for theatre. Every entry numbered to facilitate check on photos and eliminate dead beats.

Votes at ten stores given adults only which brought buyers to these stores often and helped business. Ballot box in theatre lobby and pictures on lobby easels brought many to theatre. No names on photos, only numbers, thus avoiding any hints of favoritism and negative comment.

Botwick got break by playing "Bedtime Story" during contest, and having Baby LeRoy wire congrats. to first entry. Harry also had LeRoy send prize and got picture of this infant mailing prize from studio, which all papers ran.

Milk bottle tops plugged contest; milk dealer also took full page ad. After contest, parents were given lobby baby photos free. Two hundred and twelve babies were entered in 12 days, then entries were shut down.

Although voting contests are usually charged with dynamite, Harry put this one over big. He was smart enough not to tie in the votes to admissions, thus creating good-will and keeping clear of government restrictions on lotteries. That this is the second annual contest of its kind shows that it meant plenty to the theatre, as interest was kept high for five weeks, and a full house assured when the prizes were announced from the stage.

SUN RAY CLUB GETS "SAMARANG" ADVANCE BREAKS IN PAPERS

Monroe Greenthal, U. A. exploitation dynamo, sure put on an oldtime honey in advance of the New York Rivoli opening of "Samarang," by organizing a good health "Samarang Club," the slogan of which is: "Permit Us to Strip to the Waist."

The gag was planted at a nearby ocean resort where there is a law against males bathing without shirts. One of the "club" members, as a test case, had himself arrested and all the papers went for the trial, mentioning the name of the club.

The erring brother received a suspended sentence, which was a signal for the "club secretary" to send out mimeographs on special letterheads to all city editors protesting against the antiquated ordinance that prevented male bathers from benefiting themselves of the sun's rays.

To enlist popular opinion in behalf of the movement, five members in good standing allowed themselves to be photographed on the beach (see above) displaying a banner plugging the "club" purpose. The "Samarang" opened a few days later in time for a healthy box office reaction.

We don't see Monroe in the photo, which leaves us to believe either his body is brown enough, or that he was hiding under the boardwalk thinking up a new nifty.

SORIERO PROMOTES ARIZONA-TO-MAINE FREE SUMMER TRIPS

A free eight week Maine camp vacation for the most popular boy and girl is Tom Soriero's bright contest idea to stimulate summer business at the Fox theatres, Tucson, Arizona.

Tom was able to dig up a local resident who pays all expenses of both trips, so in this case the money obstacle is well taken care of. The winners, chosen by vote, will fly to New York and join the camp parties there.

Managers who would like to put over some variation of this idea may still have time to work it by running a contest during July for a prize of an August vacation. You may be able to make satisfactory arrangements with nearby boys or girls camps, and for this purpose, you should be able to obtain a list of these camps from your state recreation or publicity bureau.

But we're writing Tom to send us all the details as soon as the contest is over so we can tell you more about it.

They are bringing greeting scrolls printed on thin rolled copper "From Tucson in Arizona, the Copper State," signed by the Mayor, Charley Skouras, West Coast head, Tom himself, and John P. H. Chandler, donor of the prizes.

It sure is a nifty, Thomas, and is receiving praise from all who see it.

One We'd Plug!

Whether or not managers should plug shorts in newspaper ads is a question to be settled according to the picture appetites of each locality. But for sheer excitement, that Paramount short, "The Aggravatin' Bear" kept us on the edge of our seat, and caused the old pulse to beat faster. We caught it at a neighboring Loew theatre, and it sure had the audience buzzin'. They went out talking about it, and that's your answer. A bow to Jack Eaton and Grantland Rice, who are responsible for this swell entertainment.

DANZIGER PUTS ON HOLLYWOOD OPENING FOR WORLD PREMIERE

Bill Danziger's descent on Cincinnati to engineer with ad chief Evy Dinerman the highly successful world's premiere of "College Humor" at the RKO Palace was in the nature of a home coming, as Bill press-agented in those parts long enough to call the Mayor by his first name.

John Flinn, Para exploitation chief, evidently so figured in assigning Danziger to handle the opening, for the premiere was the talk of Cincy for days resulting in a mop up holdover for the picture.

It was a Hollywood opening "for real," with reserved seats, 5,000 watt search lights, fife and drum corps, fireworks, radio broadcasts, balloons and what not. The advance campaign included girls in "College Humor" slickers on the streets, special electric sign and 50-foot banner on prominent hotel marquee, collegiate caps and ribbons on all house employees, special printed aprons on ball park vendors and newsboys and announcements in 600 street cars and busses.

Newspaper breaks covered a "College Humor" limerick contest in one sheet, a full page promotional spread in another, a six-column strip in a third showing stars posing new dance steps, and a flock of art and stories that landed for days in advance.

Orchestras in all hotels and dance halls plugged the hit numbers and radio stations announced the premier, newsstands were covered with posters, and 30 downtown cafes served "Humor" luncheons.

There's a lot more, but the above will give you a fair idea of what Bill and Evy consider the high spots of putting over a premier. It's right in line with the picture's openings in various spots where other high powered Paramounteers have been working with theatre ad men. Flinn has gathered a great gang of buckaroos under his banner, and it looks as though the old exploitations days are back again.

GIANT JIGS PANIC ON "VACATION" FOR HOWARD PETTINGILL

When a puzzle company spends over $100 to make up two special jig saws for theatre exploitation, it passes beyond the stunt phase and enters the realm of pure showmanship. So please take a bow, Howard Pettingill, manager Warner Theatre, Lynn, Mass., especially since you report that the idea was a distinct box office help to "King's Vacation."

Two regular Arliss production stills were blown up to the giant size of 3½x5 feet, glued on wood, colored and the back covered with a felt base, then each cut up into 5,609 pieces. The largest store in Lynn sponsored the campaign by placing the puzzles in its windows and invited the public to put the jigs together.

Newspapers ran special entry coupons besides lots of swell stories, and the puzzlers took part in an elimination contest, the winners of which were turned loose in the store window for the finals. The ultimate winner took 155 hours, the time being recorded on a special clock which finalists punched in and out during the period of the contest.

We wonder, Howard, if George Arliss is taking the summer off to work one of the actual puzzles that you sent him as a souvenir.

MERRILY—WE ROLL ALONG

VINCENT F. EDICK
has the O. K. of his manager in joining the Club, and from the nice things we hear about him we can expect great doings out at the Highland Theatre, in Utica, N. Y. Come on, Vince, get going and send in your campaigns and we'll do the rest.

manages the Teatro Cuba, in Santiago, Cuba, and judging by the number of members we have in Cuba, they certainly are a hustling, showmanlike bunch of boys. The interest the boys in the states display in their brother showman's activities in far-off places convinces us that your doings would be more than welcome in our pages. What say, Julio, will we be hearing from you?

is up in West Lynn, Mass., where he manages the Uptown Theatre. We're mighty proud of our membership in Mass., and the brand of showmen that have come from up there, so you're another to swell the ranks and we're expecting things from you.

manages Skouras' Playhouse at Great Neck, N. Y. Convey our kindest regards to the other men in your circuit, Arnold, most of whom are members, and just as soon as you can find time, send along a report on your activities.

comes to us from the Pickwick Theatre, in Greenwich, Conn., and if any of you members are thinking of getting married, you might pay Carl a visit. Greenwich is the spot where most of 'em take "the" step, and maybe Carl will push you on your way, or hold you back, as the case may be. Next time we're up your way, we'll stop in and say hello, so keep the handle on the big front door polished.

is more than welcome and entitled to membership in our Club. He was one of the South's youngest dramatic critics, was on the editorial staff of Atlanta and Detroit papers and at present is managing the Palace Theatre in Athens, Ala. He says he reads our pages with "avidity" and anybody that does that should be one of us. Well, Ray, you'll have to do more than read our pages; you'll have to contribute to them. How about it?

joins the ranks as one of our good-looking members (photo will be used later with his biog.) and he hails from the Strawberry Country, where he holds down the managerial reins at the Columbia Theatre, in Hammond, La. Well, Henry, since you were reading our pages since their inception, it's about time you joined, so be sure to send us some of your stuff.

makes his theatre 100% Round Table by joining. This new member was a projectionist for fourteen years before becoming the assistant at the Broadway Theatre in Fayetteville, in N. C., and if he isn't learning the ins and outs of his theatre, we don't know anybody who is. He promises to aid us in every possible way, so we'll be expecting to hear from him again soon.

KARL W. SCHAEFFER
another newly elected member of the Round Table Club, hails from Philadelphia, where he manages the Richmond Theatre and we're adding his name to the already staggering list of showmen from the City of Brotherly Love. Remember us to the rest of the Warner boys and particularly Andy Anderson.

CHARLES FELTER
becomes a member of the Club this week, joining from the Chester in Chestertown, N. Y. He promises us a nice long letter, so before we warn you that we'll be waiting for your material to arrive, we'll see what Uncle Sam brings us from you. Until then, au revoir.

REGGIE ST. CLAIR
is the assistant manager out at the Alamo Theatre in Pine Bluff, Ark., and since he tells us he was born in 1913, Reggie is apparently an up-and-coming youngster. Let's hear from you and tell us what you are doing to keep things humming at the Alamo.

sound to us like he ought to make a pretty active member, and unless we miss our guess we'll be hearing from him. He manages Warner's Queen Theatre in Wilmington, Del., and if his membership doesn't tie up the Warner Circuit 100% as Club members, we've missed our guess by about four. Step on it Bernie, and let's have the dope on your doings.

is the assistant at the Uptown in Lynn, Mass., and joins our ranks at the same time as his boss, Morris Swartz, does. Since Cliff comes to us highly recommended by Morris, we're hoping to hear great things from the Uptown, with two such peppy showmen at the steering wheel.

comes to us from the Beaufort Cinema in Birmingham, England, and we don't have to tell him how welcome he is in the CLUB. Our thousands of members and readers are always tremendously interested in the activities of their brother showmen in distant points, and judging from the looks of the house you are managing, Fred, you ought to have plenty to tell us about.

O.? Drop us a line so that we can pass it along.

manages the Stratford out in Chicago, and if Herb isn't too busy spending all his "off" days at the Fair, maybe he can take a little time to sit down and let us know what he is doing to drag 'em in to his house. What about it, Herb, do we hear, or do we hear?

is the assistant advertising manager of Warner Brothers Theatres in Cleveland, Ohio, and judging by the number of Cleveland Warner boys that we have "sewed up" as members of the Club, we were sure it was 100% solid until Clarence's membership came along. Well, you're welcome into the Club and you can't just sit back and accept your welcome, you'll have to do something about it, so get busy and let's know what's doing.

J. E. GLADFELTER

H. M. KHOURIE
is the resident manager of the State Theatre in Oroville, Cal., and he starts off his membership by contributing to our pages and telling us that he finds the Club very helpful. Well, "H. M.," you sure start in like you're going to develop into a darn good member, how's about it, can we depend on you?

is Colonel C. R. Stoflet's assistant down at the Margie Grand, in Harlon, Ky., and we bid him welcome. Now that we have Brown in the Club, too, we expect great things from Harlan, Ky., so don't disappoint us, and if the old Colonel doesn't send in his activities you do it for him. Regards to you both.

sends his application in to the Club from far away Buenos Aires, Argentine, where he has charge of the 25 Mayo Theatre. His affiliation is further evidence of the international scope of this organization. Glad to have you with us, Reyno, and we are sure your fellow showmen here in the states would be interested in hearing of your activities.

TECHNOLOGICAL

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 181.—(A) When fusing motor circuits, is it necessary that circuit wires be large enough to carry the current permitted by overfusing without overloading them? (B) Give us your views as to the economy or lack of economy in the one-man projection idea; also set forth your views of what gain there is in having two men on duty. Go into particulars, please. Many theatre managers and exhibitors read this department. I want your side laid honestly before them. Be careful, however, and make no fanciful claims. Stick to statements which must be recognized as having at least some foundation in fact. (Note: If any exhibitors or managers wish to, I shall be glad also to set forth their argument, always provided they too stick to facts. In such matters I do not care to "take sides," but only to set forth what is believed to be fact, or arguments having at least some recognizable foundation of fact.

Answer to Question No. 174

Bluebook School Question No. 174 was: (A) Do local authorities for the most part err in the matter of locating port shutter fuses? (B) Many port shutter fuses are located from three to four feet from the seat of any possible film fire. How long, in your judgment, would it take for them to "let go" and drop the shutters? (C) What value would the fuses so placed have in the prevention of fire in case the projectionist failed to drop the shutters manually? (D) What state has laws requiring port fire shutters to be held by film fuses so located that fire will reach them instantly, whether starting at a projector aperture or rewind table?

The following made acceptable answers, except that most failed on Section C (those answering correctly in it are noted by an asterisk):

G. E. Doe*; G. L. Reed*; M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen*; O. L. and J. F. Evans*; S. Maybe and R. D. Konley*; B. Doe*; P. Jackson and B. Diglah*; H. Edwards*; A. Breaston and D. Haber*; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch*, T. Van Vaulkenburg; E. Parkinson; C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; K. Dowling; R. K. Wayland; W. Ostrum; H. True; J. Wentworth; T. R. Bancroft; L. Grant and P. T. Zann; M. L. George and R. Singleton; P. L. Day and P. L. Daniels; W. D. Cholaugh; D. Halliburton and L. N. Barton; R. Wheeler and R. Suler; T. McGruder; R. D. Oberleigh; L. Jones and B. L. Banning; J. B. Malley and M. D. Oleson; L. Summers, D. M. Banks and T. N. Danby; L. Thomas and D. D. Davis; D. U. Granger; L. H. Simmons; B. R. Landers; E. W. Warner; H. Rogers; T. L. Raymond, B. T. Miller and D. Nelis; D. Emmerson; H. B. Coates; M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen; W. Lobe and S. D. Love; H. Harrison and E. Harlor; B. L. Tanner and E. Rymer; O. Allbright; J. B. Buckley and D. Singleton; D. L. Mason and J. T. Ballinger; C. Cummings and T. Kelley; B. I. Fanchann; D. V. Peterson; P. L. Jensen and A. Ilks; N. Truman; F. and J. L. Hanson; L. Lorient and E. L. Gibbs; M. H. Lonberger; D. Michelson; T. M. Vinson and D. K. Ormie; B. Rubin and L. Hendershot; D. L. Sinklow; O. L. Daris and M. Simms; T. Davis and T. Lambert; B. Sappert; L. N. Sapperstone; D. L. Howard; D. Holler and D. R. Peters; T. Lambert and T. Davis; J. Williams; R. S. Allen and T. Williams; G. Farmann; J. C. Peters; H. R. Baldwin and C. K. Berger; H. Pilson and D. L. Daniels; R. G. Rogers.

As to Section A, W. Ostrum answers, "Yes, local authorities for the most part err in the matter of locating port shutter fuses, often placing them near the ceiling on the theory that the air there will heat very fast, since, as we all know, heat rises. However, notwithstanding the fact that heat does rise, it is easily seen that it will probably require far more than two seconds for fuses so located to melt and release the shutters, whereas two seconds is the maximum permissible period of time consistent with safety. Anything in excess of two seconds may permit the audience to see either smoke or flame and thus start a panic. The fuses then should be so placed at all probable sources of fire that it will reach and either fuse or burn them immediately, releasing the shutters before the audience can see any evidences of fire."

(B) T. Van Vaulkenburg says, "It would depend upon whether the distance be considered as above, horizontal, or below. However, since no one in his right mind would locate them either horizontally or below, we may assume our editor meant above. But even so it would be impossible to form any close estimate of the time required to melt the fuses, even if one knew their exact composition.—F.H., that question was poorly worded! Take that slap on the wrist and like it! [Accepted and um—well, darn it, liked!—F. H. R.]

"Assuming fuses of a class ordinarily used for such a purpose, and that the ceiling be immediately above them (if it were not, but high up the time required for fusing might be appreciably longer), I would guess anywhere from five to fifteen seconds—possibly even much longer, depending upon the fire itself. If the fire be in a closed projector magazine or film cabinet, a great volume of smoke and very little heat would result. If it be an open blaze of film, as from an open film cabinet, a rewind table or an open projector magazine, such a fuse probably would let go rather quickly—say five to ten seconds, or even sooner. In any event, however, a fuse so located is practically worthless in the matter of averting panic, as our editor has often told us."

(C) Messrs. Rau and Evans say, "A fuse so placed would have no value at all in averting panic. Before it would melt the audience would certainly know a fire was in progress, and so far as panic be concerned, the damage would be done."

(D) All those marked with an asterisk answered "Pennsylvania." However, I am not myself certain whether it is a law or a department rule. Anyhow, up to this time it is the only really competent rule or law governing the fusing of port shutters that I know of. Most of them are almost as bad as nothing at all. Locating fuses near the ceiling is a bit funny, or would be were it not for the element of danger to women and children—yes, and to men, too, for in a panic no one is safe except the one who remains quiet until the panic has panicked itself out and people again regain their senses, to find there was really no danger at all.

Christ O. Brown Dead

Christ O. Brown, manager of Sullivan and Considine, New York theatrical producers, for 17 years, died as the result of a heart attack in Hollywood last week. Mr. Brown was manager of the Shubert theatre in Detroit before going to the Coast.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 112, No. 4 — July 22, 1933

PRICES ARE LOCAL

EARNINGS being what they have been, or rather what they have not been, in all departments of this sensitive and depression-ridden industry of the motion picture, it is but inevitable that now at the first glint of upturn there should be discussion of prospect of increased prices all along the line, with the obvious accent on the box office as the source of all revenues.

It is interesting to note, in a news article presented in this issue of Motion Picture Herald, how cautiously the subject is approached by the more seasoned observers of the industry, and how definitely aware they appear to be that decisions on prices will have to be the local decisions of the exhibitor governed by the conditions of his spending public.

There can be no lack of sympathy with the anxiety to make the industry show prosperous totals as early as possible. But in the emphatic declaration for higher admissions from Mr. H. A. McCausland, representing the Irving Trust Company in RKO, for instance, one sees attention to an immediate urge rather than a long view of the interests of an industry. Just as some months ago we saw a disregard of the whole interest of the industry in what we called the cut-price, fire-sale policies of Mr. Howard Cullman, receiver for the Old Roxy theatre. Incidentally the Old Roxy has stepped its prices up again.

The moral seems to be that receivers want money today, while the motion picture industry must expect also to do some business tomorrow.

PROGRAM ELASTICITY

PLEASING sanity of procedure is represented in the tendency of the product announcements of the distributors for this season to leave large open spaces in their schedules to permit shifts in production plans as trends develop, tastes appear or special opportunity dictates.

It has long been perfectly clear that the motion picture, so closely attuned as it needs to be to the varying whim of fashion and what we call the public taste, cannot make up its mind for a whole season in advance. In this sense the motion picture is a form of publication and needs publication elasticity. No magazine editor, even of a ponderous monthly, can know all about the contents of his book for the next six or eight months.

Half of the distributor-exhibitor quarrels over "substitutions" have in the past grown out of the fact that selling schedules tried to decide and promise farther ahead than production machines could.

The tendency is toward shorter working life but more intensive and intense careers for pictures, and to make production closely responsive to the pulsations of life in the process of being lived. This is not entirely comfortable for machine processes and selling routine, but it is an inescapable part of the swifter tempo of a world overwhelmingly served with communication at high speed by air and screen and wires and printed page.

The United States is only eighteen hours wide now. All our social and economic reactions are speeded up and heated up by this space-time compression. Some marked influences upon the motion picture, along with other media of expression, are inevitable. Song hits used to last for months, where they now survive for weeks. Newspapers got the preponderance of their European correspondence by mail. Fashions were a year or more penetrating the hinterland. Ever the trend is for blanket, simultaneous coverage of the whole market, which means the whole country. More and more we have to "make 'em and sell 'em while they're hot."

BETTER, BETTER THEATRES

WITH the New Deal, with decentralization, and maybe with a lot of optimism, there is a trend to an awakening in the theatre field that is both anticipated and reflected in our Better Theatres Section. This remark is inspired by a survey of the contents for the issue dated July 29, now in work, which will present the first of an able series on theatre advertising, an article on reconditioning the interior—and probably by now it needs it—and some important suggestions by experts on organizing maintenance, controlling air conditioning systems and inspection of sound and projection equipment.

IT hasn't reached the optimistic public press yet, but on the club car of the State of Maine the other night we were authoritatively informed that the New England Power Company on Monday and Tuesday of last week, delivering electricity all over the region, carried the highest load in its history. The looms are humming and there are no idle weavers. Fall River is about to discontinue its relief commissary.

GIMBELS MAKE A BET

GIMBEL BROTHERS, operating department stores in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Milwaukee, are betting on the upturn and increased prices to the extent that they will make a refund of the difference to each customer if their furniture goes lower than their current sale prices before December 1. It is part of their scheme of stimulating immediate buying.

EAR-MARKED THEATRES

Into the future peered vacationing MGM production chieftain Irving Thalberg, last week in London, before sailing, saw theatres classification-restricted to prescribed types of pictures, preview audience reactions determining the exhibition spot of each film. As the beginning, precedent already set, Producer Thalberg pointed to "little cinemas" in metropolises using foreign films, catering to "distinction." "Inevitable," he sees his prognostication. Envisioned results: patrons with a flair for subtle comedy would go where they could find it; those thirsting for sentimental romance, strong drama, would rush to the appropriate box office. To the defense of MGM's multi-star individual casts Mr. Thalberg came, but qualified with the thought that many stars in a film with nothing to do but be stars is bad sense, bad box office, since audiences today, super-critical, demand value. . . .

BURIED "DEAD-HEADS"

Long have motion picture interests of the sovereign state of Virginia sweltered, fumed under the heavy weight of the hand of censorship. Film deletions choke pages of manuscript as the shears are ruthlessly wielded in the interests of morality and the welfare of Virginia. Most annoying was the practice of "inspection," censor appointees, happy volunteers, entering theatres, to ascertain the presence of the seal of the commonwealth on the films exhibited. The "dead heads," with this flimsy excuse, have long been a particularly lengthy and pointed thorn in the theatreman's side. To them last week came victory as their protests registered with the attorney general, caused him to rule: but one volunteer "inspector" may attend, gratis, any theatre at one time for the seal-inspection. On the list had been relatives, wives of cabinet members, friends. Thus entombed are numerous of Virginia's "dead-heads." . . .

BROUGHT TO BOOK

Bucked perhaps by the manner in which disgruntled New York projectionists dragged their union into court, caused appointment of a receiver, haled domineering president Sam Kaplan before the bar of justice, 11 Newark, N. J., junior operators, of Local 244, Essex County, this week obtained a court order, prevented a meeting at which all 11 were to be ousted. Reminiscent of the Kaplan-306 affair were the charges of the 11: that the officers, Ray Cooper, president; Michael D'Anton, vice president; Louis Kaufmann, business agent, under Kaufmann's guidance, built a system of large union disbursements, diverted quietly but effectively into the pockets of the officers. Numerous instances were cited: substantial Christmas presents, purchase of automobiles. Also from the court the 11 won an order directing the defendants show cause why a union receiver should not be appointed. Not unscathed comes out the parent IATSE, against which the action is also directed. . . .

ENMESHED "ROXY"

Not yet free of legal entanglement is the show-name "Roxy," source of controversy, bandied about since Samuel Lionel Rothafel stepped out of the Roxy, into Radio City—and a breakdown. Suit was filed, discussion flared as to whether Promoter Rothafel had any legal right to take his name with him to Radio City's Roxy from the original Roxy. Finally came decision: that Roxy might go, but must leave his name behind. Ready were workmen to decapitate the Radio City marquee, when appeal was taken, aimed at the United States Supreme Court. While the Justices vacation, appeal pends, and the workmen hold back. When in the fall the highest court reconvenes will come decision, but the court may refuse even to accept the application of petitioners-RKO for a review of the case already once decided. . . .

REACHING FOR THE PAST

Sad, regretful in the extreme are city fathers, real estate operators of New Jersey's Fort Lee, Palisades ensconsed, when their wandering thoughts now and again turn back, recalling when Fort Lee was the hub, production core of what was to be the motion picture industry, ere one Jesse Lasky discovered the sunshine, vast spaces of Southern California. Now comes another drastic effort, following others past, on the part of Mayor Louis F. Hoebel, borough heads, Charles E. Perrin, real estate operator, once manager of a studio where Mary Pickford, the "movie sweetheart" of that day, made her early pictures. The Pickford-Fairbanks marital snag gave the opportunity. Offered to Miss Pickford is a house, a film studio, if she will continue her career in pining Fort Lee. . . .

EMBATTLED TEXANS

Into court last week burst embattled Texans, with two suits involving pictures, one not serious, quickly settled, the other giving promise of lengthy testimony, drawn procedure, in common with many a predecessor. First: Robb & Rowley, holding a contract for second run of "College Humor" at the Mirror, in Dallas, rushed to court, obtained a stay when the film was moved from the Palace to the Old Mill, thus, in the plaintiff opinion, constituting a second run. Almost immediately came compromise, settlement. Not so easily, the second: named as defendants were nine major distributors by B. Legge, owner of the Suberta at Denison, who would force them to enter contracts to supply second runs to his house. Charged was the often-resounding violation of the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust statutes, similar Texas laws. Once more will majors' legal departments earn their keep. . . .

"POPULAR" SONGS

By virtue of depression, dollar stringency, extreme curtailment of luxury purchasing, the publishing business has mightily suffered. Not only books, but particularly sheet music, that once heavily lucrative field to its promoters, is in virtually continuous pain. With the coming of the radio, still further was there a substantial knawing into the vitals of that business. Pertinent facts and figures recently dropped from the tongue of Paramount's Coast musical director, Nat W. Finston: annually published in this country are some 1,000 popular songs, of which no more than 200 ever show profits; years ago a song hit might sell one, even three million copies, today 250,000 sales marks a terrific hit. Thus, often is a popular song popular by courtesy of colloquialism. . . .

LEADERS URGE CARE IN INCREASING ADMISSIONS

Exhibition and Distribution Executives Say It's a Local Matter for Communities Where Buyer Power Is Pronounced

Exhibitors considering an increase of admission prices in line with the general upward trend of basic commodity prices, improved box office returns and employment, will do well to study their own communities carefully before inaugurating such a movement, in the opinion of exhibition and distribution leaders. It was emphasized that the stage of general business recovery to date warrants price raising only in local situations where the upturn has been most pronounced and public buying power has been materially strengthened.

Changes in admission scales have long been a controversial subject between the exhibitor and the distributor. Last January theatre circuits and independent exhibitors embarked upon unprecedented price-cutting programs after six months of indecision. Cuts ranging down to 50 per cent were made. With receipts lower, proportionately, than ever before, exhibitors resorted to drastic reductions after they had tried everything else.

Now, with receipts as a whole in almost every section climbing steadily upward and with general conditions getting better day by day, exhibitors are wondering if they were not a little too hasty in making such drastic reductions half a year ago.

Receivers Favor Increases

For the first time of consequence in producer-owned circuits there is an outside factor to be reckoned with, an influence, empowered by the courts to give orders and see them carried out: the receiver and the trustee in bankruptcy. Both the receiver and the trustee have decided that, on the eve of national industrial recovery, admission prices must be increased. Last week, it was reported, H. A. McCausland, representative of Irving Trust, receiver for RKO Theatres Corp., indicated it is imperative for all circuits to make substantial increases at once.

However, the preponderance of expressed opinion, from theatre executives, sales heads and exhibitor representatives, is firmly against such action at present. It is pointed out there still are millions destitute, many factories and stores still shut, and that such money as is being spent on motion picture entertainment, is being expended frugally, with people shopping for shows as they never shopped before.

In the Pacific Northwest, receipts in key cities are showing a marked increase, ascribed largely to the upward trend in prices of wheat and hops, and the sudden demand for lumber at prices almost double those quoted three months ago, but exhibitors are expending these new dollars on theatre equipment instead of talking about increases in admission scales.

Generally speaking, theatre grosses in the Detroit sector do not reflect the general improvement in business, but a few exhibitors have noted sufficient improvement to be optimistic. There is, however, little talk of raising prices.

While the situation in Richmond and elsewhere in Virginia is reported better, admission reductions several months ago improved patronage and exhibitors generally are not contemplating higher charges. A few towns have raised prices on a sliding scale for special pictures, but on the whole a fairly low level has been maintained.

In Cleveland there have been many discussions but they have led nowhere, it is reported. Theatre owners there agree that present admissions are too low, but they realize that until the first-run houses go up they are forced to maintain their present scales.

Buffalo exhibitors in general are disinclined even to discuss increases. Two theatres, one a first-run and the other a second, have advanced prices, and theatre men are awaiting the box-office verdict.

Exhibitors in southern Ohio are not contemplating advances for the time being, although suburban and neighborhood houses may make slight increases in the fall. Smaller theatres are now charging an average of 25 cents, as the result of great unemployment.

Philadelphia First-Runs Up

In Philadelphia two of the leading first-runs have tilted their prices upward, attributing the move chiefly to a conviction that the drastic cuts of a year ago haven't particularly helped business.

In Milwaukee there is no immediate prospect of a raise in prices. Grosses among the first-runs in various instances have shown some improvement over the same period last year, due in some measure to the considerable number of large conventions there this summer.

Upward adjustment of admission scales will be delayed for some time in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area, although there has been considerable talk of raising them immediately. The tendency for many months has been toward 40-cent top.

In New York City the original Seventh Avenue Roxy, for a long time handing out first and second runs at a 35-cent top, recently increased its top to 55 cents. The RKO Roxy in Radio City has increased prices over the week ends. At the same time the Rivoli, United Artists' first-run, reduced its 75-cent top to 55 cents and Loew's States has cut charges approximately 20 per cent for weekends.

Prices Maintained in Canada

There is little indication of higher admissions in Canada, where they have held up steadily all during the past year, exhibitors preferring to give double bills and merchandise premiums.

An exception is New Orleans, where receipts are falling gradually, except in cases of exceptionally strong films. There is no likelihood of increased prices in the downtown section, and neighborhood theatres are reported to be expecting further reductions.

In the Kansas City territory, prices have not been increased, nor have they been reduced in the past few months.

Prices in Houston, Texas, theatres have declined since the beginning of the summer and there is no indication that prices will go upward.

Declare Business Improvement to Date Does Not Warrant General Raise; Discussions Held in Many Territories

In the new exhibition code, drawn up this week by the MPTOA, there are two clauses dealing with admission scales. The first reads: "Distributors shall refuse to permit the exhibition of their pictures at unreasonably low admission prices in competition with a theatre charging a fair admission scale; the second, "No exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by the giving of rebates in the form of premiums, lotteries, reduced scrip books, coupons, gifts, or things of value, or by two-for-one admissions, or by other methods or devices of similar effect, except as approved by the local maximum clearance and zoning schedules. This shall not be deemed to prohibit exhibitors from reducing or increasing their admission scales as they see fit, except as may be prohibited by exhibition contracts, or local zoning and clearance schedules. It is aimed at reductions through means which are unfair to competing exhibitors and which deceive the public."

Schaefer Favors Increase

George Schaefer, general manager of Paramount, said admission prices must go up with the general commodity price advance.

"More than 2,000 small theatres are going to reopen within the next 18 months, indicating that this industry already has benefited by the 'New Deal,'" Mr. Schaefer said. "Admission prices must increase with other commodities. President Roosevelt's actions have created new mental attitudes throughout the country. The quality of production depends solely upon adequate returns, meaning that it will be necessary for theatre admissions to increase. The trend toward greater attendance has already established this. The industry is going places."

Many distribution and theatre executives in New York agree that eventually the logical thing will be to raise admission prices, but they feel it cannot be done on a national scale, that it is purely a local matter. However, with wages spread around a bit more than they have been for some time, with employment on the increase, many say that increases are near at hand in many localities.

Robert H. Cochrane, executive vice-president of Universal, said that as a national proposition the raising of admission scales at this time would not conceivably be feasible.

"In places where they can get away with it, it would, of course, be a wonderful thing, but it is all a matter of what the individual theatre can do in the matter," Mr. Cochrane said. "In localities where there has been an upturn in general business conditions, theatres may be able to increase their scales successfully, but where there are still hundreds of unemployed it would be foolish to attempt to squeeze more money from people who hardly can afford to pay what they do at present."

PRICE UP TO COMMUNITY

The motion picture industry generally responds to business conditions as quickly as any, said David Palfreyman of the executive staff of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and, this being the case, with general business on the upward trend, box-office receipts should go up accordingly.

"As far as admission scales are concerned," Mr. Palfreyman said, "that is a problem which can only be solved by the condition of the patron. A great many persons in this industry seem to think that all they have to do is to sit back and say 'we will now raise admission prices.' Unfortunately the patron will have considerable to say in this matter. If he is in a position to pay higher prices, chances are he will do so, but if he is not, the exhibitor is apt to lose a patron. Thus, the patron sets the scale. If it is too high he forces the exhibitor to reduce, often by withdrawing his patronage. If, on the other hand, the scale is too low, the patron naturally will not ask the exhibitor to raise it, but then it's the exhibitor's business and he should know how his patrons will react."

Rolls Royces at Ford Prices

Dan Michalove, Paramount Publix theatre executive, said scales ultimately must be raised, "but it cannot fairly be said by anyone within the industry that now is the time to do it. Admission prices have, in a majority of instances, been lowered too drastically, but until we have more tangible evidence that motion picture prosperity is really 'just around the corner,' it would be foolish to attempt a price raising policy. Exhibitors can, however, stop selling 'Rolls Royces' for the price of 'Fords,' and by that I mean that as the distributor cannot expect to get the same price for 'Picture Snatcher' as he does for 'Cavalcade,' the exhibitor need no longer sell the latter for the same price as the first. People are looking for real values in pictures today and when a special type of picture comes along the exhibitor is justified in raising his prices to meet it. I do not believe there is a theatre man in the business who would not give his right arm to see a good healthy rise in admission prices, but I am equally certain that it cannot be accomplished until buying power increases proportionately with rising commodity prices."

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, said: "There does not seem to be any appreciable rush to the box-offices of Greater New York at the present time, in spite of the fact that present admissions are just about 50 per cent of what they used to be. People are picking their pictures with far greater discretion today than ever before, picking them to fit their pocketbooks, and we are experiencing great difficulty in attracting them to the cashier's window. Therefore, in my opinion, it would be suicidal even to think of raising admissions now."

Doubts Improvement by Cuts

Charles E. McCarthy, Fox director of advertising and publicity, put it this way:

"It would appear that raising admissions is a local problem. We cannot sit down in New York and tell the exhibitor in the field what is best for him. If all the mills in a town are closed the exhibitor certainly is not going to raise his prices."

"I have yet to find a situation throughout the nation which has improved in numerical attendance as a result of reductions in admission scales," said Harold B. Franklin, president of RKO Theatre Operating Corporation, this week.

"While I feel confident that prices must be raised, this is not the correct time. I do not believe that the public has acquired sufficient increased buying power to relish any appreciable increase. Theatres which are fortunate to have exceptional attractions regularly, may possibly get away with increased prices. We all look forward to the time when prices can be raised throughout the country, but this is hardly the time.

"In any case, admission scales cannot be determined for themselves: it all depends on a spirit of cooperation from everyone, competitors included. One company cannot raise its prices and get away with it if another maintains a low level. The RKO Roxy in Radio City has put into effect an average increase of 30 per cent on weekends only, but we are not contemplating a national move."

Major Albert Warner said that Warner Brothers is keeping its sales and production plans elastic "to be able to take advantage of new trends in public film taste and front page stories, and to help exhibitors take advantage of increased admission prices that now seem inevitable."

J. R. McDonough Is Named General Manager of RKO

Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of Radio Corporation's motion picture and broadcasting properties, will be assisted in the management of Radio-Keith-Orpheum by J. R. McDonough, whose appointment as general manager of RKO and subsidiaries was announced Wednesday afternoon by Mr. Aylesworth. The announcement from RKO's home office in Radio City said:

"Mr. McDonough, executive vice-president of Radio Corporation of America, has been given a leave of absence from his executive duties in the Radio Corporation during the period of receivership of Radio-Keith-Orpheum and its reorganization. Mr. McDonough will devote his full time to the activities of the various organizations of Radio-Keith-Orpheum and will report directly to the president.

"Mr. McDonough was formerly president of the RCA Victor Company, Inc., and resigned to become executive vice-president of the Radio Corporation.

"Mr. Aylesworth states that the executive officers of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum organization will continue to function as at present."

Brentinger Dead at Hollywood

Alfred Brentinger, vice-president and general manager of United Artists' studio, died at his Playa del Rey home, near Hollywood, this week after a heart attack. He was 42 years old. Mr. Brentinger is survived by his wife and two daughters.

Thalberg Returns; Calls Theatre Loss Studios' Disgrace

Irving Thalberg, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production executive, returned to New York from Europe Tuesday with his wife, Norma Shearer, fully recuperated after a long illness. He is minus his tonsils and plus fifteen pounds. Refusing flatly to discuss rumors to the effect that he is contemplating a change in his company affiliation, Mr. Thalberg created some mystery when he said, "I will make an announcement of my new plans in a week."

Mr. Thalberg said that his contract with Metro still has four years to run and that he is heading straight for work in Hollywood.

"My chief interest is to make pictures," he said. "I consider it a disgrace to make pictures that keep theatres operating at a loss. The job of making pictures, as I see it, is threefold: it must be conducted with an eye to the stockholders, the public and to exhibitors. Maybe I'm wrong in putting the public in second place," he added.

Mr. Thalberg was asked, "Who can tell what the public wants?"

"That is not difficult," he replied. "We know, for instance, that the public wants Greta Garbo in fine motion pictures. Why, then, make bad ones?"

Mr. Thalberg said the idea which some producers have of turning out "just pictures" is all wrong, and that his trip to Europe had convinced him of it more firmly than ever before. He pointed out that all over Europe outstanding attractions are making big grosses and that in England really outstanding films gross, on an average, between $500,000 and $1,000,000. Grosses of $150,000 in France and Germany are not impossible, he said.

Discussing the subject of contracts, the Metro executive said, "I think I've done a job. I've been in the business for 15 years and have nothing to apologize for. The record speaks for itself."

Eugene Paschall Killed In Texas Motor Accident

Eugene W. Paschall, operator of the former Dent circuit of 60 Texas theatres, was killed Tuesday at Dallas in an automobile crash. G. S. Campbell, Publix district manager in Dallas, was seriously injured. According to reports from Dallas, Mr. Paschall was passing underneath a railway bridge and crashed into a concrete post which flanked a sharp turn immediately under the bridge.

Ochs Drops Open Air Houses

Lee Ochs, New York circuit operator, has turned over four open air theatres in New York, which he acquired from the projectionists' union, Local 306, to Cy Barr, Brooklyn exhibitor. Mr. Barr has begun operation under the firm name, Motion Picture Exhibition Corporation, of which Max Hoffman is president.

PARAMOUNT POSITION IMPROVED; TRUSTEES CONTINUE TO SEPTEMBER 17

Report Shows $4,836,563 Cash on Books of Production-Distribution Subsidiaries; Parent Company's Cash Improves

Paramount Publix Corporation's trustees, Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson, were instructed this week by the court to continue their operations another sixty days, following submission to the court of a report which listed as of June 3, cash totaling $4,836,563 on the books of production-distribution subsidiaries. The cash position of the parent Paramount Publix company showed an improvement, too, of some $257,000 during the past two months.

Liquidation and reorganization of unprofitable properties are proceeding and shortly the trustees expect materialization of a simplified reorganization plan calling for unified administration of the existing 126 theatre holding and operating companies contained in the Publix Enterprises setup.

The trustees reported that "among the most important assets of the bankrupt Paramount Publix Corp. are the assets held by the various subsidiary companies of Paramount Pictures Corp. This group of companies is engaged in the production and distribution of motion picture films throughout the world."

The cash position of the Paramount Pictures production-distribution group has improved from $1,611,162, on November 12, 1932, to $4,836,563 on June 3, 1933.

Assets were listed at $28,981,284, as shown in the accompanying table.

Total liabilities were listed at $21,237,501. Capital and surplus raised the total to $28,981,284.

Davis Signs Continuance Order

The order filed with the New York district court on Monday, urging continuance of Messrs. Hilles, Leake and Richardson as trustees for another six days, was signed by Henry K. Davis, referee in bankruptcy, and was appended to the trustees' second report of the condition of Paramount Publix Corporation. Referee Davis' order, besides extending the trustees' power to operate until September 17, 1933, also allows them until December 31, 1933 (unless the time be further extended by the court), within which to determine which of the company's contracts, including leases, they should continue.

In concluding their report, the three Paramount Publix trustees said:

"There had been filed with the referee up to and including July 8, 1933, claims against the bankrupt estate aggregating $56,005,277. Of these, $552,817 were tax claims; $307,185 were other priority claims; $47,227,217 were landlords', mortgages' and other general claims; and $7,918,057 were the claims of bondholders. In conformity with authority granted by the referee an office has been set up for the checking and cataloguing of such claims, and the validity of all claims filed will be carefully investigated by the trustees. The time for the filing of proofs of claim expires September 14, 1933.

"The trustees believe it to be important in the interests of the creditors that the business be continued, and pray that an order be entered to that end," the report stated.

"The bankrupt is a party to leases and other contracts running into the thousands. The trustees are making a survey of all such contracts, but some time will necessarily elapse before said survey is completed. The trustees therefore request that they be allowed until December 31, 1933, before they be required to take action in respect of any contract or lease, without prejudice to their right to request a further extension of time and also without prejudice to the right of any other party to a particular contract or lease, on motion, to pray for a determination by the trustees prior to that date.

"The trustees do not recommend payment of a dividend at this time. The obligations of the trustees for payment of various expenses connected with the equity receivership have not yet been determined or paid. The trustees have been conducting the business of the bankrupt and believe that they should continue to do so in the interests of creditors. It is important that the trustees should have on hand at all times cash in an amount sufficient to meet administration and other expenses incurred by them, and to preserve so far as may be the assets of the estate. The trustees believe that it would not be advisable to deplete the cash now on hand by the payment of a dividend at this time.

"A final report cannot now be filed because of the uncompleted matters mentioned in this report, because all the assets of the bankrupt have not been liquidated, and because the period for filing claims has not yet expired."

Trustees Increase Cash in Bank

This second report of the trustees, which follows a report filed on April 20, concerns not only the condition of Paramount Publix Corporation, and the amount of money on hand, but also includes an inventory of the assets as of July 17, and a complete cross-section of the financial, administrative and legal structure of the corporation from the time of the equity receivership on January 28, to the present.

The trustees have bettered the cash position of Paramount Publix by some $257,354 between May 13 and July 8, as follows:

Cash in banks, May 13	$589,280.18
Receipts from May 13 to July 8	320,620.44
TOTAL CASH AS PER CASH BOOK	$909,900.62
Disbursements from May 13 to July 8	63,265.90
CASH IN BANKS (Trustee's Account), JULY 8	$846,634.72

Attached by the trustees to their new report is a comparative balance sheet of Paramount Publix Corporation as of January 28, following the appointment of equity receivers, and on April 18, the day preceding qualification of the trustees. It indicates a decrease of $641,463 in total assets, from $149,852,385 on January 28, to $149,210,921 on April 18.

Assets listed on April 18 were: Cash, $531,826; Liberty Bonds, $1,997; productions inventory, $487,242; advances to outside producers, $38,224; notes and accounts receivable, and investments (stated at book figures but not represented to be realized values), after certain reserves, $135,977,423; fixed assets, after reserves for depreciation, $3,286,610; deposits to secure contracts, $767,558; prepaid expenses and deferred charges, $63,146; goodwill, $8,056,890.

In the foregoing total of $135,977,423 for notes and accounts receivable were $13,368,932 in notes receivable from Fox Film, discounted per contra; also $81,992 due from Spyros Skouras; and $210,000 from Art Cinema, which later was settled for $150,000.

Accounts receivable included $3,447,820 from Paramount Pictures Corporation and certain other subsidiaries. Investments in certain affiliated companies totaled $28,864,000 and in other subsidiaries and affiliates, $77,746,000.

Increased theatre receipts in the Central and Western sections for the four-week period from June 17 to July 8, as compared with the previous four weeks, May 20 to June 10, are shown in the graph, based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of theatres' grosses. The Eastern section reflected a slight decline. The 100 per cent line and the shaded columns represent the business done in the earlier four-week period, the solid black column the receipts for the later four weeks. Cities used in determining the data for the chart were: Eastern—Boston, Cleveland, New York; Central—Chicago, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Oklahoma City, Omaha; Western—Hollywood, Los Angeles, Portland, Ore., and San Francisco.

ROOSEVELT MOVE MAY BRING FILM TARIFF CUT

Several Governments Already Invited To Consider Possibility of Starting Discussions Looking Toward New Treaties

by FRANCIS L. BURT of the HERALD'S Washington Bureau

Possibilities of relaxation of foreign tariff and other regulations now handicaping the sale of American films abroad are seen in President Roosevelt's move to initiate negotiations of reciprocal trade agreements with other governments.

Several South American governments and one or two of the less important European nations already have been invited by the President to consider the possibility of beginning discussions of new treaties.

Conversations have been held by the President and state department officials with Argentine Ambassador Espil, from which can be gathered the broad outlines of the Administration's policy.

Seeking to offer a foundation upon which the negotiations could be based, the President is understood to have suggested possible relaxation of our sanitary quarantine regulations which now bar imports of Argentine meats and possible reduction of duties on certain other products which form the backbone of Argentine's trade with us. In return, he would seek concessions in rates imposed by the South American country upon those manufactures which we ship in largest quantity.

A great deal of interest surrounds the possibility of the President asking the Argentine government to modify its tariff on shoes. This is comparable to the conditions which confront our films in a number of countries, since, seeking to encourage her own shoe industry, Argentine has imposed a duty on shoes which is practically an embargo.

While President Roosevelt, in his conversations with Dr. Espil, made offers of broad concessions of Argentine products, he made clear that the proposed agreements cannot be entirely one-sided and suggested that the Argentine government give consideration to the concessions it can offer in return.

In the case of those nations which are seeking, by one means or another, to keep out American films, it is firmly believed in Washington that the President will strongly protest against any barriers of this nature, and will take the attitude that his willingness to throw the American market open to foreign products must be reciprocated with equal generosity.

That a stormy path lies before the President in the framing of his new treaties has already been made apparent. Following Ambassador Espil's visits to the White House and state department, the Paraguayan minister visited the department to protest against any reduction in the duty on quebracho from Argentine which was not also applied to that product from Paraguay. Quebracho, an important leather tanning material, is a product of both countries.

Similarly, relaxation of the quarantine on Argentine meats is expected to be protested by some 20 other countries whose meats are barred from the American market under the same quarantine.

Pathe Exchange Plans to Resume Active Operation

Pathe Exchange, Inc., for the past two years, since the sale of its picture production assets to Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, primarily an inactive corporation, has, by decision of its board of directors, announced this week, determined to return to active operation.

The change in policy of the new administration at Pathe, of which the announcement is an expression, has come about under the presidency of Stuart W. Webb, who brought new interests into the company and arranged the purchase of the control formerly held by J. P. Kennedy and associates. Activities of Pathe Exchange will be centered about the large laboratory at Bound Brook, N. J., where release prints will be produced and other effort made to enhance the position of the company in the raw stock business through its interest of approximately 49 per cent of Dupont Film Manufacturing Corporation.

Pathe began operation in this country in 1905 with a suitcase full of films from France and desk room in an office in Madison Square, developing into one of the dominant concerns, enjoying a special advantage in the manufacture and processing of its own film.

Since the sale of the studios, star contracts, newsreel and newsreel laboratory to RKO in 1930, the activities of Pathe have been primarily that of a holding company, with a small staff engaged in liquidation operations. The cash derived from those operations now about offsets the operating expenses. However, the company has come through the recent depression in favorable condition since the Dupont Film Manufacturing Company has continued to pay an annual dividend of $400,000, and in no year of the depression has this dividend been earned less than twice. Pathe is in essence in partnership, in the film manufacturing enterprise, with E. I. Dupont de Nemours & Company, which holds the remaining 51 per cent of the film concern's stock. The film activity includes the making of X-ray as well as motion picture film and various other materials for the general photographic field, although it has not yet included roll films for hand cameras.

The Bound Brook Pathe laboratory has continued in operation on small orders sufficient to keep it in working condition.

"It has until recently been practically impossible to secure contracts for printing of film for motion picture producers without making advances of money to them under what the company regarded as unfavorable circumstances," said Mr. Webb, "but it appears that conditions have now so changed that printing contracts can be made on conservative terms. We expect to resume operations on a substantial scale."

Edward Dillon Dead at 60; First Lead of Mary Pickford

Edward Dillon, 60, first leading man for Mary Pickford and subsequently one of D. W. Griffith's directors, died last week in Hollywood of heart disease.

Mr. Dillon, one of the earlier pioneers of the industry, started his career as a director with Mr. Griffith in the Mutoscope days. He directed many short features for Griffith in collaboration with Harry Salter. In more recent years he turned his attention again to acting and appeared in many well known pictures.

AERIAL MYSTERY. Inasmuch as the photographer failed to include whatever was happening aloft in this picture. MPTOA COMPLETES CODE DRAFT; 36-HOUR WEEK, $10.80 MINIMUM

But Wage Minimum Does Not Apply to Ushers and Cleaners; Most "Suggestions" of First Draft Incorporated

(Complete text of the proposed new Exhibition Code appears on following page.)

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America presented to the industry over the weekend a completed draft of a code for exhibition in which were included clauses applying to minimum wage scales and maximum hours of labor, in accordance with the National Recovery Act. The work was finished in Chicago at a four-day session to ratify the tentative exhibition code drawn up by the MPTOA executive committee in New York late in June and to make new recommendations.

36-Hour Week in Exhibition Code

The revised code of exhibition, which incorporated minor changes of a few clauses and omission of others in the original code, stipulates a 36-hour working week and a minimum wage scale of 30 cents an hour, thus setting a minimum weekly salary for theatre employees of $10.80. The minimum wage scale applies to all theatre branches with the exception of ushers and cleaners. While the new code is generally regarded by the MPTOA to be little more than a second tentative draft, it is said in many circles that is may turn out to be the final and definite exhibition code.

Significant among the changes, aside from insertion of wage and hour scales, is the inclusion of a majority of the "Suggestions to Distributors," in the first draft. The "suggestions" refer to universal use of an optional standard contract; block booking; clearance; arbitration; cut-rate competition; tying in shorts with features; selective service contracts; overbuying; double features; playing arrangements; non-theatrical competition; exclusive runs; substitutions; threats and intimidations; sales policies and score charges.

An advertising code of ethics for exhibitors is included in the new code and is said to be an important addition. This advertising code follows almost word for word the Hays advertising code which was included in the tentative distribution code. Another addition is a clause prohibiting subsequent runs from advertising a feature during its first run. Other additions prohibit agreements among exhibitors to allocate product in order to eliminate fair competition; prohibition of disclosing contract terms or signed contracts in order to obtain rental advantages, and of unreasonable discrimination in favor of circuit theatres as against independent houses in rentals and availability.

The revised draft expressly prohibits substitutions of specific stars, directors, books or plays.

Clearance and zoning disputes under the new draft would be submitted to an arbitration board equally representative of exhibitors and distributors, with the right of appeal to the national board of appeals or to an appeal board for independent theatre disputes. The arbitration board would have three unaffiliated exhibitors and three distributor representatives.

The new draft will be submitted within the next few days to the directors of the MPTOA for ratification by state unit. Many of the paragraphs enumerated have been agreed upon already by distributors.

The code was drafted by the entire executive committee of the MPTOA consisting of Ed Kuykendall, national president, Fred. S. Meyer, Love B. Harrel, Fred Wehrenberg, Jack Miller, M. A. Lightman, David Barrist, George Aarons, David Palfreyman. A number of independent exhibitors interested in the proposed code sat in at most of the meetings.

Leaders in the Kansas City territory fear that with the new selling season under way, considerable confusion will arise when attempts are made to conform individual sales policies and agreements to the distribution and exhibition codes.

Independents Meet

In line with the administration's plans to put into effect regulations governing ten basic industries first, the film codes will probably not receive consideration from Washington for some time, possibly three or four months. Close observers are questioning the practicability of putting the codes into effect at a time when the season is far advanced and theatres already will have entered into local zoning and other agreements.

In New York representatives of 30 independent distribution organizations met at the MPPDA offices and laid plans for agreements on maximum working hours, minimum salaries and employment increases. Tentative recommendations were made for salary schedules and maximum hours for executives, office workers, skilled and unskilled labor. Fixed averages will be worked out later on the basis of suggestions received and, primarily, on information obtained from replies to a questionnaire to home offices and exchanges both major and independent. This questionnaire, which was worked out by a Hays office representative, is expected to determine the average working hours and salaries of the various groups of distribution employees. It was said that the distributors hope to announce the results this week.

Laboratory Association Active

Other New York developments included a meeting of the directors of the newly formed Motion Picture Laboratories Association of America Wednesday, when a 40-hour maximum working week was agreed upon for insertion in the code; adoption of four major proposals, including free competition in film selling, elimination of block booking, unrestricted double featuring and divorce of production from distribution, by the Association of the Motion Picture Industry. AMPI, representing independent producers and distributors, decided upon this policy after careful study of the original tentative distribution code. The theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the Independent Theatres Owners Association are cooperating to draw up a code for theatres in the New York Metropolitan area and have begun compiling statistical information.

In Washington it was reported late last week that Congressman Patman's plan to add an anti-block booking provision to his bill for creation of a Federal Picture Commisssion cannot become effective until the next session of Congress, and may never be put into effect if the film industry adopts a code.

At the regional sales convention of Monogram Pictures Corporation in Chicago last week, W. Ray Johnston announced that the corporation, after giving the proposed film codes due consideration, had decided to support AMPI.

"We shall continue to maintain," Mr. Johnston said, "that the exhibitor has the right to run his theatre any way he sees fit and that the rights of the small producer must be protected in order to keep an open market in our industry. We have requested all of our franchise holders to support the AMPI code."

Hays Assigns Pat Casey to Study Studio Salary Lists to Learn Maximum and Minimum Pay for Production Code

Developments in Hollywood on a production code were few and far between. Will H. Hays is still holding conferences with various creative and technical branches. On Thursday the first general meeting of the Producers Association was held with Mr. Hays. Technicalities were clarified and the session adjourned with indications that a code might be in definite shape the early part of next week. Pat Casey, producer contact on labor problems, was assigned by Mr. Hays to inquire into studio salary lists to learn minimum and maximum wages in connection with the production code. He will report his findings to a producers' committee composed of Louis B. Mayer, Winfield Sheehan, Joseph M. Schenck. B. B. Kahane and Jack L. Warner. Meanwhile it was announced that the Screen Writers' Guild and the American Federation of Labor will cooperate in preparing the employees' case for hearings on the National Industrial Control Bill.

Groups Study Codes

In various sections exhibitor groups were studying proposed codes. Plans of Allied of Michigan for a new zoning code which would provide that pictures be not available for double-billing for six months after first run, is reported to be meeting with strenuous opposition from Detroit exhibitors, who feel that duals are necessary.

In Texas further recommendations for the national theatre code were adopted by the joint code committe of Allied and the Texas Theatre Owners' Association, meeting in Dallas for its concluding sessions. The code recommended that "operation of theatres by producer-distributors is unfair and should be ended." The remainder of the code covers exactly the same ground as those already published.

Missouri is said to be in a quandary as to the application of the Act in that state. State attorney-general Roy McKitrick returned from Washington to Kansas City last week after conferences with U. S. attorney general Homer S. Cummings on Missouri's stringent antitrust laws.

From Memphis this week M. A. Lightman, former president of the MPTOA, issued a statement which said in part:

"The national government is doing a fine thing. . . .

"But I do feel that it is necessary to be extremely careful in delegating powers to the government which we may later wish had been left in our own hands. . . .

"I am thinking particularly of what might happen in case we include in our code a provision against salacious advertising matter. On the face of it, such a provision might seem most worthy. . . .

"But this code must be uniform throughout the country. Yet, what will be found entirely unquestionable in New York would arouse the public of Mississippi to the highest pitch."

The legitimate theatre in New York has progressed far in drawing up a code, so far, in fact, that on Monday representatives of nearly all organized groups met with Sol A. Rosenblatt, acting for General Hugh S. Johnson, federal administrator of NIRA, to adopt a unified fair practice code. Last week Dr. Henry

COVERS WORK HOURS, MINIMUM PAY

Following is the complete text of the proposed Code of Standards of Fair Competition in the exhibition of motion pictures, as announced by the executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, following a meeting in Chicago last week at which the first tentative draft was amended and changed into the form herewith:

Preamble

To provide for increased employment, to create a shorter working week, and to improve standards of labor; to eliminate the waste and burden of unfair trade practices destructive of the interests of the public, the employees, and employers of the exhibition branch of the motion picture industry; and in full accord with the efforts of our government in meeting the conditions of our present national emergency, and with a sincere desire to fully effectuate the policy of Title 1 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the following provisions are established as a code of fair competition for the Motion Picture Industry as relates to exhibition.

(While the general level of wages among the employees of our industry is higher than the minimum wage hereinafter set out, it is to be considered that a no small number of our theatres are located in and are providing the only means of recreation and amusement for the small cities, towns and villages throughout the United States where the cost of living and wages are less than that in the industrial centers.)

Minimum Wage Scale Covering All Employees Required in Theatres

On and after the effective date, the minimum wage that shall be paid by employers in the Exhibition branch of the motion picture industry to any of the employees engaged therein—except ushers and cleaners—shall be at the rate of 30c per hour.

On and after the effective date employers in the exhibition branch of the motion picture industry shall not operate on a schedule of hours of labor for their employees, except office and supervisory staffs, firemen and watchmen, in excess of 36 hours per week.

Standard License Agreement

1. The Optional Standard License Agreement already negotiated and used by a majority of the distributors shall be used exclusively by all distributors, with the "optional" arbitration clause of same eliminated.

Where the provisions of the Standard License Agreement are in conflict with the provisions of this Code, the Code shall prevail.

Arbitration

2. All trade disputes, controversies and disputes and claims arising under exhibition contracts shall be submitted to a local arbitration board equally representative of exhibitors and distributors for final determination. The findings of such arbitration board shall be binding and enforceable against either party to the dispute.

Maximum Clearance and Zoning Schedules

3. Exhibitors in any exchange territory may agree with distributors upon the formulation and adoption by exhibitors and distributors of schedules limiting the maximum clearance that may be granted by distributors to exhibitors according to a classification of theatres by zones, or otherwise. Each such agreement shall be made by a representative committee of which two shall be representative of distributors, two representative of first-run theatres and four representative of subsequent-run theatres. No exhibitor shall serve as a representative of both first and subsequent-run theatres.

All disputes concerning such schedules shall be determined by arbitrators equally representative of distributors and exhibitors with the right of appeal to a National Board of Appeals, as provided for in the new optional standard license agreement.

Personnel of the National Board of Appeals

4. The personnel of the National Board of Appeals shall be as provided in the proposal for a National Board of Appeals proposed in connection with the Optional Standard License Agreement. This National Board of Appeals shall be constituted as follows: For the purpose of hearing appeals or conciliating complaints not involving a circuit of theatres affiliated with a producer or distributor, the National Board of Appeals shall consist of three unaffiliated exhibitors and three distributor representatives.

For the purpose of hearing appeals or conciliating complaints involving a circuit of theatres affiliated with a producer or distributor, the National Board of Appeals shall consist of either (a) four unaffiliated exhibitors, two distributor representatives and two affiliated circuit representatives; or (b) two unaffiliated exhibitors, one distributor representative and one affiliated circuit representative, and the action of a majority shall be the action of the National Board. It is important that both parties to the controversy have fair and equal representation of disinterested parties who are generally familiar with the business. Selection of unaffiliated exhibitor members can be made by the national exhibitor associations or by lot from a panel of unaffiliated exhibitors conveniently located.

Fair Clearance

5. No exhibitor shall demand nor be granted in any license agreement clearance, in time or area beyond that which under all circumstances and conditions then prevailing in the locality where the exhibitor's theatre is situated, is reasonable and fair.

Maximum Clearance

6. No exhibitor in territories where there exists a maximum clearance and zoning schedule shall receive clearance in excess of the applicable maximum therein provided.

Sales Policy

7. If a distributing company represents a sales policy as a national policy any deviation therefrom must be publicly announced.

Allocation of Certain Film Rentals

8. If feature pictures are licensed by a distributor under a license agreement by which the distributor has the right to assign pictures at a later date to different price group or classification, or in which pictures are not described or identified, permitting the distributor to assign pictures not so identified to various film rentals, then the distributor shall, at the conclusion of the contract, provided the exhibitor is not in default thereunder, and provided the percentage of the total number of features contracted for in each price group has not been released by the distributor, adjust the total film rental on the basis of the average price per picture for the total number of pictures contracted for.

Tying In Shorts With Features

9. Distributors shall not sell an exhibitor short subjects as a condition of contracting for feature pictures, or vice versa.

Dating Restrictions

10. No distributor shall refuse to date feature pictures because of a delinquency in the dating of the short subjects, nor refuse to date shorts on account of delinquency in the playing arrangement of the feature contract.

Unreasonable Discriminations

11. Unreasonable discriminations in favor of chain theatres as against individual theatres, as to film rentals, the terms upon which exhibition rights are granted or the availability of prints shall be construed as unfair competition.

Threats and Coercion

12. Threats, intimidation and/or the actual acquisition of theatres by a producer or distributor directly or indirectly, to create unfair competition and/or compel the leasing of pictures at a higher film rental, should be expressly prohibited.

Distributors' Employees

13. No distributor employee shall use his position with the distributor to interfere with the free and competitive buying of pictures by an exhibitor operating a theatre in competition with a theatre in which such employee may have a direct or indirect financial interest.

Offer of Gratuity

14. No exhibitor shall give any gratuity or make any offer or promise of gratuity to a distributor or any representative of any distributor for the purpose of procuring advantages that would not otherwise be procurable or as an inducement to influence such distributor or representative not to deal with competing or other exhibitors.

Inducement to Breach Contract

15. No exhibitor shall seek to induce or induce a distributor or any representative of any distributor to breach any active contract licensing the exhibition of motion pictures with a competing or other exhibitor.

Selective Contracts

16. Any exhibitor entering into a contract for the exhibition of motion pictures which permits the exhibitor to select from the total number of pictures licensed less than eighty-five (85%) of the total number, and to reject the remainder, shall, by written notice to the distributor, reject each of such motion pictures not to exceed the number which may be rejected within twenty-one days after its date of availability in the exchange territory wherein is located the exhibitor's theatre, and failing to give such notice of rejection, each of such pictures shall be deemed to have been selected. Where this section conflicts with the local zoning and clearance schedule, the latter shall prevail.

Overselling

17. Distributors shall refrain from selling additional pictures to a theatre endeavoring to buy more pictures than it can reasonably use with the intent of depriving a competing theatre of needed attractions. Where such a condition exists:

(A) The exhibitor shall be required to release pictures on selective service contracts promptly.

(B) The local arbitration board shall be empowered and shall investigate such situations on complaint and, if necessary, secure the release of pictures to correct the situation.

Overbuying

18. No exhibitor shall contract for the license to exhibit more motion pictures than such exhibitor reasonably requires for exhibition in any theatre or theatres operated by such exhibitor and with the effect of depriving a competing exhibitor from contracting to exhibit such excess number of motion pictures.

Allocation of Product

19. No exhibitor shall agree with any other exhibitor or other exhibitors to allocate among them the motion pictures of distributors for the purpose of eliminating fair competition between such exhibitors in the bidding and negotiating for the motion pictures of such distributors.

Disclosure of Contract Terms

20. Any disclosure or exchange of film rental information, the purpose of which is to fix, maintain or reduce film rentals, by concerted action, expressed or implied, is an unfair trades practice and shall not be permitted.

Misuse of Signed Application

21. No exhibitor shall use any signed application for a license to exhibit the motion picture of a distributor with the effect or purpose of inducing any other distributor to lower the license fees of the motion pictures of such other distributors.

Transfer To Avoid Contracts

22. No exhibitor shall transfer the ownership or possession of a theatre operated by any such exhibitor for the purpose of avoiding uncompleted contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures at such theatre.

Cut-Rate Competition

23. Distributors shall refuse to permit the exhibition of their pictures at unreasonably low admission prices in competition with a theatre charging a fair admission scale.

Block Booking

24. In contracts for the exhibition of groups of ten or more pictures the exhibitor shall have the privilege of rejecting at least 15 per cent of the number of pictures contracted for without payment therefor.

Substitutions

25. The exhibitor shall not be required to accept for any picture described in the schedule as a picture of a star, or of a director, or based upon a specified story, book or play, any other picture with a material substitution of a star or director, story, book or play. Nothing herein contained shall limit the right of the distributor to change the title of any picture, or as respects any picture based upon any story, book or play, prevent the making of any alterations, changes in or adaptations thereof.

It shall also be mandatory upon the distributor to give a reasonable notification to the exhibitor of all instances where an entirely different feature picture is being substituted.

Score Charges

26. There shall be no score charges. This provision shall not apply to existing contracts.

Playing Arrangements

27. Distributors shall not require any specific day or days of the week for exhibitions.

Non-theatrical Competition

28. Non-theatrical accounts are unfair competition and shall not be sold by the distributors.

Exclusive Runs

29. This is a difficult question. Many hundreds of small towns have always shown pictures exclusive run in their town for the simple reason that there were no subsequent-run theatre or places for exhibition.

It is very difficult to define in any code this matter in such a way as to fairly correct an abuse that might develop some time in the future as the result of this policy, and at the same time not interfere with the operation of theatres where technically an exclusive run may be well justified because of local conditions.

Pictures Violating Production Code

30. No exhibitor shall exhibit any motion picture which is declared to be contrary to and violative of the standards and requirements of production of the Production Code of the Motion Pictures Producers

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Loew's—"Theatres Everywhere." Kentucky—Colonels ditto.

Last week Joseph R. Vogel, Loew circuit executive, succumbed to the title-temptation and accepted a place (there are only a few left) on the staff of Governor Ruby Laffoon, of Kentucky. Present at the ceremony at the Loew-Metro headquarters in Times Square were a few of the numerous titled dignitaries of the Loew organization: Colonel E. A. Schiller, General Nicholas M. Schenck, Major Edward Bowes, "Admiral" Felix F. Feist, Sergeant Leopold Friedman, Judge I. Frey. Because they are different, not holding any titles, Louis K. Sidney and Charlie Moskowitz were allowed to present the notification document to Mr. Vogel.

"Vogel's colonelcy brings on complications," read the announcement from the company. And Joe is said to be worried. He now outranks his boss, Colonel Schiller, whose title comes as a retired officer. However, Colonel Vogel will not insist upon a salute from Colonel Schiller, at least when the big chief calls Joe into the front office.

Colonel Vogel will feel his first shell-fire next spring, when the portly General Charles Clyde Pettijohn marches his enormous army of Kentucky colonels southward for regular maneuvers (at the Derby).

Renewed activities recently at Paramount's Long Island studio remind us of the days some seven years ago, when the company closed the plant and transferred to Hollywood Bebe Daniels, Thomas Meighan and Richard Dix—the last of the old eastern players to go west. Previously, each had refused on numerous occasions to travel coastward, and had clauses written in their contracts which would assure their remaining in New York. However, someone at Paramount's home office eventually did a good job of salesmanship and the trio agreed.

Arriving on the lot one sunny morning, the trio were shown to their dressing rooms. Tommy Meighan would not enter his until Benjamin P. Schulberg removed a bright red chair. Miss Daniels balked, too, because her room was smaller than Pola Negri's. So "B.P." built her a bungalow. Nor was Mr. Dix satisfied. "What," he shouted, "no music?" "Get me a graphophone, and pronto, too; how do you expect me to put on makeup without music?"

That was seven years ago.

Frequently we have referred to the difficult job that is M. H. Aylesworth's, what with one hand working to bring people out of their homes to RKO theatres, and the other trying to keep them in to hear NBC's radio programs. Another form of radio competition which Mr. Aylesworth has to contend with as head of Radio theatres is the attendance every day of thousands of hero-worshippers at the NBC studios while air headliners are broadcasting. NBC encourages this interest of listeners. RKO tries to discourage it.

"Guests" present at broadcasts during June at NBC's two studio buildings in New York totaled 25,000. Metronome said last week that there are some 600 stations throughout the nation. An average monthly attendance of only 5,000 means that yearly about 9,000,000 people are entertained in radio studios, and not in motion picture theatres. To say nothing about the millions of "listeners-in."

Reminded of the Ivory Soap slogan, "It floats," Metro's Scotch Billy Ferguson is thinking of asking the soap people's research department to invent an Ivory golf ball.

PARAMOUNT'S EDITORIAL BOARD all sat around and sighed for something new. Suddenly, and quite unexpectedly, someone got an idea. They all jumped to their feet. Labor pains, and then there was born a notion: "What will life and love be like fifty years from now?' They called it "unique!" "daring!" "outstanding!" But let George Palmer Putnam, of the editorial board, tell about it:

"Imagine this world picturized . . . dramatized . . . not in fanciful dreamings . . . but from actual forecasts by the world's greatest scientific minds. Think of this subject humanized on the screen . . . portrayed in super drama . . . in spectacular adventure . . . in glowing romance!

Picture for yourself, continued the excited Palmer Putnam . . . "a city stretching from Manhattan to Boston, or from Los Angeles to San Francisco—cities devoid of wintry blasts . . . of summer heat! . . . men and women who live to be 130 years old! . . . synthetic clothing that manufactures its own weather . . . men and women knowing the joys of youth for 60 or 70 years . . . selective breeding in humans as well as animals . . . the Mayor of your city proclaiming rain for Tuesday of next week and Thursday of the following week—and picture the weather man complying! . . . New York to London in three hours" . . . (But there was nary a word about the future of that old debbil, double bills.)

Mr. Putnam said at the outset that the idea will be picturized, "not in fanciful dreamings." Production, then, will evidently be in the east, where there's nothing but plain dreamings.

Nor did Paramount's creators of celluloid confine their imagination to "Fifty Years from Now." Listen:

"They knew the minute, the hour and the day the world would come to an end, and hundreds would be destroyed! . . . A sinister, thrilling whisper stalks the telegraph trails of the world" (there were no apologies made to Western Union's Newcomb Carlton) . . . "Two scientists in confirmed calculations discover that two great planets have jumped their orbits and are racing through space to collide with the world . . .

"'The League of Last Days' is formed . . . They plot a miraculous escape in which only the fit will survive . . . Millions turn to the church . . . Other millions turn savage . . . All creation becomes a shambles . . .

"And then the crash—the end of the world . . . Catacylsmic! Staggering Irresistible! Fascinating!

"Visualize the colorful, vivid, terrifying spectacle of a civilization sentenced to annihilation . . . millions praying for salvation . . . millions spending their last days in orgies."—That's "The End of the World"—to be directed by Cecil Blount DeMille!

Hollywood's creators are entitled to take full advantage of their narrating liberties to tell about the end of the world in one breath, and the same world fifty years from now, in another, but, boy, what imagination! Anyway, in view of the fact that the end comes first, which might interfere with Mr. Roosevelt's plans to restore normalcy, we refer the matter to his new recovery man, Mr. Frank C. Walker, who will know what to do about it.

Louisville exhibitors are up against some new competition. There's a lot of rheumatism and neuritis this season, which Louisvillians blame on green 3.2 beer and chilled theatres. One of the causes of the pains can hardly be disputed.

President Roosevelt actually found a whole clam in some clam chowder—thanks to Merlin Aylesworth's National Broadcasting Company. When the Presidential yacht dropped anchor at Nantucket, Austin Strong, of NBC, was on hand and saw to it that Mr. Roosevelt's appetite was appeased with a mess of Nantucket's famous clam chowder. Later the President was inducted into full membership in The Wharf Rats, a club which belies its name by being the most exclusive in the world. When the Amberjack II sailed out into the deep, the club's burgee was flowing from its mainmast. The record does not show whether Mr. Roosevelt raised the standard to celebrate his induction or the finding of the clam.

One of New York's bright tabloid columnists poked fun the other day at RKO for spending a lot of money bringing 20 players and technicians all the way from Hollywood to Annapolis to film the Naval Acadamy graduation for "Midshipman Jack," only to arrive two days too late. The facts, as gathered from Radio headquarters, indicate that the columnist was wrong—again. Arrangements had been made for Pathe News to cover the event both for newsreel purposes and for the feature. Players appearing in "Midshipman Jack," or in any other picture, would not be permitted to participate directly in the graduation ceremonies. RKO brought the company east to shoot atmospheric scenes.

Adolph Hitler's decree governing the personnel of the motion picture business in Germany literally means, "Show me your grandmother and I'll tell you if you can work."

Nazi-fication of the Berlin film industry finally took place last week-end. All workers were ordered to show proof of their ancestry as far back as their grandparents. Passport, birth certificate and proof of religion of grandparents must be submitted for inspection to Mr. Hitler's "brown shirts"—or else.

J. R. GRAINGER NAMED UNIVERSAL SALES HEAD

Garyn Associated With E. Schwartz

W. P. ("Pat") Garyn became associated on Monday with Master Art Products, as vice-president and general manager. E. Schwartz, president of Master Art, announcing that Mr. Garyn had acquired an interest in the company, said: "In line with the new and widened marketing possibilities in the motion picture industry, Master Art Products will launch its 1933-34 season with an expanded distribution system and an increased release schedule, including both features and novelties. Mr. Garyn will take charge of distribution and assume certain other executive duties."

At the same time, Mr. Schwartz announced conclusion of negotiations whereby Mr. Edwin C. Hill, radio news commentator, will appear in a series of 13 featurettes, to be known as "The Human Side of the News." This is the first addition to the increased lineup, which also will embrace the regular releases of "Melody Makers," "Organlogues" and "Puzzlegraphs."

The new association of Mr. Garyn with Schwartz also signals the entrance of Master Art into the feature field. No definite number has been set for release in 1933-34.

The company already operates its own offices in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Atlanta, Dallas and New Orleans. Mr. Garyn immediately will set about expanding the distribution system.

Pat Garyn goes to Master Art from National Screen Service, where, for six years, he acted as general manager in charge of distribution. Starting in the motion picture business some 15 years ago, in the sales division of Fox, Mr. Garyn later was with Goldwyn and with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

New Independent Group Names Board of Directors

The new Association of the Motion Picture Industry, organization of independent producers and distributors, elected a new board of directors at a meeting in New York this week. The organization voted to restrict membership to producers and distributors, but will take suggestions for a code from independent exhibitors as well.

The members of the board include: Lewen Pizor, Phil Meyers, Frank Wilson, Lester Adler, Bob Savini, Jack Bellman, P. A. Powers, Pop Korson and Arthur Greenblatt, Ben Berk, Frank Ferrone, Cy Braunstein, J. F. Kessler, John Weber, Al Mannon, Sam Flax, Harry Thomas, Jack Berkowitz, Bennie Mills, Herbert Ebenstein, George Batcheller and Max Gluckman. Eight additional members to complete a board of 30 will be elected later.

New Jersey Allied To Convene in September

Allied of New Jersey will hold its annual convention at Atlantic City on September 6, 7 and 8, it was decided at a meeting of the unit in New York this week.

Other matters taken up at the meeting were the industry code and the Electrical Research Products, Inc., decision handed down at Wilmington.

Former Distribution Executive of Fox Entered Business Handling "Cabiria" Roadshow; Was Thos. Ince's General Manager

James R. Grainger assumed charge of distribution of Universal Pictures on Monday. In announcing his appointment as general sales manager, Carl Laemmle, president, let it be known that for years he has wanted Mr. Grainger in his organization, "and only recently events shaped themselves to make this possible." Mr. Grainger resigned some months ago as sales head of Fox, settling his contract, which still had about two years to run.

"Every effort was made by Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane and Mr. Grainger to induce L. J. Schlaifer, sales manager, to stay with Universal," Universal's announcement said. "Mr. Schlaifer resigns with the respect and well wishes of the organization he directed." He will take a vacation before announcing his plans for the future, although he will not leave Universal's home office for several days, during which he will be available to Mr. Grainger.

Sees Bullish Market Ahead

"I am delighted," said Mr. Laemmle, "to have the opportunity of announcing Mr. James R. Grainger as our new general sales manager. I have admired him and his work for years. I feel, too, that this is a very auspicious time, both for Universal and for Mr. Grainger. It is a time when leadership of the type of which he is capable may produce unbounded good, not only for Universal but for the industry. I feel confident that we are entering a bullish market."

James R. Grainger was born in New York City and was educated in Boston. Entering the show business while still in his early teens, he became an advance man and publicity representative for road companies, circuses and other outdoor attractions. His first work in motion pictures was the handling of "Cabiria," one of the first "big" roadshows. His sales career started with Edison Talking Pictures, for which he covered the western territory, with headquarters at San Franicsco. Later he became general manager of Thomas Ince Pictures, going to Fox upon the death of Mr. Ince.

Organized Neilan Company

After one year with Fox, assisting Winfield Sheehan, Mr. Grainger resigned and organized Marshall Neilan Productions. During his association with Mr. Neilan's company, Mr. Grainger represented Charles Chaplin on distribution of "The Kid" and other pictures and also represented William Randolph Hearst in the publisher's motion picture activities with Famous Players. He became vice-president and general manager of the old Goldwyn company, resigning that post in 1924 to head Fox sales.

In 1930, the board of directors of Fox Film elected Mr. Grainger a vice-president in complete charge of sales and distribution throughout the United States and Canada, from which post he resigned in May, 1933.

Fox Will "Dub" Foreign Versions in Italy, Spain

"Dubbing" of Fox pictures in Italian and Spanish will be handled in those countries, as a result of arrangements concluded abroad by Clayton Sheehan, Fox foreign manager, Mr. Sheehan declared on his return last week.

"We have arranged for Western Electric sound recording with Phono Roma in Italy and Phono Hispano in Spain," he said. "Fred Bacos, former superintendent of Paramount's Joinville studio, has formed an independent producing company in Paris. We have contracted to take his pictures up to six for the French market. He will produce at Joinville."

Louis Hyman, of All-Star Feature Distributors of Los Angeles and San Francisco, long associated with Sol Lesser, will assume charge of Principal's sales activities, in Mr. Wilson's absence.

FILMS MUST BREAK SOUND BARRIER TO SPREADING GOOD WILL: SMIRNOV

Executive of Amkino, Russian Soviet's Distributing Medium, Calls for Test of Audience Response to Foreign Pictures

In a plea for greater internationalism in motion pictures, Victor Smirnov, head of Amkino, the Russian Soviet's film distribution center in the United States, spoke over a nationwide network of the National Broadcasting Company last week. It is Mr. Smirnov's contention that when sound came into existence it immediately set up a formidable barrier of language to other nations, and with it the motion picture lost the greatest contributing factor to its art: pantomime.

"At no time in history has there been such a crying need for understanding among the peoples of the world as at the present moment," Mr. Smirnov said. "There is no better way to foster and encourage this understanding, I believe, than by creating a cultural exchange between countries, by stimulating the exchange of folk experiences, lores, customs, tradition and aspirations.

"Literature, drama, painting, the cinema—all in their own way have created and fostered this international exchange of experiences. In their own way each has brought peoples closer to one another and cemented the bonds of international understanding.

U. S. Films Influence World

"The American movie has influenced the cinema in other countries; this is well known. Masters like Griffith, Lubitsch, Chaplin have had a vast influence and they belong to all the world. For the movie is the art of the millions, it gives popular and effective expression to the world view and the aspirations of a people.

"It is a young art, and, like every child, it suffers from infantile diseases. In the very first period of its life, the only language that the film could avail itself of was gesture. The dizzy speed of this infant's growth has left the effect of an earthquake. From converted stores the film art and industry has grown to palaces like Radio City. During this time the child learned to speak."

Obstacles raised by the advent of sound were manifold, declared Mr. Smirnov. "Speech created the national barriers of language; the coming of sound to the film destroyed the very internationalism that had created one of the specific virtues of movie art. Directors have become so engrossed with speech that they forget that the movement and gesture are fundamental to screen art. Photographed theatre, in great part, has replaced those elements that made the cinema a distinct art.

"With the development of sound the culture of gesture was arrested. Our child became sick. He lost his expression and became weaker with every picture.

"Careful observers, however, already note a new trend in the use of sound and dialogue. Movements are afoot in the film capitals of the world to limit dialogue only to a necessary minimum. We may hope that the photographed stage will soon be far behind us.

"This, unfortunately, does not end all the problems for our child. He still has to suffer through with the measles. I am afraid that is what the film is doing today."

Mr. Smirnov warned against stereotyped production.

"Today there is dearth of vision, of freshness, in film fare," he declared. "One photoplay resembles every other one all too painfully. In countless pictures directors and writers repeat again and again the same situations, the same ideas, the same characterizations. It is natural, therefore, that the movie has lost so much of its appeal.

Must Offer Something New

"The difficulties that the motion picture is confronted with today are ascribed by many to have its roots in the economic disturbances the world is now faced with. This is true in part. However, depression or no depression, until the film can offer something new to the audience, the audience problem will exist. Today especially the world is confronted with a crass reality. They want to see this before them on the screen. They are anxious to grapple with their problems. But most of the present-day film production is completely divorced from reality.

"Among the mediocre films turned out so regularly, the productions of master craftsmen shine luminously. But who sees these masterfilms? Only a limited audience. Because of the national barrier that dialogue created, these masterfilm men have been limited to their own nations and to a certain rare group in foreign lands. This reason as well as the equally important structure for the distribution of films has limited the international aspect of the film. But growth and progress have always followed upon an international exchange of experiences and technical development; today each film capital has built a Chinese Wall about itself.

"A master painter like Cezanne would never have been possible if the work of Rembrandt, Raphael and others had not been distributed throughout the world. Present-day American literature has drawn on Tolstoy and Dostoievski and Flaubert."

The motion picture has no parallel as a messenger of worldwide goodwill, the radio audience was told. "Because the film by its very form can speak the most popular and effective language in the world, it is the best carrier of international goodwill," Mr. Smirnov said. "It can interpret and explain one people to another. But there are valid economic reasons, beside the cultural, that should make for the development and international exchange of films.

No Audience Response Test

"To begin with, no test as to audience response has ever been taken. In this regard, I would like to call upon the radio audience to write to us care of this station, and tell us what they think of foreign films. if they would go see them, should these films play in neighborhood houses. I, for one, believe that over the national circuits, the five or ten great foreign pictures that appear during the year would be very profitable. There is still another economic reason. It does not pay to discover America twice, figuratively speaking. In the isolation of national boundaries, every producer must work out for himself anew problems and techniques that have already been developed in other lands. This is economically wasteful and entirely unnecessary.

"Our child is sick. Maybe it is only growing pains. Still, it must be cured. And one method, I have no doubt, is the international exchange of motion pictures."

Warns Against Isolation Due to Closed National Markets As Factor in Tedious Product; Says World Wants Realism

O'Conner Heads RKO Film Buying; Field Men Shifted

John J. O'Conner, assistant to Phil Reisman, head of the film buying department at RKO, has been moved up to a post in charge of the department. Mr. Reisman is now vice president in charge of theatre operations, having taken over the duties formerly handled by Herschel Stuart, general manager of the circuit until his recent resignation.

Thomas Meehan has been moved from the management of the Albee, Providence, to the post of city manager in Boston for RKO, following the resignation of "Bill" Raynor to join Mort Shea in charge of the Brooklyn Paramount. George French, formerly Meehan's assistant in Providence, is now manager of the Albee.

Independents Merge Sales Facilities Through India

Halmook Film Corporation, Ltd., Calcutta, India, and World Wide Pictures, Ltd., Madras, India, have merged distribution facilities in India, Burma and Ceylon, giving each distributor over 50 pictures for distribution.

Among the product are 10 Allied features, two from Mayfair, Raspin's "Explorers of the World," six from World Wide, eight Monogram, six Monarch, other American independent features and six British.

Film of U. S. During Past 15 Years Ready

"This Is America," a dramatization of America's part in world events during the past 15 years, is having its first run in New York this week at the Rivoli theatre. The continuity, written by Gilbert Seldes, begins before America's entry into the war and works up to a climax of present day America.

Frederic Ullman, Jr., who produced the film, took six months to complete it, during which time he screened and discarded more than a million feet of film from New York, Washington and Hollywood libraries.

AT THE UNITED ARTISTS SALES CONVENTION AT THE DRAKE HOTEL IN CHICAGO

UNITED ARTISTS TO RELEASE 30 TO 40

United Artists will release next season at least 30 features, possibly 40, in addition to 26 short subjects.

The company started its 1933-34 campaigning this week with a flying start, literally and figuratively. Arriving simultaneously at the Drake hotel in Chicago were planes of all sizes and models, bringing "beauteous Goldwyn girls" from New York; sales manager Al Lichtman and executives from the studios in Hollywood, and General Balbo's 96 round-the-world fliers from the shores of Ialy. Mr. Lichtman refused, however, to permit the Goldwyn girls, the Italian fliers, or even Chicago's fair to interfere with the serious business of outlining a program and policies.

Sponsoring the largest feature schedule in its history, announcement came that many new producers and stars will contribute for the first time to the company's program.

Heading the lineup, which is at least three times as large as that of any previous United Artists schedule, will be Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks, each producing one feature. Samuel Goldwyn will make five. Twentieth Century Pictures, organized in the spring by Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, and Darryl Zanuck, will produce at least 12. Edward Small's Reliance Pictures is set for four. There will be several others from independent units, and the Walt Disney cartoons, embracing 13 one-reel Mickey Mouse subjects and a similar number of Silly Symphonies.

Zanuck's Twelve All Set

Each of the 12 Schenck-Zanuck stories has already been purchased. Mr. Zanuck personally will produce, with his own stars and others borrowed from the large studios. The complete 20th Century program includes:

"The Bowery," first release, by Michael L. Simmons and B. R. Solomon, adaptation by Howard Estabrook and James Gleason; featuring Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, George Raft, Fay Wray, Pert Kelton. Raoul Walsh is directing.

"Red Tape,," by Sam Mintz and Maude T Howell, to star George Arliss.

"The Great Rothschild," second Arliss release.

"Moulin Rouge," musical, based on the French play by Lajon de Bri, to star Constance Bennett. Al Dubin and Harry Warren are writing the music.

Constance Bennett will appear in another, details of which were not made known.

"Broadway Thru a Keyhole," by Walter Winchell, with music. Peggy Hopkins Joyce heads the cast, and Lowell Sherman will direct. Adaptation by Graham Baker and Gene Towne.

"Blood Money," original by Rowland Brown.

"Miss Lonely Hearts," novel by Nathaniel West, screen play by Leonard Praskins.

"Trouble Shooters," original by J. R. Bren and Elmer Harris, to be made with cooperation of Bell Telephone.

"Born to Be Bad," based on "Customers' Girls," by Ralph Graves.

"P. T. Barnum," based on the life story of the noted circus man; screen adaptation by John Huston.

"The Unnamed Woman," by Willard Robertson, adapted by Courtenay Terrett, to be directed by Gregory La Cava.

Zanuck's Associates

Associated with Mr. Zanuck are Raymond Griffith, associate producer; Howard Smith, scenario editor, and William Dover, personnel manager. William Goetz is second vice-president and an associate producer. Joseph H. Moskowitz is general manager.

In addition to Raoul Walsh, borrowed from Fox, staff directors of Twentieth Century include Gregory La Cava, Lowell Sherman, Walter Lang, Sidney Lanfield.

Scenarists are Howard Estabrook, Elmer Harris, James Gleason, Arthur Richman, Leonard Praskins, Sam Mintz, John Huston, Graham Baker and Gene Towne, Nunnally Johnson, Henry Lehrman, Laird Doyle, Courtenay Terrett, Michael L. Simmons, Ralph Graves, Harold Long, Rowland Brown and Willard Robertson.

With the signing this week of Constance Cummings, Mr. Zanuck's contract stars now number four. Others are George Arliss, Loretta Young, Constance Bennett. The company also will borrow stars from the large studios, having already taken on Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, George Raft, Fay Wray.

Goldwyn's Plans for New Season

Five features for 1933-34 from Samuel Goldwyn Productions will include:

"The Masquerader," with Ronald Colman, already completed.

"Roman Scandals," Eddie Cantor's all-musical, written by George S. Kaufman and Robert E. Sherwood, adapted by William Anthony McGuire.

"Nana," by Emile Zola, starring Anna Sten, making her American debut.

"Barbary Coast," second Sten feature, from an original by Frances Marion.

An all-star American "Cavalcade" will conclude the Goldwyn series.

Following features from Mary Pickford (to be announced soon), Charles Chaplin (who has written his own story of the mustache and cane vagabond), and Douglas Fairbanks' sequel to "Mark of Zorro," the United Artists program lists four from Edward Small's Reliance company, as follows:

"Joe Palooka," featuring Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Stuart Erwin.

"The Count of Monte Cristo," by Alexander Dumas.

"The Shanghai Gesture," play by John Colton.

"Style," a drama about designers.

"The Emperor Jones" will come from the Krimsky-Cochrane unit.

"Bitter Sweet," Noel Coward's British production, was also purchased.

There will also be two productions made by Alexander Korda and a comedy starring Syd Chaplin.

"The Queen," starring Jeanette MacDonald and Herbert Marshall, also will be released. British and Dominion Film Corporation, Ltd., is making the production.

Walt Disney's cartoons comprise the only shorts on the schedule, and include two series, 13 one reel Mickey Mouse comedies and 13 Silly Symphonies in Technicolor. The new publicity campaign will present all the Disney product as of feature proportions.

Lichtman Presides at Meeting

When the sales staff assembled at the Drake Monday morning, Al Lichtman was on the platform, assisted by Paul Burger, sales executive; Harry Gold, assistant to Mr. Lichtman, and Hal Horne, advertising and publicity director.

Exchange organization and checkup of sales and play-off on 1932-33 product were subjects of the first discussions, followed by an address about the company's sales staff, by Harry Gold.

S. M. Horowitz next addressed the branch managers and then Mr. Lichtman outlined the product for the new season. James Mulvey brought a message from Samuel Goldwyn; Hal Horne spoke on advertising and exploitation.

Preceding an explanation of short subject material by Walt Disney, Monroe Greenthal and Ed Finney addressed the delegates on exhibitor cooperation and the press.

On Wednesday morning the convention opened with a discussion, engaged in by all branch managers and salesmen, about future sales policies, including terms, checking percentage, exploitation and accessories. Mr. Schenck closed the morning session.

Later in the day, the management held private conferences with division managers, which were followed by addresses to the entire staff by Haskell Masters, Ben Fish, S. M. Horowitz, Charles Stern, J. Von Tilzer, Carroll Trowbridge and E. J. Smith. The convention adjourned with a banquet Wednesday night.

United's distribution operation next season will be a division of the country into nine selling districts, as explained to the convention by Al Lichtman. Men from within the ranks were promoted to assume charge of each district.

Jack Goldbar was promoted from manager at Detroit to head the district comprising Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis and Cincinnati. Carl Goe and Gaylor Black were added to the Indianapolis sales staff; Abe Eskin and George Porter were assigned to Cincinnati.

Jack Von Tilzer returns to the company as district manager of Charlotte, Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas. G. R. Frank is transferred as manager from Dallas to New Orleans. Jack Dacy is moved from the home office to the Charlotte sales staff, and Abe Tolkins is switched from Washington to Atlanta on sales.

The New Orleans staff is increased by the assignment of F. Murphy. C. J. Cammer goes to Dallas, while Harold Devlin has been put on in Minneapolis, and Max Weiner at Milwaukee.

New district head over St. Louis, Denver, Kansas City and Omaha, is Sam Horowitz, formerly St. Louis manager. James Hummell was added to the Denver sales staff; A. C. Buchanan shifts from Dallas to Kansas City and A. M. Weinberger is transferred from New Orleans, to St. Louis. A. R. Dietz has also joined Horowitz's staff.

Charles M. Stern was promoted from manager at Boston to district manager in charge of Boston and New Haven. Charles Derbin was promoted from salesman to Boston manager. George Hager and Lou Wechsler were added to the sales staff.

Hiram Wilson is the new booker and office manager at Pittsburgh, succeeding Leonard Cantor, who was transferred to the sales force. Ed Kennedy has been added to the Seattle office.

United Artists dropped the plan of district managers last year, when six such posts were replaced by Paul Burger, as division manager for the East, and Paul Lazarus, in charge of the West.

Lichtman Talks About Problems

Mr. Lichtman stressed the fact that the company has withstood the various economic disasters, and voiced the confidence of a definite upturn in business in the coming 12 months as reflected in the decision to distribute more pictures than ever before had been marketed by the company.

The company's selling policy will be made flexible next season, with branch managers authorized to accept percentages, or flat rental, dependent upon the local situation.

In a talk before the delegates Tuesday, after flying from Hollywood, Joseph M. Schenck discussed new product. He said that it was unnecessary to talk about Samuel Goldwyn or Charles Chaplin pictures. "They don't know how to produce pictures in any other way than they do now. Goldwyn is only interested in getting great pictures. I have pleaded with him to save money, but he feels that he knows better how to make his pictures.

"We are very fortunate in acquiring Darryl Zanuck as an associate," continued Mr. Schenck. "He now has the capital to produce just as he pleases."

Mr. Schenck told the salesmen that great effort will be required on their part to realize proper returns on the new product. "I hope to pay you handsomely," he said. "We have no desire to keep you down. When things start picking up and we begin to make money, you will make money, too."

Harry Goetz, of Reliance, and John Krimsky, of Krimsky & Cochrane, arrived in Chicago from New York by plane late Tuesday.

In addition to salesmen and managers from the six Canadian branches, delegates included studio officials, home office executives, producers' representatives, and exchange operatives and salesmen from each of the 24 offices in the United States.

Warners Set 60 Films; Others Advance Plans

Conclusion of United Artists convention Wednesday night in Chicago left but one large distributor, Warner Brothers, to announce a product lineup for 1933-34. The Warner management finally decided this week to release at least 60 features during the new season, and set August 1 as the date when plans will be made known to exhibitors in detail. Major Albert Warner, vice-president, said: "In addition we shall produce one and two-reel short subjects and a number of special productions."

Fifteen features or so will be made in England. Dubbing will be continued in Italy, Spain and France but production has been stopped in Germany.

Warners during the week made arrangements to hold a series of regional meetings with district and branch managers only. Andy Smith will preside at the New York conference, on July 31 and August 1, and at Toronto, August 7 and 8. Gradwell Sears will have charge at Chicago, August 3 and 4. In addition, Norman Moray will discuss Vitaphone shorts and S. Charles Einfeld will outline advertising campaigns.

There are also plans to hold a national trade showing, for all exhibitors, of at least 15 new features, some time in September. By that time the company will have completed at least 30 of the 60 scheduled for 1933-34. Major Warner said these trade showings will be held at every one of the company's branches throughout the United States and Canada. The idea was inaugurated last season by Warners, and calls for heavy ballyhooing in each of the key cities.

Announcement by United Artists at the Chicago convention of a program of at least 30 features and 26 shorts, brought the total number of 1933-34 releases already definitely announced by eight large companies, to 367 features, 526 single reels and 264 two-reelers. Schedules of these companies compare with the current season as follows:

SMALL TOWNS STAGING BUSINESS COMEBACK

Dark and Part-Time Theatres Being Restored as Competition of Large Circuits Wanes; Distribution Agents Fined

The small-town show business is on the eve of a revival, following a three-year period of inertia. Distributors' representatives in the field, surveying the effects of nationwide theatre decentralization, and watching the favorable reactions to the government's program for bolstering the business of agriculture, declare that the small town is coming back.

With a good yield in prospect and the sharp rise in basic commodity prices benefiting all branches of agriculture, the fall outlook for box offices in small communities is held more cheerful than at any time since demoralization set in as a result of the depression. Having long ago adjusted themselves to conditions, the Middlewest, particularly, is expected to feel the effects of recovery first.

Typical of the observations of mid-western distribution officials is that of Max Roth, Columbia district manager, who returned to Kansas City last week after a first-hand observation of the situation during a 3,000-mile trek through a dozen middle and southwestern states. Stopping at dozens of cities, principally St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Milwaukee and Minneapolis, where he talked both with theatre owners and merchants, Mr. Roth found that the dark outlook of a year ago had given way to marked optimism. Despite the drouth that has left its ravages in some section of the Southwest, crops elsewhere looked good, he said.

"Even if the farmer has a smaller crop yield this year," as provided in President Roosevelt's program to eliminate surpluses, "he will get more for it, and if he gets anywhere near a fair price, small town show business will be revived," Roth predicted.

Already dark houses and those operating part-time are being restored, and with the competition of national circuits reduced to a new low level as a result of decentralization, independent owners in the small towns are beginning to see prospects of good business, beginning in the new season.

Although practically all companies will abandon the production of western features for 1933-34, with Universal the principal exception among the larger companies, the relighting of dark houses in the small towns is expected by distributors' field representatives to restore the western feature to its former prominence. The sharp fall-off in rental returns on westerns, as a result of the very small-town situation which now is being alleviated, caused distributors to start abandoning the marketing of outdoor subjects earlier this year.

Westerns were made for the towns, reasons the sales staff in the field. Fridays and Saturdays were always western days at picture houses in the smaller communities. But, although that has not been the case during the agricultural slump, by fall, however, a return to westerns is expected to set in, keeping pace with the box office recovery in the small places.

"Regardless of what others want, the small-town masses demand the action that westerns give them," said Mr. Roth. "And the masses are right. This is a Woolworth amusement, built up by the small individual purchaser."

Fox Stockholders To Meet July 21

The meetings of stockholders of Fox Film Corporation, originally scheduled for July 1 and July 3, will be held on Friday and Saturday, July 21 and 22, in New York. Postponement of the meetings was by order of the New York supreme court, following suit brought by two stockholders, who attacked the pending plan of reorganization for the company, on which the stockholders are to decide, and asked an injunction and the appointment of a receiver for Fox Film Corporation.

In a second letter to stockholders as to the meetings, Sidney R. Kent, Fox president, sought the support of stockholders for the reorganization plan. After reviewing the situation involved in the postponement of the meetings originally scheduled, Mr. Kent outlined the refinancing plan, relative to an amount of approximately $12,000,000 currently payable, out of a total debt approximating $42,000,000.

Mr. Kent also reviewed the denial by Justice Sheintag of the supreme court of the motions for an injunction and receiver, and quoted at length from the decision of the court in which the plan was commended. Mr. Kent closed his letter with a strong recommendation that the plan be approved, and urged the mailing of proxies.

A creditors' meeting for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, scheduled for last week, has been postponed until August 3, due to the illness of Federal Judge Mack.

Alan Freedman Is Head of Laboratories Association

new season. Eastern offices of Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation were opened in the Paramount building. Financing and studio space have been acquired, he said, and negotiations concluded for the 12 stories.

Columbia conventioners at Los Angeles were told that at least six roadshows will be released next season.

Educational concluded a deal with Empire Films, Ltd., for distribution of its product in Canada, effective July 24. Oscar Hanson heads Regal, which has six offices in the Dominion.

S. R. Kent, president of Fox, dispatched Eric Pommer to Paris, where he will make his headquarters as European producing chief for the company. Production will start August 15 on an indefinite number of foreign talkers. At the same time, Fox announced 13 features for release in the first quarter of 1933-34.

Arthur Hopkins Enters Field

Arthur Hopkins, noted stage producer, will enter motion pictures, producing at least one in the east. Roland Young will be co-starred in the first, "Buried Alive," by Arnold Bennett.

Sam Jaffee resigned from the Radio production staff to make films on his own. "The Mad Dog of Europe" will be his first.

Majestic Pictures set July 29 as a convention date, meeting in Chicago, where a schedule of 12 will be detailed to franchise holders.

W. Ray Johnston, president, and Eddie Golden, sales manager of Monogram, were concluding a series of regional conventions with franchise holders.

Production on Paramount's 1933-34 product, which calls for 65 features, got under way with six films before the cameras. The company's annual sales drive was extended from one week to three, starting August 27.

Perfex Pictures announced it is releasing 12 Stan Laurel comedies with synchronized score.

Herbert Ebenstein's new Resolute Pictures will distribute 12 features, to be called "The Mastercraft Twelve," and including: "Meet Suydam Smith," by Louis Joseph Vance; "That's Life," by Whitney Bolton; "Substitute Prisoner," by Max Marcin; "That Hollywood Redhead," by Tom Gibson; "The Eugenic Baby," by Gerald Bacon; "Adventurous Sex," by Howard Estabrook; "School for Scandal," by R. B. Sheridan; "Stepsisters," by Gilbert Seward; "Sorcery," by Louis Joseph Vance; "Beauty Contest," by Edward I. Green; "Angels Without Wings," by Paul Perez, and "Auctioned off," by Vivien Gray. Associated with Mr. Ebenstein are Alfred T. Mannon, vice-president in charge of production; Alec Moss, vice-president in charge of advertising and sales promotion.

Universal completed arrangements whereby a series of 13 "Goofytone Newsreels" will be added to the 1933-34 schedule, to be produced by Gem Pictures. The idea "spoofs the regular newsreel style in humorous fashion," said Universal.

"Ike" Libson Plans New Circuit in Cincinnati

"Ike" Libson and Ben L. Heidingsfeld have chartered the Daco Theatres, Inc., in Cincinnati, to operate a circuit of houses when acquired. The company has negotiated a lease on the Strand, in Dayton, recently turned back to the owners by RKO. The theatre has been entirely redecorated, including revamping the stage, at a cost of $20,000, according to Mr. Libson, with reopening set for September, when vaudeville may be used as an added attraction.

UNIFIED THEATRE OPERATION SOUGHT

18 were notes receivable from Film Production Corporation endorsed and discounted by Paramount Publix, $1,500,000, due January 30, 1933, and $11,868,932 due March 29.

Investments in Affiliates

Advances to and investments in affiliated companies embraced one of the longest records in the trustees' newest report, and listed a total of $41,158,643 in advances to companies, and $106,611,558 as investments in these subsidiaries and affiliates.

Advances to Minnesota Amusement Co. were listed at $2,499,257; Olympia Theatres, $4,392,-896; Publix Enterprises, $1,056,573; Saenger Theatres, $557,639. Investments in these companies on April 18 were: Olympia, $7,654,046; Publix Enterprises, $14,030,000; Saenger, $6,992,000. An advance to Skouras Super Theatres was listed at $361,962, and an investment of $187,000.

Advances to Paramount Pictures and subsidiaries listed at $3,447,820, included: $1,653,-531 to Paramount Pictures and the rest to subsidiaries. These included among others $259,000 to Paramount International; Paramount News, $441,000; Paramount Pictures Distributing, $177,000; Paramount Products, $909,000. An investment of $1,200,000 in Paramount Pictures Corporation was recorded.

The investment of Paramount Publix in Balaban and Katz was listed at $20,659,000. Other theatre investments were recorded as follows: Dent Theatres, $1,748,000; Famous Players Canadian, $17,482,000; Flag Amusement, $4,206,500; New England Theatres, $1,064,000; Paramount Properties, $4,291,000; Publix Northwest Theatres, $5,100,000; Butterfield Theatres, $350,000; Marks Brothers Theatres, $1,547,000; Penncom Corp., $6,300,000; Publix Netoco, $1,220,000. With other investments, the total reached some $76,000,000.

Certain Exhibits Rejected

Advances to these theatre affiliates, totaling $28,837,000, included, principally, $1,040,000 to Attica Film; $2,000,000 to Brooklyn Paramount; $1,600,000 to New England Theatres; $5,000,000 to Paramount Broadway; $5,073,000 to Publix Theatres Corporation of New York, and about $410,000, both to Skouras Brothers Enterprises and to Skouras Publix Theatres Corporation. However, "these figures are not to be regarded as a reliable indication of the value of such advances and investments," said the trustees' report.

Referee Davis is understood to have rejected certain exhibits which were filed by the trustees, because of a dispute over auditing. It was said that these exhibits as taken from books of the corporation had not been audited. They have to do with a schedule of inventory of motion picture films taken over by the trustees, also a schedule of advances to outside producers as these advances stood on the books on April 18. Another exhibit rejected was a schedule of all accounts receivable (other than those receivable from outside producers and from subsidiary and affiliated companies).

Receivership Attorneys Unpaid

As regards the accounts receivable schedule, the trustees' report said, "The trustees are unable at present to determine whether adequate reserves have been set up against these accounts, or as to the collectibility of the same." It was said that two of the largest accounts receivable, one of $73,809 from Joe Cooper, and another from Harold B. Franklin, in the amount of $61,000, are disputed. Also, the account receivable from Fox Film, in the amount of $461,560, is disputed.

The trustees have not yet made any payments to the attorneys or accountants retained by them, nor have any fees been paid to equity receivers of Paramount Publix, or to their attorneys or accountants. The report said. "Certain charges have been made by subsidiaries of Paramount Pictures Corporation to the trustees for payroll and other overhead expenses, but to the extent, if any, that such charges may have been properly made, they will be applied against the receivables of the trustees from Paramount Pictures and its subsidiaries."

The trustees made known the reason for naming George Schaefer general manager of the domestic subsidiaries of the bankrupt Paramount Publix. Basically, it had to do with their decision to coordinate the various activities both of the bankrupt and of its subsidiaries, "otherwise steps might have been taken in one field which might prove seriously detrimental to the interests of the estate in another."

"In view of the fact that the present is the period in which motion pictures for the year commencing August 1, 1933, are currently sold, Mr. Schaefer has been obliged to devote the bulk of his time to activities in this direction," said the trustees' report. "However," it continued, "the matters of general administrative reorganization and of salary adjustments are being taken up, and it is believed that substantial progress along these lines will be made at an early date."

The report then outlined the reasons for forming the Advisory Committee on Theatre Reorganization, headed by S. A. Lynch, which was ordered to expand the activities of the then "inadequate" real estate department which had been maintained by the bankrupt and its subsidiaries. Other committee members are R. W. Scott, Y. F. Freeman, Austin C. Keough, and M. F. Gowthorpe. Mr. Keough was Paramount general counsel and Mr. Gowthorpe was comptroller.

This committee, while not authorized to bind the trustees, "has been directed to give constant attention to the various real estate and theatre holdings and to prepare and negotiate plans for the reorganization of such properties when acquired."

The Theatre Situation

The trustees were unable to present a consolidated balance sheet showing the condition of theatre subsidiaries, because of the bankruptcy and receivership of many of the real estate and theatre subsidiaries and because of and decentralizing of these properties. However, the two most important companies of the bankrupt which are engaged in exhibition and which are not in bankruptcy or receivership, including Balaban and Katz Corporation, operating 75 theatres, and Famous Players Canadian, with 150 houses, were treated at length in the report.

Attached was a consolidated balance sheet of Balaban and Katz, and a surplus account and consolidated profit and loss account, which for the 53 weeks ending Dec. 31 ,1932, showed a profit from operations totaling $161,882, which, after interest, depreciation, dividends, resulted in a net loss of $993,638. Total surplus carried to balance sheet was $6,462,000. Assets of B. & K. were listed at $23,610,000, including current assets of $623,000; fixed assets of $21,382,000; deposits to secure contracts, $771,-000; investments and advances, $629,000; deferred charges, $203,272.

Famous Players Canadian Corporation earned a profit in operations totaling $1,543,700, for the 12 months ending Dec. 31, 1932, which, after charges, interests, depreciation and interest, represented a net profit of $22,984. Assets were listed at $24,000,000, including: cash, $569,000, and other total current and working assets of $1,030,000.

Four important theatre subsidiaries listed by the trustees as being in bankruptcy or in receivership on July 17, included Publix Enterprises, Inc., Olympia Theatres, Inc., Minnesota Amusement Corporation, and Saenger Theatres, Inc.

Publix Enterprises is a company holding the stocks of some 126 theatre companies, which had interests in more than 300 houses. It was acquired by Paramount Publix in 1919 and represents investments and advances aggregating $15,000,000. The trustees said that while negotiations have not as yet culminated in a single plan of reorganization, it is believed probable that an agreement will be reached.

Important subsidiaries of Publix Enterprises include Publix Salt Lake City, A. H. Blank Theatres, Southern Enterprises, Inc., Tennessee Enterprises, Sparks Theatres. The trustees detailed activities involving these various groups in decentralization moves and the like.

Olympia theatres owned 40 New England houses. The trustees of this bankrupt group will be able to continue without borrowing money, it was said.

Minnesota Amusement had interests in 60 houses in Minnesota, Wisconsin and the Dakotas. "Information at hand is not sufficient to permit any prediction as to the future of this operation," said the report.

Saenger Theatres operates throughout the South, under trusteeship of E. V. Richards. The Paramount Publix trustees said that the status of this circuit is the same as that of Minnesota Amusement just mentioned.

Studio Subject to Lien

The report said that the West Coast studio property of Paramount Publix at Hollywood is subject to the lien of a mortgage which covers, in addition, the Paramount theatre in Los Angeles, to secure an issue of bonds of which $3,500,000 is now issued and outstanding. A bondholders committee was formed in this case.

The Paramount Hollywood laboratory property was said to be subject to a mortgage in the amount of $833.333.

The report then discussed the Detroit theatre situation, in which are involved new leases in regard to 10 theatres. These houses are now being operated by a new subsidiary.

The trustees reported at length on the litigation involving Film Production Corporation, the socalled "bank group," and Paramount Pictures Corporation, in which the trustees challenge the validity of the transactions between Paramount Publix and Film Production, which occurred on March 29, 1932.

One of the most important partnership theatre deals closed to date by Publix was completed in New York this week when the trustees approved an agreement which brings George W. Trendle back to the Publix fold as operating partner of the company's ten theatres in Detroit. These houses have long been recognized as key properties in the Publix structure and John Balaban is said to have long sought control.

This new deal invalidates the 50-year restrictive clause, which prevented Mr. Trendle or his former partner, John H. Kunsky, from re-entering exhibition in that field after the sale of the circuit by the two partners, who built the houses, to Paramount Publix. The deal has brought the formation of Detroit Theatres Operating Co. and creates a bond issue of $1,500,000. This issue pays a 5 per cent dividend and will retire a like amount of the total yearly out of earnings.

Mr. Trendle will own 50 per cent of the

Kansans Demand Action to Elevate Pictures' Morals

Declaring the "spirit of camaraderie" between the members of the Kansas State Board of Review and film distributors makes pressure on the censors against rejecting certain pictures "almost irresistible," Roland Boynton, attorney general of Kansas, at a regional conference at Lawrence, Kan., last week called on citizens to demand that the board "condemn objectionable pictures."

"What you the people want, you will get," the attorney general told the conference. "If you are dissatisfied with present laws of the state regulating and controlling motion pictures, your legislature will have to change them to meet your approval."

This, and other addresses, crystalized the conference attitude that the moral tone of films must be improved. The meeting was the first of four scheduled by the Kansas Council of Christian Education, in cooperation with Ministerial Alliances.

At the Lawrence conference, attended by more than 100 members of the Council, Dean Raymond A. Schwegler of the University of Kansas School of Education raised a lone voice in defense of the industry, with reservations. He said that by careful selection he found all the "good" pictures he needed.

"They offer a release from the gilded cage of civilization for many people, permitting them, through identification with the hero or heroine, to do many things they could not or would not do in real life," he said.

However, Dean Schwegler declared that as far as child attendance is concerned, motion pictures could stand considerable improvement. A similar expression regarding the screen influence on children came from Dean John Warren Day of Grace Cathedral, Topeka.

Other subjects brought up for discussion were boycotting the theatres, urged as one means of reform, block booking, the effect of Sunday shows on the Sunday school, experiences of control, state and federal censorship, advertising and publicized personalities.

The Council resolved that there should be an adequate program of education; that a carefully prepared questionnaire be issued; that the State Board of Review be advised of the sentiment on pictures, advertising and posters; that support be given to such legislation as will eliminate block booking; that communities "troubled with Sunday movies" find recourse through the county attorney's office; that a continuation committee be established; that Henry James Forman's book, "Our Movie Made Children," be recommended for wide reading by leaders and parents. This volume is a summarization of results of research by the Motion Picture Council under the Payne Fund.

Quittner Appeal Granted

Federal Judge Goddard in New York last week granted leave for an appeal of the Edward Quittner monopoly suit against Paramount, which was decided for the defendant. The court also granted Mr. Quittner's petition to enter the appeal without filing bond. Mr. Quittner's two houses in Middletown, N. Y., the State and the Stratton, were foreclosed last week.

common stock of the corporation. The other half will be retained by Paramount Publix. Operation is to be vested in Mr. Trendle but the company will be assured of continued playing time through a long-term film deal to be set up. Mr. Balaban's best offer for the circuit was an issue of $1,000,000.

Publix Partners in New York To Discuss Circuit Status

Various Publix partners from all over the country arrived in New York last week to have the status of their operations cleared up. The activities of S. A. Lynch, who was appointed chairman of a committee on theatre reorganization about six weeks ago, have, in many instances, met with objections from these partners. Any decision will rest with the trustees, Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson.

It is Mr. Lynch's contention that as chairman of the committee it is mandatory upon him to look into all steps aimed at permanent reorganization of the Paramount Publix theatre structure. The partners say that they, either through court appointment as receivers or accredited partners in their specified territories, are the operators. The partners say further that their policies, including adjustments on leases and bond issues, are being retarded through plans put into effect by Mr. Lynch in New York and that these vary from the tenor of the arrangements already made in the scaling down of operating costs.

John Balaban Protests

John Balaban, of Balaban & Katz, is one of the chief voices of dissension against the Lynch regime. It is understood that Mr. Balaban was promised the Detroit theatre holdings of Paramount Publix several months ago and that Mr. Lynch had made efforts to retard the deal. Mr. Balaban for some time has been anxious to step into the Detroit territory and informed Mr. Zukor originally that he wished to make his permanent theatre job there. The original deal provided for him to assume the properties by supplying cash for operating purposes up to a total of $200,000, carrying a proviso that Paramount would repurchase an interest in the circuit by putting up 50 per cent of whatever losses were incurred by August of this year. A little over a week ago Mr. Lynch made a trip to Detroit to look into the situation. Prior to this, it is understood, he had proceeded on the theory that the Detroit houses had cost Paramount about $4,000,000 and had come to the conclusion that the Balaban offer was not in the best interests of the company.

Then followed negotiations with Mr. Balaban, and a change in the original terms calling eventually for creation of a $1,500,000 five per cent bond issue with a provision for retirement of a five per cent block annually. Mr. Balaban considered that this arrangement was not in keeping with the original deal as first presented to Paramount officials, including Adolph Zukor, Emanuel Cohen, Leo Spitz, Austin Keough, George Schaefer and Ralph Kohn.

The partners now in New York are, beside Mr. Balaban, E. V. Richards; Robert Wilby and H. F. Kincey; Robert J. O'Donnell; Karl Hoblitzelle; Barney Balaban and Leo Spitz. They all intend remaining until the situation has been clarified.

On Saturday it was said that efforts were well under way to "pour oil on the troubled waters" and that the prospects were fairly bright for an early settlement of the various questions involved.

The deal consummated between Paramount Publix trustees and Mr. Trendle this week is said to have left the other partners who are in New York in a quandary. Their attitude has been that Balaban should be allowed to take over operation of the Detroit houses, in view of his record as supervisor of Famous Players Canadian and as an important factor in the operation of Balaban & Katz, Publix Michigan and Great States. The deal was believed by some factors close to S. A. Lynch to be a definite indication of approval of his actions by the trustees.

Meanwhile receivers were appointed last week by Federal Judge Robert A. Inch in Brooklyn for New York Investors, Inc., whose subsidiaries, Allied Owners Corp. and the Prudence Co., are large creditors of Paramount Publix.

Frank Bailey, former Paramount director, is chairman of the board of New York Investors and a director of its subsidiaries. The Prudence Co. filed creditors' claims aggregating approximately $12,000,000. Allied Owners Corp. figured recently in an investigation made of theatre transactions between it and Paramount Publix, as a result of which a plenary action may be instituted against it at a later date by the Paramount trustees in bankruptcy.

New York Investors listed assets of $44,500,000 and liabilities of $33,300,000, stating that its difficulties were due largely to its inability to convert its assets into cash.

Other developments in the Paramount Publix situation included recovery of the Rex theatre at Greeley, Col., and the Mesa at Grand Junction by Harry Nolan. Publix had bought the houses from him for about $185,000 and has paid about half that amount.

In Brooklyn Mort Shea signed a deal with Prudence Bond and Publix whereby he will operate the Brooklyn Paramount. The house will be re-opened around the middle of August.

The three Paramount Publix trustees last week put up for sale the entire block in Times Square from 44th to 45th street and Broadway as well as two business sites on West 44th street, housing the Criterion and Loew's New York.

Paramount-Publix Creditors' Meeting Delayed to July 20

A meeting of creditors of Paramount-Publix scheduled for Monday of last week, was adjourned until July 20, at which time a plan for the settlement of a controversy with Fox West Coast over theatre leases, is expected to be ready for submission to creditors.

Several meetings to obtain creditor authorization for certain transactions planned by the Paramount-Publix trustees will be held during the summer, but no further examination of corporation officers will take place until September 7.

ADVERTISING CODE IN REVISED DRAFT

and Distributors of America, Inc., and the resolutions for uniform interpretation of said code.

Advertising Code

31. No exhibitor shall, in advertising motion pictures, violate any of the following standards of fair competition in advertising and exploitation or means of exploitation:

(a) Nudity with meretricious purpose, shall not be used.

(b) Profanity shall be avoided.

(c) No false or misleading statements shall be used directly, or implied by type arrangements or by distorted quotations.

(d) No text or illustration shall ridicule or tend to ridicule, any religion or religious faith; no illustration of a character in clerical garb shall be shown in any but a respectful manner.

(e) The history, institutions and nationalities of all countries shall be represented with fairness.

(f) Pictorial and copy treatment of officers of the law shall not be of such a nature as to undermine their authority.

(g) Good taste shall be the standard and the rule for all advertising and exploitation of motion pictures.

(h) A board of industry arbitration shall determine whether a violation has been committed or not.

Advertising Conflicting With Prior Run

32. No exhibitor licensed to exhibit a motion picture subsequent to its exhibition by another exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof shall advertise prior to or during the preceding run of such motion picture by any means of advertising, except as may be provided for in local zoning and clearance schedules. In the absence of such local zoning and clearance schedule, the provisions in the optional standard license agreement shall prevail.

Admission Prices, Rebates, Etc.

33. No exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by the giving of rebates in the form of premiums, lotteries, reduced script books, coupons, gifts, or things of value, or by two-for-one admissions, or by other methods or devices of similar effect, except as approved by the local maximum clearance and zoning schedules. This shall not be deemed to prohibit exhibitors from reducing or increasing their admission scales as they see fit except as may be prohibited by exhibition contracts, or local zoning and clearance schedules. It is aimed at reductions through means which are unfair to competing exhibitors and which deceive the public.

Prohibiting the Sale of Double Features

34. Distributors shall refuse to permit the exhibition of their pictures on double feature programs in towns or communities where a majority of the exhibitors are opposed to the practice.

Prohibiting the Exhibition of Double Features

35. No exhibitor shall exhibit two or more feature motion pictures for one admission. A feature motion picture shall be deemed a motion picture originally made and released in more than 3,000 feet in length.

Box Office Statements

36. Exhibitors shall promptly make and deliver a correct itemized statement of each day's receipts from the exhibition of any motion picture and from so-called midnight shows, if any, upon the conclusion of such exhibitions, when the license fee therefor is based in whole or in part upon a percentage of the exhibitor's admission receipts.

Unauthorized Exhibitions

37. The unauthorized exhibition of a motion picture and the doing by any exhibitor of acts which are illegal or in violation of the Copyright Law or exhibition license, gives such exhibitor an unfair competitive advantage over the exhibitor who is honest, obeys the law and lives up to his contractural obligations; misappropriates a portion of playing time market of the industry; disrupts other exhibitors' bookings and scheduled exhibitions and imposes a burden of expense and waste which must be borne by producers, distributors and exhibitors. Therefore no exhibitor shall engage in any of the following harmful and prohibited practices:

Midnight Shows

(a) The exhibition of a motion picture previous to dawn of the first day of exhibition without securing express, written permission therefor under the license agreement.

Unauthorized Showings

(b) The exhibition of a motion picture at any time or place other than on the date or dates and at the place expressly booked and confirmed in writing pursuant to the exhibition license; or by means of a print acquired from any source other than the lawfully authorized distributor; or if lawfully acquired, from such distributor for any purpose other than for exhibitions so booked and confirmed, whether or not a general exhibition license exists which contemplates a future booking of such exhibitions or specifies a different number of or other day of exhibition.

Switching

(c) The use of a print at a substituted theatre operated by the same exhibitor without a written license for such exhibition from the distributor.

Bicycling

(d) The use of a print furnished by the distributor licensing exhibition at only an expressly specified theatre for exhibitions at an unlicensed theatre or theatres operated by the same exhibitor. Also the use of such print for exhibitions at two or more theatres when licensed in the alternatives at only one or the other of such theatres regardless of whether the number of days licensed is or is not excluded.

Duping, Sub-renting, Loaning for Illegal Purposes

(e) The use of a print for any purpose whatsoever other than exhibitions duly licensed and booked and for which the print was furnished by the distributor, including such prohibited uses as, for example, duping or printing copies, reduction to 16 mm. or other size; selling, leasing, pledging, or otherwise asserting any dominion thereover; using or making the print available for television, broadcasting or non-theatrical exhibitions in homes, schools, stores, prisons, fraternal, social, charitable or educational meetings or elsewhere.

Abetting Unauthorized Exhibitions

(f) The delivering or making available for delivery either for cash or other consideration or in exchange for similar privileges, a print furnished by the distributor for licensed exhibition or acquired illegally for the purpose of aiding, abetting or accomplishing unlicensed exhibitions at a place or places other than the licensed theatre.

Late Return

(g) The failure to return or to forward, except for reasons beyond the exhibitors' reasonable control, to the distributor's exchange or another exhibitor a print of any motion picture immediately after its last licensed and scheduled exhibition so as to render it difficult or impossible for the print to arrive on time at the theatre of the next exhibitor who has scheduled its exhibition.

Holding Over

(h) The withholding of the prompt return of a print for additional exhibitions at any theatre in excess of the time licensed and booked in writing, without first securing an additional written consent for the extra exhibitions from the distributor of the print upon payment of the rental therefor.

Liability on Circuit Shipments

(i) When an exhibitor is designated in lieu of a common carrier, by the distributor, to forward a picture or pictures to another exhibitor, the exhibitor forwarding the picture shall be the agent of the distributor and not otherwise.

Kansas City Owner Asks Federal Inquiry of Union

E. S. Young, owner of the Central theatre in Kansas City, is planning a complaint to the federal government regarding alleged racketeering by union operators. Mr. Young recently failed to obtain an injunction against the IATSE.

Following several stench bombings and an attack on his operator, a non-union man, Mr. Young obtained a restraining order against the IATSE officials and members, but was denied a temporary injunction by Circuit Judge Bird. The restraining order was dissolved and the case is now scheduled to come up in September on its merits.

MPTOA's Code In Revised Form

Moskowitz, director of the League of New York Theatres, Inc., together with Brock Pemberton, producer, met with General Johnson in Washington to discuss the theatrical situation. Managers, actors, stage hands, musicians, scenic artists and theatrical press agents already have prepared tentative codes.

Through the medium of employee representatives, the Radio Corporation of America last week was asked to consider, prior to the establishment of a code for the radio industry, the increasing of rates for all hourly and piecework employees. A 10 per cent increase in all such wages was granted and becomes effective July 24.

Approximately a dozen other industries this week granted wage raises of 5 to 20 per cent, among them textile, silk, steel, candy workers, tinsmiths, shoe workers, rubber workers.

Columbia Strike Continues on Coast

The Columbia studio strike continued this week. Twenty actors affected by the closing of the studio met Monday afternoon and registered a complaint with the Actors' Branch of the Academy, saying they were told to grow beards for a new feature and then received only two days' pay. Because they signed the players' standard contract, it was said, the actors were forced to stand by one week without pay, and when jobs were offered by other studios, they could not accept, nor could they shave their beards.

The case threatens revision of the standard contract. Academy officials told the group affected they should file a formal complaint and the association would try to effect an adjustment with Columbia. Actors involved are bit players, but in order to hire them they were given standard contracts at $66 a week, one dollar more than the California labor laws provide.

Jewish Theatrical Guild Elects Officers for Year

The nominating committee of the Jewish Theatrical Guild of America, Inc., last week elected officers for the coming year, with Eddie Cantor as president, George Jessel, vice president, and Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, treasurer.

Other officers include Sime Silverman, Julius Tannen, Sam H. Harris and William Morris, Jr., all vice presidents; Fred Block, financial secretary; Harry Cooper, corresponding secretary; Loney Haskell, recording secretary; William Degen Weinberger, chairman of trustees; Dr. Leo Michel, chairman, relief committee; Jacob L. Wiener, chairman, legal committee, and Rabbis B. A. Tintner and A. Burstein, chaplains. Bessie Mack was appointed director of publicity.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Berkeley Square

(Fox-Lasky)

Romantic Drama

Attendance at two previews was necessary to get the true feel of this unusual picture. In a class house, where smart people predominate, the preview audience acclaimed it wildly. In a secondary house, audience made up of sailors, shop girls, vacationists and just people, the reaction was fully as enthusiastic. Proof, undoubtedly, that this daring picturization of a highly popular stage play is both class and mass entertainment. It includes just about everything that modern audiences look for on the screen, from heart-tingling romance to something akin to terror. It's finely done in every phase—production scope, acting, direction and photography. Novelty of idea is one of its greatest showmanship values. Judged by the reactions of the widely differing types of preview audiences, it looks to be one of the year's most valuable box office assets.

There is something awesome about the scope of "Berkeley Square," yet the story is sweetly appealing. A fourth-dimensional treatment of time motivating, it combines 1933 with 1784. Peter Standish, a modern American, is bequeathed a mansion in London's historic Berkeley Square. Roaming through the old house, finding long forgotten relics and diaries, he becomes obsessed with the idea that the people and conditions of 1784 actually exist in that old house.

Craving the permission of the Ambassador and his fiancee, today's Peter shuts himself up in the house. As he passes through the door, he becomes the original Peter and lives with his ancestors. It's not a dream. Time turns back 150 years. With only a diary and historical knowledge to guide him, Peter mixes his times. And this condition is provocative of continuous comedy. The original Peter came to marry Kate. This Peter falls in love with her sister Helen. Their love is sublime, but it can only be consummated in God's eternity. Time for them does not exist.

Amazing all with whom he comes in contact, save Helen, Peter is hated and feared. Rather than an American, he is looked upon as an emissary of Satan who can look into the future and knows all about the past that has not happened yet. He talks of Lincoln, Lindbergh, the World War, the marvels of science and invention. Through his eyes, Helen sees all the happiness and horror that has come into the world from her day to this. All is familiar to him.

The romance grows deeper. Helen knows that Peter is a man of the future. In one grand scene they pledge their eternal love that lies beyond the grave for both. Then the picture turns modern again. Peter has proved his belief. As Marjorie tries to take him away from the house, he tells her that he never will leave. She seems to understand why and passes, and Peter is left alone to wait until time calls him to Helen.

"Berkeley Square" is a big picture. Undoubtedly it will be roadshown first. But no matter under what condition it is made available to audiences, no showman need hesitate in telling his patrons that "Berkeley Square" is a show that it would be folly to miss. It's sensational entertainment for men, women and children. It took courage to produce a film of this type. Consequently it should be sold from that premise. Ordinary methods are out. Every line of advertising and publicity should carry the convincing ring of sincerity that this show is vastly different, but wonderfully appealing entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Hell's Holiday

(Superb Pictures)

War Compilation

Once more a compilation of authentic motion pictures of the World War comes to the screen, this time under the distribution banner of Superb Pictures, with Eugene Dennis and Joseph Finston concerned with the running narration and the sound effects, respectively.

There is much that is drama and tragedy inherent in the record, but at the same time there is comparatively little that is new. However, in an effort to attack the concoction from a slightly different angle than that which was used in the compilation of the several of the same species which recently have preceded it, the editors of this record selected much of their footage from pictures taken on the actual battle front, covered a bit more of the work of the sea dogs than have the others, moved to the Italian front for some interesting material in the Alps and chose a few air battles for a different touch.

There is intensity of action to sell, and the clear significance of the terrible cost of war, to soldier and civilian alike. The screen presentation, in the matter of the reproduction, is not of the best, due, obviously, to the condition of the film, but the subject matter is of unquestioned interest. The narration by Mr. Dennis is smooth, though at times he waxes oratorical.

For the exhibitor who has had previous experience with this type of material, little need be said as to method of selling. The opportunity for extensive lobby displays of stills from the picture is obvious, and should not be neglected. Equally, use should be made of whatever war material, guns and the like, is available. Tie-ups with women's organizations, on the basis of the indication of the horrors of war, the use of the picture as anti-war propaganda, and with the local American Legion and other veterans' groups for the familiar material the picture contains, are "naturals." Indicate the undoubted authenticity of the pictures, and sell the film as a record of America's important part in the great conflict.—Aaronson, New York.

Distributed by Superb Pictures. Official motion pictures taken overseas during the World War. Running narration by Eugene Dennis. Music and sound effects under direction of Joseph Finston. New York release date, July 14, 1933. National release date undetermined. Running time, 77 minutes.

Pilgrimage

(Fox)

Drama

There is, basically, a tremendous amount of popular, and box office appeal in Fox's pretentious "Pilgrimage." It is a large human story, powerful and very much alive. Here is an unusual picture and the exhibitor should treat it as such.

It is a story leaning heavily in the direction of pathos, always dramatic with little so-called comedy relief, but evenly paced and carefully executed.

The fact that it has been taken from a story by I. A. R. Wylie may mean something; the way is open for book store tieups. The original, under the same title, ran first as a serial in the American Magazine.

The cast is good. In every way leading the picture is the stage-famous Henrietta Crosman, giving a splendid character study in her first screen role of importance. She is in Hollywood for additional appearances. It would be extremely worthwhile to build her name among the patrons. Additionally, there are Norman Foster and Marion Nixon, handling the secondary theme; Heather Angel, young English actress, who is being pushed by Fox, and in minor roles, such names as Lucille LaVerne, Hedda Hopper, Betty Blythe.

In a small Arkansas town, Miss Crosman, almost vicious in her intense mother love, watches with jealous eye every movement of her son, Foster. When he falls in love with Miss Nixon, she fights bitterly, forces him into the war by drafting. There is no time for marriage to Miss Nixon. In France a shell takes its toll.

Ten years later, Miss Crosman continues her way, ignoring Miss Nixon and the young son who, born after his father's death, suffers the taunts of his schoolmates. Finally Miss Crosman is persuaded to join a pilgrimage of gold star mothers to the graves in France. By accident in Paris she encounters a young couple, Gary Worth and Heather Angel, in precisely the same situation as were Foster and Miss Nixon. Miss Crosman comes to a realization of the great wrong she has done. She makes Worth's mother see what she now sees, begs forgiveness at the grave of her son.

Here is powerful, unsophisticated drama, capable of playing upon heartstrings, of universal appeal. Press the selling along these lines. It should be worth it.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by John Ford. From the story by I. A. R. Wylie. Screen play by Philip Klein and Barry Conners. Dialogue by Dudley Nichols. Under the Tonto Rim

(Paramount)

Comedy Western

Opening with an actionful cattle drive, this Zane Grey conventional western speedily turns into a comedy along eddie cantorish lines minus the girls and music. With Stuart Erwin as the stooge cowhand who turns "bad man," aided and abetted by the comedy efforts of Ray Hatton and Fuzzy Knight in minor roles, "Under the Tonto Rim" passes as average entertainment. Paramount had made this one before, in 1928, as a silent picture starring Richard Arlen.

The story concerns the misfortunes of Tonto Daily, who falls from grace as a cowhand. Demoted to chuck wagon driver, he imperils the life of the boss' daughter by tipping over the wagon crossing a ford. Porky and Tex, his supposed pals, learning that Tonto has inherited money, endeavor without success to induce him to chuck the cows and with them invest in a hog ranch.

Left to guard the cattle in the corrals at night, Tonto falls asleep, allowing Munther, crooked foreman, to rustle the bovines, and fear of the consequences drives the "stooge" into the swine business. From here the action shifts to a Mexican resort spot, where the two "pals" endeavor to build Tonto up as a bad man in order to attract girls to his side. Denounced as a "phony" and laughed at by the boss' daughter, he gets his dander up, licks a few waiters, kidnaps the gal to an abandoned shack, the headquarters of the rustlers.

A struggle between the girl and Tonto reveals a hidden trap door to the canyon where stolen cattle are kept, disclosing the presence of rustlers, who are subdued by the "stooge," resulting in the ultimate clinch and dubious promotion to prospective pa-in-law's hog ranch.

Strictly an Erwin picture, it should be so sold to his fans, adults as well as children. The swine sequences may suggest a hog-calling contest, and other ideas could include roping and steer drawing from cow picture production stills. Sell the comedy rather than the western angle, for it has not the action and suspense of the usual Zane Grey script—VOGEL. New York.

A Paramount Picture from the original story by Zane Grey. Screen play by Jack Cunningham and Gerald Geraghty. Directed by Henry Hathaway. Photographer, Archie Stout. Running time, 59 minutes. Release date, April 7, 1933.

The Narrow Corner

(Warner)

Drama

Warner has succeeded in concocting a dramatically effective, believable story embodying a goodly portion of entertainment from the well-known novel of W. Somerset Maugham. It is, however, definitely possible that in a given community this splendid Maugham story of a fugitive, who, wandering the South Seas, comes upon love and friendship and nearly loses both, is considerably unfamiliar to the large common denominator of the motion picture public.

The cast is unusually strong, both in player caliber and box office strength. For the marquee there are the names of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Patricia Ellis, Ralph Bellamy and Dudley Digges, with Arthur Hohl, Reginald Owen and William V. Mong contributing minor performances which should hold the audience.

The story is set entirely in the South Seas, on a pearling lugger and one of the small islands. Fairbanks ships aboard the small sailing ship, a fugitive from Sydney, where he has killed a man. The captain is Hohl, who, crook though he is, provides a bit of comedy with his incessant complaints about his indigestion. En route they come upon Digges, a doctor who enjoys his nightly opium pipe, and whose philosophy of resignation is expressed in a wisdom born of long experience. At an island Fairbanks meets an English family, Owen, the father; Miss Ellis, the daughter; Mong elderly, in his dotage. Also there is Bellamy, exporter, in love with Miss Ellis. While the good natured Bellamy and Fairbanks become fast friends, Fairbanks and Miss Ellis fall in love, despite Fairbanks' valiant effort to fight the temptation. Bellamy sees them, attacks Fairbanks, believes he has killed him, and commits suicide. Fairbanks, Miss Ellis leave together.

The best angle of approach in selling the picture is probably that concerned with the triangle of Miss Ellis, Bellamy and Fairbanks. An effective dramatic bit is a fierce storm at sea which very nearly sinks the boat, a sequence which might well be played up. The South Sea atmosphere offers an opportunity for lobby display, and the origin of the story opens the way for the always good bookstore tieup. Digges, in an unusually effective character role, should be worth special mention. Though the action sequences should be strong juvenile material, it is doubtful that the story as a whole could be appreciated.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Directed by Alfred E. Green. Based on the story by W. Somerset Maugham. Screen play by Robert Presnell. Photography by Tony Gaudio. Film editor, Bert Levy. Art director, Robert Haas. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Vitaphone Orchestra conducted by Leo F. Forbstein. Release date, July 8, 1933. Running time, 71 minutes.

Isle of Doom

(Amkino)

Drama

Stark drama is what the exhibitor has to sell in "Isle of Doom," which starts out to present an unusual situation of the so-called triangular variety, but falls back upon the formula. Because of the solemn tread of story and direction the exhibitor showing the picture in a community where not all the clientele is of Russian extraction might do well to give some emphasis to the contrasting beauty of the fortress island and the bleak interior, with disaster impending. Then, too, there is something of fresh loveliness in the sequence introducing the feminine character, as well as well-rounded musical background by the Leningrad Symphony Orchestra.

By all means fill the surrounding program with light comedy, to offset the heaviness of the feature.

Peter Sobolevski, Red sailor convicted of treason, is left for dead by the firing squad. He drags himself into the half ruined and deserted fort to find, from recorded wireless messages, that a time bomb has been set to destroy the place. Vladimir Krueger, a White Guard spy, brings the actress, Galina Kravchenko, to the island for the entertainment of the garrison and finds only the sailor. The spy locks him in the fort and takes Galina away. She swims back to the island and they find the bomb before the zero hour, as the Soviet fleet approaches.

There is no particular appeal to children nor is there any phase except the weighty tragic tone to raise any question regarding their attendance.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Her First Mate

(Universal)

Comedy

Comedy naturally predominates in the newest Summerville-Pitts domestic farce. While it is a family type program picture, the exhibitor must counteract the fact that it is somewhat lacking in the color and punch characteristic of recent efforts of this duo, yet combines novelty and entertainment values suitable for secondary, neighborhood and small town audiences. Sticking close to its theme, good dialogue and typical Summerville-Pitts action, assisted by comedy contributions from the rest of the cast, unite in maintaining interest.

John Horner visions himself as the swashbuckling master of a six-masted deep sea rover, but unable to rise higher in maritime life than candy butcher on the Albany night boat. His wife, Mary, timidly anxious that her husband realize his salt water ambitions, but unaware of his station, feels that he would be safer guiding the destinies of the river ferryboat.

Topical fun ensues, with Hattie aiding and abetting Mary; Percy effective as a dumb life guard; old salt Sam inspiring Horner to glorious seven sea dreams; Socrates making a deal with him to purchase a water-logged six sticker, and Davis making a deal with Mary to buy the ferryboat without John's knowledge.

Disaster enters as the ferryboat is burned to the water's edge, the day the sale is made, and Socrates threatens all sorts of dire things unless John goes through with his agreement to buy the sailer, but he can't because Mary has used their life's savings.

The whole thing finally works out, with the traction company building John a new ferryboat and Mary delighted with the fact that she will always have her salt water hero right in the front yard.

Audiences should be prepared to expect light, clean fun. The show found a preview audience in a receptive mood. The cast includes names that should appeal to the adults, and the story is of the type that permits much ingenious curiosity stimulation. The night boat sequences suggest some novel ballyhoo stunts and the ferryboat finale can likewise be used for good showmanship ideas.

One bit that features the model of an old fashioned wind-jammer can be made the basis for a ship modeling contest for the youngsters. Put a typical river front atmosphere into lobby decoration.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by William Weiler. From the stage play "Salt Water" by John Golden, Dan Jarrett and Frank Craven. Screen play by Earl Snell, H. M. Walker and Clarence Marks. Photographed by George Robinson. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date, Aug. 3, 1933.

Best of Enemies

(Fox)

Comedy-Drama

The highly successful serio-comedy of two able comedians, Frank Morgan and Joseph Cawthorn, provides the central theme and the proper touch to this comedy drama to make it diverting entertainment. A simple, highly unpretentious story having a bit of obvious romantic interest, is made lightly attractive by the work of Morgan and Cawthorn, as two old and bitter enemies.

In the cast are Buddy Rogers, still a fair marquee name; Marion Nixon, attractive and becoming more popular, and Greta Nissen in a minor role. The cast names, then, with the exception of Morgan and Rogers, are fairly well known, but the title should offer opportunity for smart selling from the copy standpoint. Even when they made up their differences after some 20 years, they still could be only the "best of enemies." Catchlines of that general nature, promising at the same time many a laugh and nothing too serious or dramatic, should help patronage. Every dramatic sequence is touched with a note of humor, a bit of comedy, which should keep the audience on the verge of a half-smile when not laughing.

Morgan, a builder in New York, and Cawthorn, German-accented saloon owner, live next door and are continually at each other's throat. They refuse to permit their children, Morgan's son and Cawthorn's daughter, to play together, and when Morgan wants to buy Cawthorn's lease, he refuses. Then comes prohibition, Morgan is successful, Cawthorn is forced to close, and moves back to Germany with his daughter.

The scene moves 12 years ahead, with Morgan a successful builder and Cawthorn a beer garden proprietor in Berlin. Cawthorn thoroughly hates the very name of Hartman (Morgan). Rogers, Morgan's son, persuades his father to permit him to study music in Berlin, and there he meets Miss Nixon, Cawthorn's daughter, studying in the same conservatory. They fall in love, but Rogers keeps his real name secret from Cawthorn, whose beer garden he makes famous by the introduction of a jazz band. Morgan visits Germany and the famous beer garden, accompanied by the blonde Miss Nissen. He sees his son leading the band, and the story comes out. Cawthorn was actually honoring a Hartman in his own shop and home! They all return to America on the same boat, and Rogers frames each of the two into believing the other has asked that "bygones be bygones." It succeeds, but even in the reconciliation, the two begin to squabble. Morgan with his timid mannerisms and Cawthorn with his amusing anger and manner of speech, are extremely comic, and they and their comedy should form the basis of the selling of the picture. Rogers renders several song numbers pleasingly, another selling point, and the romance, though incidental to the comical battle of the two old "fogies," is worth attention.

The youngsters may see it, or the entire family. Midweek would perhaps be the most acceptable playing time.—AARONSON, New York.

Breed of the Border

(Monogram)

Western

Several kinds of action have been incorporated into this out-of-door production to give the exhibitor an opportunity to spread his call to customers over a wide range. Besides the galloping horses, following an opening rodeo demonstration by Bob Steele, there is a rapier duel and then a speedcar race, with a smoking flivver in the wake for a fleeting comedy touch. Nor should the theatre man overlook the fist-fight that is literally packed with resounding punch.

For selling purposes the abundant action, in its very nature, also presents novelty, both in the situation which gives Steele an opening to enlist in the service of the gang and in the device employed by them—messages in the longhorns affixed to a shorthorn steer—for their cattle-running operations.

Bob Steele is the name for the marquee, and the patrons may be assured he has plenty to do. Marion Byron, in support, as the judge's niece, gives a bit of turn to the story development also in her enlistment as a dancehall girl.

Ernie Adams, as Joe the Killer, for a quick getaway, employs Steele to rush him into Mexico in his racing car, and has a couple of henchmen handy at the terminal to take back the $500 after a slugging. Steele and George Hayes get jobs with the gang, but Joe recognizes him and the battle is on. Marion Byron is rescued and Joe is killed when his car plunges off the road, ending a mountain chase.

It's a Saturday picture. There's much to keep the youngsters vociferous.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

SHORTS . . .

The World's Greatest Thrills

(Universal)

Compiled Thrills

Thrills of the air, the earth and the sea, thrills and suspense of war, hurricane, tidal wave, fire and flood, all have their rushing, tearing place in this new short subject, which, in a sense, is a glorification of that daredevil of the motion picture, the intrepid cameraman of the newsreel. It is to an extent weakened by the rather long-winded eulogy of the newsreel photographer in his far-flung pursuits, which is initially rendered by Graham McNamee, of Universal's Newspaper Newsreel. From that point the subject flashes from one major spectacular occurrence to another, here and abroad, with great rapidity, at all times indicating the dangers and hazards undertaken by the cameramen to get their pictures. The scenes themselves are the highlight thrill pictures of a year's newsreels and make for a few minutes of lively suspense and thrill. A subject perhaps worth special billing by the exhibitor.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Main Streets

(Vitaphone)

Of Interest

Without being in any sense particularly unusual, this number of the E. M. Newman travel series devotes its footage to a picturization of odd main streets the world over, though most of them are in the Far East. Venice, Gibraltar, Bangkok and numerous others pass across the screen, interesting in their indication of the manner in which other peoples live.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Ham and Eggs

(Universal)

Amusing

Oswald the rabbit and his girl friend run a lunchroom wherein, in amusing animated fashion, the griddle cakes dance, the coffee pot gets fresh with the tea kettle, and the food floats to the customer via soap bubbles. When the customers attempt to walk out without paying, the cash register reaches out and empties their pockets. The youngsters will enjoy it and it has a moment's enjoyment for anyone.—Running time, 6 minutes.

The Big Squeal

(Fox-Educational)

Comedy

The millionaire hog raiser Andy Clyde brings a trainload of porkers to market, meets up with a lot of old friends of more plebian days, and after demonstrating his hog calling abilities goes to call on Billy Bevan. Bevan's wife substitutes Dorothy Christy to do the entertaining. She turns out to be an old flame, but Andy, believing her Bevan's wife, hesitates to return her affectionate advances. Finally he tells Bevan he loves his wife, and there's a harum-scarum rapier duel all over the living room. Mildly amusing, but nothing to start the patrons cheering.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Say It Isn't So

(Columbia)

Fair

One of the comedies of Richey Craig, Jr., this subject draws a few laughs by reason, particularly, of its extreme inanity. Craig wants to enter the motion picture business and in order to dissuade him, his father arranges with a studio head to discourage him. When Craig appears for work, he is moved from pillar to post, everywhere finding people apparently living in an insane world, talking in circles, bewildering the young man at every turn. Even Jack Holt, who appears in the final moment, seems "cracked." A fair comedy, silly but rather amusing.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Stop, Sadie, Stop

(MGM)

Burlesque Comedy

Starting out with Ted Healy and Cliff Edwards satirically burlesquing "Rain" and "Sadie Thompson," their four or five minutes provide a riot of laughter. Healy is the tempted missionary and Edwards is more sexy in dialogue and action than any Sadie Thompson. Then the picture shifts into what looks like a pick-up from Hollywood Revue, a muchly repeated "In The Rain—Ready For Love" chorus boy-girl dance number. The early fun is forgotten in the welter of singing and dancing that affords nothing in the way of novel entertainment.—Running time, 12 minutes.

Farmers' Fatal Folly

(Fox-Educational)

Comedy

Moran and Mack buy a farm and soon find out why the back-to-the-land movement is unattractive. Everything goes wrong; rabbits eat up their crops; the cow eats hops and gives 3.2 milk; the tractor develops land-submarine tactics and the hens eat dynamite and gunpowder to lay explosive eggs. None of these is very effective in bringing in funds to pay off the second instalment, but the eggs make swell bombs to drive off the real estate agent. A lot of hurly-burly nonsensical fun.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Gleason's New Deal

(Universal)

Amusing

Jimmy Gleason's natural bent for comedy and his competent trouper-like handling of his roles, makes for effective results in general. In this case, Gleason, disturbed at the thought of beans again for dinner, offers to substitute for his wife for one day and install a "system" into housework. Mother-in-law Florence Roberts is at least skeptical. Gleason goes to work next morning and everything goes to pieces, in a manner expected, but nonetheless funny. Wives should find the subject particularly enjoyable, and they will probably make their husbands like it.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Nature's Workshop

(Universal)

Good

Pooch the Pup in a Walter Lantz cartoon—and a good one. Pooch, with a magnifying glass, goes spying on Mother Nature, sees the bees getting honey from a flower filling station, and rescues the queen bee. Running time, 8 minutes.

Two musicals head the list of pictures which turned in the largest grosses at the nation's key theatres during June. This would seem to confirm the general notion that the motion picture public is yearning for more rhyme and less rheum in their entertainment—that the populace, indeed, is getting light-hearted again. Even one of the two productions tied for third ranking has an occasional burst of song. As for indicating a return to national buoyancy again, the June list definitely indicates that, for all but the rather grim "I Cover the Waterfront," they are cheerful tales concerned with life only in its more romantic and foolish moments.

(3) Directed by James Cruze. Based on the book by Max Miller. Screen play by Wells Root. Additional dialogue by Jack Jevne. Photographer: Ray June. INTERNATIONAL HOUSE — Paramount

'NEED PRODUCTION HOUSE CLEANING'

CLEAN PICTURES STEADY PATRONS

To the Editor-in-Chief of the Herald:

As an exhibitor I am very much interested in the business of Tomorrow, the months and years to follow, as all that I possess is invested in theatres, and for that reason, during my seventeen years' connection with the show business, I have been most careful to avoid showing something today that I believed would have a tendency to destroy steady business in the future.

In following this policy, I realize that I may have passed up some quick money at that particular time, but in the long run it has been worth while, as I have at all times enjoyed the confidence of my patrons, and even today, when much of which I have to show contains much that is offensive to many who come to the theatre and some stay away altogether, they know full well that it is no fault of mine, and I believe with all my heart that these once steady patrons will return when the screen product is improved.

Calls Housecleaning Essential

And that there is an absolute need for house cleaning at the point of production is evidenced by the storm of protest that is beginning to appear in the press of the country, as well as the constant reminders in your own editorial columns reminding the producers that they should do voluntarily that which they will be forced to do before long, by public opinion that will demand laws that will virtually put them in a straight jacket.

The best proof that this storm is brewing is found in The Herald of June 10, page 9, column 1. Note the work that is being done in a serious way by the Motion Picture Research Council and on the same page note the editorial that appeared in the Hearst Publications and it was headed "Save the screen from degeneracy." Ask yourself just what cause there is for such an editorial. Where will it end if every other big daily paper in the nation decides to follow suit?

For the sake of argument, let us suppose that there was no just cause for such articles in the press; the fact still remains that if the press of the nation should take up this fight and pull the producers on "the spot," it will bring state and national laws to put producers in chains, which would in turn penalize every individual connected in any manner with the motion picture industry.

Turn to page 18 in the same issue of the Herald and read what one of the best showmen of the country has to say on this particular subject; his article is headed Reform or be Caged, and that statement coming from George P. Skouras should mean something to producers. In referring to this work by the Research Council, Mr. Skouras says: "As a member of the industry I would like to be in a position to deny this charge emphatically, but as man to man, are we in a position to deny it?"

Further on in that article he states: "During the last six months each time I have visited any theatre, the managers have had a unanimous complaint—that some woman that same day had objected to the filthiness of the picture. Unfortunately, in spite of how our executives may feel on this matter, I can say sincerely that I agree with the woman."

His article is finished by saying: "If we should ever be in a position where we are dominated by politically appointed censors, God have mercy on us!"

I wish to thank Mr. Skouras for writing that article and I thank you for publishing it, as I feel that these honest expressions from men who are in daily contact with the public that makes this business possible should be of real value to producers. I agree with Mr. Skouras 100 per cent on all that he stated.

And as further proof that experienced exhibitors are thinking of the business of tomorrow, turn to page 53 in the June 17 issue of the Herald and read what a lady exhibitor of recognized ability has to say. She says in one paragraph: "It is time for the producers to get their minds out of the gutter and give us consistently clean pictures."

On page 44, June 24 Herald, read what my good friend Col. J. C. Jenkins has to say about the character of pictures made today and the effect on the box office of the thousands of exhibitors it has been his privilege to visit with for the past several years and get first-hand information from the public as they passed out of the theatre.

No one man in the field today has had a better chance to learn facts from the actual experience of observation in thousands of theatres from coast to coast than has been the privilege of J. C. Jenkins. His experience as a showman and his good judgment qualifies him to offer constructive ideas.

There are thousands of sick box offices today and many theatres have already given up the ghost, and while we know that economic conditions have contributed to this, we have undeniable evidence that trash, filth, dirt, coarse vulgar dialogue, sophistication, gangster life and the parading of guttersnipes and degenerates and other human vultures in prominent and glorified sequences of our entertainment have driven thousands of cash customers from our theatres. As proof of the truth of that statement, take a look at the editorial in your subsidiary publication, Hollywood Herald, June 22, page 2—"Morality Production Code Given the Spotlight."

Wants Lasting Business

In the May 25 issue, page 3, of Hollywood Herald, the article headed "Time to Turn Honest" offers food for thought; and in the issue of May 11, we have another editorial, "Good taste and vulgarity." The front-page editorial, May 25 issue, headed "Hollywood on Trial," gives you something to think about.

Off-color productions have probably hung up big b. o. records in many places over a period of years and thus induced producer and exhibitor to play for this quick questionable profit and forget the fact that in so doing they were killing the steady, dependable family trade.

The sick box offices of the nation today are proof that the number who patronize off-color product is not sufficient to keep this industry on its feet, and even though it did pay I do not believe that the better thinking people of this nation would tolerate such conditions.

I do not believe that there is any other medium of expression that offers the possibilities we have in motion pictures. For entertainment, as well as for education, the field is unlimited, the possibilities for cashing in on this business are limited only by the wisdom of handling it and giving due thought to the business possibilities of tomorrow, while we are scrambling for business today.

How can we expect to build a lasting business if we must show stuff that appeals to the baser instincts of mankind, the animal side of his nature, things that cheapen and lower the respect for womankind, things that paint her as serving no useful or worthwhile purpose in life, just a thing to smoke, drink and raise hell in every conceivable manner, with no vision or desire for a future, a home and motherhood, with no respect or regard for law or the fundamental things that made this country a great nation.

Millions of people are hungry for entertainment and we do not have to rob a story on the screen of the vital things of life, things that make you glad to be alive, to appreciate the good things in life, the worthwhile things in others, something to make you glad, make you happy and give you something to laugh about.

Offer a prize to some writer or director to coin a sweeter phrase for motherhood in pictures. Let's get above the level of the cow having a calf—and a mother having a baby. Motherhood is worthy of a sweeter expression. —B. P. McCormick, McCormick Theatres, Canon City, Col.

CODE AND RENTALS TO NON-THEATRICALS

To the Editor of the Herald:

I would like to express my feelings along the line of the code the Government asks for.

One thing all agree on is that the box office tells the story for cash. Then protect the box office.

I hope the code will have a clause prohibiting the distributors from renting films to any non-theatrical outfit, when in competition to a licensed theatre.

I have a small theatre and sometimes boys pass and remark, "I saw that picture at our club." Four hundred boys free, with rental to the distributor probably one-half the exhibitor paid for the same picture.

The exhibitor should not be allowed to give free shows unless the other exhibitors in the same town agree.

I also hope the code will prohibit block booking. This will force the producer to make better pictures.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark.

TITLES TO HELP HARD-OF-HEARING

To the Editor of the Herald:

I wish to second the suggestion of Mr. Peter Bylsma of Napoleonville, La., in your issue of June 3d, in regards to producers inserting at least one subtitle in each reel of their productions.

I have been an exhibitor of the same theatre for the last nineteen years. I have been hard of hearing for the last 10 years, and how I would cherish a few subtitles in each reel so I would know what the picture was about. Most of my hard-of-hearing patrons and all of the deaf patrons would enjoy the pictures with the subtitles of bygone days.

When the titles were taken out of the pictures it had the same effect on thousands of deaf and hard-of-hearing people, that we had when Mr. Volstead took the "kick" out of beer.

Now, Mr. Editor, and you, too, Mr. J. C. Jenkins, what can we do to get some of these old titles back? There are thousands, and even hundreds of thousands of theatre patrons that would again enjoy a talking picture if these titles were again inserted.—An old Herald reader, John Egli, Manager, Hickory Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from 110 houses in 20 major cities of the country for the calendar week ended July 15, 1933, equaled $1,070,738, a decrease of $19,653 from the total of the previous calendar week, ended July 8, when 111 theatres in 20 cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,090,391.

NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL * *

'THE SPHINX'

Deaf Mute Who 'Talks' Glibly Proves Fascinating Slayer;

By ROSE PELSWICK.

Once again, this week at the Mayfair Theatre, Lionel Atwill impersonates a suave murderer. That's not giving away the plot, because Atwill has played so many maniacs, human vampires and diabolic scientists on the screen that his mere presence in a mystery film argues he's responsible for whatever deviltry's going on. This time he appears in the title role of a piece called "The Sphinx." And "The Sphinx" is a gentlemanly killer who amuses himself by strangling, of all people, stockbrokers.

ROSE PELSWICK.

You'll find "The Sphinx" a better than average melodrama. Suspense is sustained so adroitly that even though you know who did the murdering, you're kept on edge wondering how it was done. The solution isn't as ingenious as it might have been, but any detective story writer or director who can accomplish the feat of holding the attention of his audience until the end, is accomplishing something.

The picture opens with a shot of Atwill leaving the office of a stockbroker late at night. At the elevators of the deserted building he stops the janitor and asks him for a match. Then he asks him for the time. The janitor, disturbed by this late visitor, peeps into the stockbroker's office and finds the tenant strangled. The police arrest Atwill, known here as Jerome Breen, and Breen goes to trial. But he's acquitted because, even though the janitor swears he was the man who talked to him, several reputable physicians swear that Breen has been deaf and dumb since birth.

Cute?

Deaf Mute 'Talks'

A bright young newspaper reporter thereupon sets out to unravel the mystery. Twice more Breen strangles people; and the police are helpless because each time the deaf mute is identified as the murderer by the witnesses who assert he asked them for a match and the time of the day. And the problem isn't solved until a police inspector stumbles on a clue while playing the piano.

A good cast was assigned to the picture, for which Director Phil Rosen can take several bows. Theodore Newton is excellent as the bright young reporter and Sheila Terry, who has a very pleasant voice, is the romantic interest. Good performances are contributed also by Atwill; by Paul Hurst, as the piano-playing policeman; Lucien Prival, as Atwill's nefarious assistant; the gesticulating Luis Alberni, and Robert Ellis. An outstanding bit in the film occurs when Atwill, after murdering a young stockbroker's clerk, suddenly turns to his victim's mother and coolly asks her the time. That scene ought to make you clutch the arm of the person sitting next to you.

Lionel Atwill in the title role of "The Sphinx" is committing murder by the wholesale at the Mayfair Theatre this week. He is going about his job smoothly and suavely, and as though he heartily enjoyed his work. Atwill is good at this sort of role because even in as artificial a story as this he is able to be suggestively menacing; so menacing, indeed, that one sits on the edge of the seat while waiting for the police to catch him.

There is no mystery, as far as the audience is concerned, about the murderer, but there is a mystery in the clue that leads the police to him. The suspense of the picture is in the frantic efforts of the police and a nice young reporter, Jack Burton, to uncover the clue that will convict the man they are sure committed the crimes before he has a chance to knock off any more victims.

Sheila Terry and Lionel Atwill have important roles in "The Sphinx," the Mayfair's new screen attraction. Others in the cast are Theodore Newton and Robert Ellis.

"Sphinx" Is Satisfying Thrill Film

Lionel Atwill Makes Splendid Villain in the Mayfair's Show.

By WILLIAM BOEHNEL.

IF you haven't caught up on your weekly quota of mystery films drop in at the Mayfair and see "The Sphinx," a sufficiently light and shivery little picture, and you will be ahead of the game. In it Lionel Atwill, without whom a mystery picture is no mystery picture at all—or maybe it is—is deaf and dumb for the most part, and the young lady who gets gagged and bound to the chair is the striking and talented Sheila Terry instead of Fay Wray.

This picture of queer goings on concerns a series of mysterious murders, all of which have been committed in the same fashion. The victim is strangled, and as the suspected culprit leaves the scene of the crime he makes it a point to ask someone in the immediate vicinity what the exact time is.

Defense in Dumbness.

When this suspected culprit—he is none other than the wealthy philanthropist, Jerome Breen—is brought to trial it is proven that he is deaf and dumb and that the witnesses brought to testify against him must be suffering from hallucination. For, as the defense lawyer asks, if Breen is suffering from a congenital malady, how could he possibly ask the time even if he were at the scene of the crime.

At any rate, Jack Burton, a young reporter on the Chronicle, who is in love with Jerry Crane, the society editor, suspects Breen even though Jerry praises him (Breen) in her daily column and tells the world that Breen is so gentle and good he is incapable of harming anyone.

However, when a young clerk in Breen's brokerage house is murdered, Inspector Riley visits Breen with young Burton and thinks that he has discovered a clew. That night Riley is murdered, the moral of which is probably not to get too inquisitive when fanatical killers are running around loose.

Too Much Murder.

Breen might have got away with his orgy of murders—it is breaking no confidence to tell you that Breen is the guilty culprit—if he hadn't decided to make pretty Jerry Crane one of his victims after she discovered his secret. That is too much for young Burton, who, with the aid of a none too intelligent detective, tricks Breen into a confession.

Mr. Atwill plays the title role with adroitness and finish and Theodore Newton does right well as the young reporter. As the society editor Miss Terry has a chance to show that in addition to possessing good looks she is also a capable actress. Indeed, here is a young lady who has everything—beauty, charm, personality, ability—for a successful movie career, and she should go far in the audible cinema.

And, in conclusion, "The Sphinx" is an entertaining, although by no means exceptional, little thriller.

Old "Doctor X" Lionel Atwill is back in another murder mystery. This time he is seen as old Jerome Breen, an engaging philanthropist and heart-broken, who prowls about strangling people who stumble on "his secret." It is his secret which provides the suspense in "The Sphinx." Mr. Breen, a deaf-mute without a doubt, speaks clearly and distinctly to any accidental witness to his crime. Thus he confounds judges and jurors, embarrasses policemen and escapes punishment for his crimes.

Old Breen's "secret" remains one until he becomes interested in a woman. She is a sob sister and society editor who champions him stoutchly through his murder

37 EXCHANGES TO SERVE YOU!

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

Dear Herald:

Nebraska is happy. The wrinkles have smoothed out of the foreheads of farmers and business men, corn has jumped in price from a low of 9 cents per bushel to a high of 40 cents and last week the state was soaked with a three-inch rain and the catfish have started up the Elkhorn river and everything is lovely. Hip Hurrah.

Our wife's sweetcorn field, consisting of 36 hills, has begun to tassel and the stalks will soon be shooting for ears, and we hope they don't miss, for we'd sooner gnaw sweetcorn off of a cob than to make a birdie on a 5 par hole.

Yes sir, Nebraska is all right. The corn makes so much noise growing of nights that we have to sleep with mufflers on our ears.

Since that three-inch rain came you ought to see the smiles on these exhibitors' faces. One exhibitor smiled so hard that he got lockjaw and another one had to have his face lifted. There is nothing that can gum up the works out here now. Nebraska has placed the crown upon the brow of Old King Corn and said, "Go to it, old boy, we're for you 100 per cent." The only thing we don't like about it is that it's toodamhot to write colyums and play golf.

If you should see "Baby Face" billed in front of a theatre what kind of a picture would you say it was? Well, you'd be wrong, it isn't that kind of a picture at all. It's very much different. But don't let the name worry you—they had to give it some kind of a name—but go in and see it, for Barbara Stanwyck gives a very acceptable performance in a story that hasn't seen a barber shop in twenty years, but it was treated a little different from the average, and they made a very creditable picture of it, but they should have named it "From One Man to Another."

One Hollywood writer has worked herself into a lather fearing that a pending divorce action between a couple of prominent stars will throw the public into a panic and bring on a public calamity. Nothing of that kind is going to happen. The public has become so accustomed to star divorces that it is no longer news, but when a star has a baby out there it is entitled to front page space. That's news. Not only that, but the mother is advanced in public esteem a hundred per cent. If you don't think so, ask any mother in the country. And Dad has some old fashion notions about it himself.

It begins to look now like the exhibitors were going to be considered as one of the branches of this industry. The current issue of Hollywood Herald carries some very important news for the exhibitors. One item is that Will Hays is going to hold a conference with the producers, but that isn't the news, he's been doing that for the last ten years. The news is that the Academy—whatever that is, out in Hollywood—is going to throw in with the exhibitors and see that they get a break.

The Academy has prepared a questionnaire to be sent to all exhibitors in an effort to get their viewpoint on certain matters that have been a bone of contention ever since "Broncho Billy" used to kill 'em by the dozen, and that was some time back.

Question No. 3 has reference to the Block Booking system, and asks, "Is Block Booking advantageous or disadvantageous to the industry and also, to what extent, if at all, does it limit the exhibitor's ability to select programs which in his judgment are attractive to his patrons."

Unless the exhibitors answer that question very differently from the way they have talked to us, we believe ninety-nine out of every hundred will say yes, and yell it pretty loud. If they would enlarge upon their answers they would no doubt say that the Block Booking system is without equity in theory and vicious in practice, that to bind an exhibitor to play an entire group of pictures, regardless of merit, is a departure from the business ethics of any other line of business in the world, and the system was inaugurated for the sole purpose of requiring exhibitors to pay for the mistakes of the producers.

No automobile company can force an inferior and makeshift car on the public. No sugar refining company can find a market for an inferior brand of sugar. No woolen mill can put "shoddy" in their goods and sell it for woolen, so why should the public protect the producers in making an inferior product?

We believe the exhibitors will give that Academy a vote of thanks for their interest in their behalf, for it is the only constructive body that has given them as much as the once-over.

In question No. 6 in this questionnaire they ask, "To what extent will the return to normal theatre business depend on changes in the quality or type of pictures—can you state generally the direction in which such changes should be sought"? We don't believe there is an exhibitor in the country who will stutter when he answers that question, and we anticipate his answer to be "In the direction of wholesome stories and clean pictures."

We hope you exhibitors will give answer to all these questions and thus get your grievances before a tribunal that will mean something to you. It's the first real chance you have ever had. Don't overlook it.

We have been told that if you drink beer it will make you fat. As for ourself, we'd sooner chance beans and sowbelly reinforced with plenty of huckleberry pie. However—

If drinking beer will make you fat
And getting fat is what you fear,
Our advice to you is simply that
You drink water and lay off of beer.

It's 100 in the shade right now. That's what they call good corn weather, but right now our mind wanders to the mountains, but that's all there is about us that wanders, just our mind, the rest of us has to stick here on the job, but until it gets cooler, auf wieder sehen.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp, James Murray—good program picture with a powerful draw. I have found out who the True Story readers are by playing this. They say it does not follow the story but the picture is so good that all were pleased. The print was oily which made it appear to be out of focus. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 22-23.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp, James Murray, Thelma Todd—Advertised this as taken from True Story Magazine. All the True Story Book fans came in to see it and thus our Sunday and Monday gross was away above average, and all patrons reported a good show. Thanks, Columbia, we can use some more too! Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 2-3.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

BELOW THE SEA: Ralph Bellamy, Fay Wray—Here is a real melodrama for you. The title may handicap it. Many may confuse it with Williamson's "Beneath the Sea." This has thrills, surprises, novelty, romance. Go after it in a big way. A real picture for the whole family. Business a little above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN: Barbara Stanwyck, Nils Asther—A picture with a good plot which was well acted by both Stanwyck and Asther. The public enjoyed it very much; however, it did not increase my box office receipts. Running time, 89 minutes. Played June 25-26-27.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark. General patronage.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: Nancy Carroll, John Boles—Business above average and little better than average story. Seemed to please nearly all.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

DECEPTION: Leo Carrillo, Barbara Weeks—Movie patrons will more than get their money's worth seeing this. The romance part of it will satisfy the romantically inclined and the exhibition of wrestling will more than satisfy the action fan. You can make quite a fuss about it, bring them in, the picture will satisfy. A real cool Sunday brought some extra business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard—A high class love story, the type where the rich girl does all the wooing. I wish that they could have found another way of solving the lovers' difficulties than by having the girl's father commit suicide. No doubt they wanted to show the great love of the father who wanted to insure his daughter's happiness, but most patrons would have liked it better if another way had been found. Regular hot weather business on this.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RIDIN' FOR JUSTICE: Buck Jones—Seemed like the usual western to me but business was light at every show. Played June 30-July 1.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Regis Toomey, Anita Page—A good action picture, the airplane stunts are good, the acting is very good and this picture gave extra good satisfaction and drew average business for us. Will make a fine Saturday night show where they do not go for westerns. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 7.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evalyn Knapp—A good, clean picture with lots of action and a good story. Pleased my patrons. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 5.—Earle Eveland, Opera House, McConnelsville, Ohio. Small town patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evalyn Knapp—Only a program picture with very little drawing power. If you play this one day, on bargain day, you will come out but by all means do not play it over one day. Running time, 67 minutes. Played July 5.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SUNDOWN RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—Good western. Drew better than usual for westerns. Played July 8.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SUNDOWN RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—Buck Jones is extra good in this one and the Saturday night western crowd thought it a great show. Drew little better than average business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played July 8.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TEXAS CYCLONE: Tim McCoy—A cowboy tale with speed and interest that pleased even those who like neither McCoy nor westerns. Played June 23-24.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

WAR CORRESPONDENT: Jack Holt, Ralph Graves—Picture pleased everybody and did nice summer business. Played June 24-25-26.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

WHEN STRANGERS MARRY: Jack Holt—I did not see this but it pleased a nice Saturday night audience. Played July 31.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt—Very disappointing. Didn't do near the business I thought it would. Story a little weak. Didn't seem to please.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

First Division

BIG DRIVE, THE: A poor draw but the picture had some good shots in it. I looked for more ex-service men in it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—Very good story that drew above average business. Acting by Barthelmess, Bette Davis and Dorothy Jordan very good. If you haven't played it by all means do so.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess, Sally Eilers—Here's one that will get the business and please. Played in awful hot weather. Business very good.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—Excellent picture which pleased 100%. Splendid recording and photography. They went out of their way to tell me this was good. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 25-26.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—A knockout for laughs. Good clean fun that will earn you more good will than free storage for homeless mother-in-laws. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 4.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—A nice show for any theatre. Especially good for Friday-Saturday.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—By all means play this before baseball season is over and use the trailer. This picture is a box office natural and it pleases well. Played June 27-28.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

LITTLE GIANT, THE: Edward G. Robinson—For some unknown reason it did not click for us. Those that saw it seemed to be pleased.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—Good picture of the historical type but fell flat at the box office. Hardly got film rental.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson, Bebe Daniels, Aline MacMahon—Very fine in every way. Fourth run in our section and still a nice draw. Robinson is marvelous, but has he ever made a poor picture? Daniels and MacMahon give grand performances. Another real honest-to-gosh picture from Warners-First National. A happier ending would have pleased more patrons but for once the master minds of Hollywood stuck to historical facts. Being a saga of our sister state, Colorado, this picture struck pretty close to home. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 2-3-4.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Rural and small town patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson, Bebe Daniels, Aline MacMahon—Picture pronounced excellent by the higher-class thinking patrons, but the average level of our audiences is below that and many thought the picture dry, just as a biography is dry reading to the fellow who likes lively fiction. Business below the average of any action picture. It was whipped by "70,000 Witnesses," "Night of June 13," "War Correspondent" and the business on "You Said a Mouthful" looked like a landslide compared to "Silver Dollar." Played June 25-27.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson, Richard Arlen, Zita Johann—A very exciting picture. The fishing scenes were educational. All three actors gave an excellent performance. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 2-3-4.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark. General patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor—A delightful picture from all angles; singing, music and story. Box office not so much, but anyway, it's a pleasure to run a picture for which we do not have to apologize. Played July 2-3.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S.D. Small town patronage.

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—I am happy to be able to at last report a Fox picture favorably. This picture did considerably above average business. No big lot of favorable comment.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor—Poorest Gaynor picture I have played. Too much mythical kingdom stuff. Running time, 80 minutes. Played July 6-7.—Earle Eveland, Opera House, McConnelsville, Ohio. Small town patronage.

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—Poorest picture Miss Gaynor has ever played in. Plenty of money spent on the production, lavish, but not much story. Not much romance. Several asked why they put these foreigners in pictures. Garat did not click; however, his singing was good, but talking killed picture in part. They want Gaynor and Farrell with their usual type of story. Played July 2-3.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BONDAGE: Dorothy Jordan, Alexander Kirkland—It takes a lot of crust to meet your customers after poking a thing like this down their throats.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CHEATERS AT PLAY: Thomas Meighan—Old but good. Had it paid for and ran as an owl show. Seemed to please and at least no kicks.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Warner Baxter, Mimi Jordan—Rather disappointing. Baxter is showing his age. We hope Miriam Jordan has snapped out of it since she changed her name. Herbert Mundin, as the cockney butler, saves the show. Not by any means a poor picture but we hate to see Baxter given such poor breaks as Fox has handed him recently. Running time, 73 minutes. Played June 21-22.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Miriam Jordan, Warner Baxter—Pleasing. Receipts lowest of year. Played June 24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Stuart Erwin, Marian Nixon—Here's a dandy program picture that should please any audience most anywhere. Failed to draw here on account of title and prominence of stars. Played June 19-20.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon—Ran this for Saturday afternoon matinee and the adult patronage liked it. Not so interesting for kiddies. Spencer Tracy and Marian Nixon are liked here. Running time, 77 minutes. Played July 1.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon—A program feature, but satisfying, except as to gross receipts the picture should have done better, it deserved to. Not to mention what we deserve. It is a nice, clean little picture, good for the whole family. Played July 2-3.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN WEST, THE: George O'Brien—Extra good western story by Zane Grey. Drew extra well and made money for me. Zane Grey stories always do good here.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: Boots Mallory, James Dunn—A picture for the whole family. It pleases old and young alike. The kid, Buster Phelps, is great. It's clean and should please all classes.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

HELLO, SISTER: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—Good old Fox and their cavalcade of hits. They've hit me all over already. Well, it won't take many more like this one.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Just a fair program picture. Played July 4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

IT'S GREAT TO BE ALIVE: Raul Roulien, Edna May Oliver—Good hot weather picture. It's different. Last reel excellent. Patrons called it cute. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 27-28.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

IT'S GREAT TO BE ALIVE: Raul Roulien, Gloria Stuart, Edna May Oliver—Ran this picture with a bathing beauty revue that I worked up locally. Seemed to please the majority though personally I was disappointed in it. Singing of Roulien appears to be dubbed and can be easily noticed if watched closely. A very much out of the ordinary story about the last man on earth with a world of women. Do not bill Edna May Oliver very heavily as she has a very minor part. Running time, 65 minutes.—H. B. Schuessler, Lafayette Theatre (Martin Theatres), Lafayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

PLEASURE CRUISE: Genevieve Tobin, Roland Young—No title. No stars. No entertainment. No business. No good.—Harry Musgrave—Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PLEASURE CRUISE: Genevieve Tobin—Very poor. I am ashamed to take their hard earned money and offer such as this for entertainment. It did not draw at all and it pleased even less. Played June 29-30.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—A good western that pleased the western fans 100%. Great entertainment for the kiddies. Beautiful scenery and a story that held the interest of the patrons. Running time, 64 minutes. Played June 28-29.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—One of the best westerns I've ever ran. Did extra business. Pleased nearly all who saw it.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—Only fair.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Gave excellent satisfaction. Business reasonable. Played July 1.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Zane Grey story and a mighty fine picture. Would advise every exhibitor to book it. Patrons well pleased.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Average drawing power but a very pleasing western. Good for Saturday. Played June 24.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—A box office natural. It pleased 100%. I wish we had more that draw and please like this. Played July 4-5.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, Ernest Truex—An amusing comedy drama burlesquing the beauteous and stalwart Amazon ladies of a bygone day. Fox spent some money making this, but none of us could see where Liberty's four stars were earned. Played June 30-July 1.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

Mayfair

SISTER TO JUDAS: Claire Windsor—A good story dealing with a girl who made good in spite of her family, admirably portrayed by Claire Windsor, who is at her best in a more vivacious role. Holmes Herbert comes to the highest standard in every way. Mr. Harron's portrayal of the weak, sensitive husband was very good. A splendid show for girls to take their families to see. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 7-8.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark. General patronage.

MGM

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro, Myrna Loy—Another good picture from Metro with plenty of music. Acting by both Novarro and Loy very good, but entirely too slow. If the producers had cut out two reels and put in a little more action, this would have been a much better picture. As it is the audience tires of a picture of this type. Novarro is very good and his singing is better than ever. Running time, 88 minutes. Played July 6-7.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro, Myrna Loy—Good picture. It pleased well and the draw was average. Myrna Loy is lovely in this. I hope she is given more big parts. Good photography but the sound was not up to standard. Played July 2-3.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro—Very good. Pleased about 75%. Running time, 88 minutes. Played July 7-8.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery and FAST LIFE: William Haines—Played these a little late, so put them on bargain night. They would have been a bargain on any night. Our patrons were highly delighted, both with entertainment offered and the price of admission. You can play either of them on your most particular date.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

CLEAR ALL WIRES: Lee Tracy—A fair program picture, a little action but nothing to brag about. You can get along without this one.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy—It got a lot of laughs when Laurel and Hardy were on the screen. Different. Had some good singing but the songs were too long. Plenty of fun when they got in the wine cellar.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines and BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery—Played these a little late, so put them on bargain night. They would have been a bargain on any night. Our patrons were highly delighted, both with entertainment offered and the price of admission. You can play either of these on your most particular date.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

FAST WORKERS: John Gilbert, Mae Clarke—Only fair entertainment. Didn't get any money.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FAST WORKERS: John Gilbert—Fair picture but you'd hardly expect to see John Gilbert in such a role. Patrons seemed to enjoy the wisecracking and there were no walkouts.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FAST WORKERS: Only fair program.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston—My biggest mistake was not running this for four days. It took two days for them to find out what a really wonderful picture this is. Walter Huston makes you forget that he is an actor and there is so much material that this picture grips you from the very start. Get it for a screening and then run it three or four days. It'll deliver.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore—Not much for entertainment. Played on bargain nights and had a few to start with. Just the operator and ticket seller left at the end. Talks, talks, talks and talks.—Harry Musgrove, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MEN MUST FIGHT: Lewis Stone, Diana Wynyard—Ran this for an owl show, so they couldn't kick much when we just gave it to them. Nothing to brag about. Can be passed up and never missed.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies—Good program picture. Marion Davies too silly at times. Would have been better had this been corrected. Running time, 100 minutes. Played June 29-30.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—A mighty good comedy by this pair, with very able support from Anita Page and Norman Foster. Ran this after six weeks of the hottest weather ever known at this time of year and no rain since May so the attendance was not so good as this production merits. Running time, 76 minutes. Played July 4-5-6.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas.—Small town patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—Wonderful picture and cast but poor business. Too far out in the short grass to put this one over. Drew better class of patrons but there aren't enough of them.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE, THE: Irene Dunne, Phillips Holmes—This one ranks fair for entertainment but didn't get any money for me. Irene Dunne does splendid work.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE, THE: Irene Dunne, Phillips Holmes—A good picture with some clever acting and entertaining. It's not the type of story that draws but when they do come, you send them home satisfied, and they might come back.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—A very fine picture. This picture was well directed, well acted and enjoyed by our patrons. Give us more of this class and less smut. Business good.—Estes and Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro—The weakest sister we have had from any company for several months. Patrons coming out of the theatre (during the show and after) told me they felt embarrassed to watch Hayes and Novarro try to put the thing over. Just a total loss of two perfectly good play dates. Running time, 79 minutes. Played July 5-6.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—I had to run it but I don't know why. It certainly isn't a small town picture and Clark Gable didn't belong in it. Leo must be skidding in something and they ought to throw him some sand.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TARZAN THE APE MAN: Johnny Weismuller—Played this picture a return date rather than play "Kongo." Average kid business in afternoon and light both nights. Wonderful picture of its kind. Played June 14-15.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

WASHINGTON MASQUERADE: Lionel Barrymore—Too much politics. What people want is entertainment nowadays. No good, lay off as it will not please. When the producers wake up to the fact that the public wants entertainment, the better us poor exhibitors will be off.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Fair comedy of the slapstick variety. Drew just fair business for two days.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Good comedy of the "Crazy Variety."—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—A wonderful picture, expertly directed and acted. The picture pleased most everyone who saw it, and that is saying a great deal as the people of this town do not usually like this type of picture. Metro has given us quite a number of good pictures this season and we hope they will continue. Running time, 101 minutes. Played July 3-4.—J. J. Medford Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage

Monogram

FROM BROADWAY TO CHEYENNE: Rex Bell—Fair but just another reason why westerns are losing their grip. Poor acting and directing. Fair photography but anyone can take a picture outdoors.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PHANTOM BROADCAST: Not much to recommend in this one. Is slow. Quite a lot of footage with no dialogue or music. Cannot recommend this as average program, regardless of the fact that McCarthy of the Herald recommends it rather strongly. Bought it on strength of his review, but got stung. Played July 5.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Baby Leroy—Much better than the last Chevalier pictures. Your customers will get a real kick out of Baby Leroy.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CRIME OF THE CENTURY: Stuart Erwin—A murder mystery that is just a little different. It gives the audience a chance to find the guilty party and then shows them where they are right or wrong. Ordinary business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DEVIL IS DRIVING, THE: Edmund Lowe,, Wynne Gibson, James Gleason, Lois Wilson—Poor business first day, better than average second day, and better last day. Title may have caused poor first day. Lots of action and picture seemed to please. Some spots not just right for kids, though we showed it on Sunday. Played June 11-13.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March —Very good war picture.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

FOLLOW THE LEADER: Ed Wynn—not much good. Pretty raw in several places. Unless the people responsible for the making of pictures don't make them so the family can attend without seeing so much rot and filth, there will not be any comeback to the picture business. When people call you over the phone or meet you on the street and say, "Is this going to be a good, clean picture?" it looks like they were doing some shopping. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 26-27.—Earle Eveland, Opera House, McConnelsville, Ohio. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: Inasmuch as Paramount used more directors, stars and writers than my total attendance would amount to, it occurs to me that the limited space allowed in the regular form would hardly be in keeping with such a preponderance of talent so I am devoting a little more space to this particular report. From the elaborate preparations made for this production, one gathers the impression, Paramount's original intention was to make of this opus a road show. In this they were eminently successful, that is, if I may be permitted to point out the "Road":

Well, this road should have trailed through some forest dark and deep
Where stately whispering pines their lone vigils keep,
Where crawling insects sting and slimy reptiles creep,
Where only those who produced the picture could view it and weep
While hungry swarms of mosquitoes sang them not to sleep.

I'll admit the poetry is no classic, but refer you to my inspiration:

"Bold is the task, when subjects, grown too wise, Instruct a monarch where his error lies."—Homer.

And the irony of it is, there was a good foundation for a real story, by one writer, which could have been developed into a good picture by any one of the numerous directors used in producing it. May Robson and Richard Bennett turned in good performances and it only is more to be regretted that they had such a poor vehicle for their talents. I sometimes wonder if, after all, Fifty Million Frenchmen Couldn't be Wrong? Looks as if they might be wronger than a less number. Played June 30.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Lila Lee—Satisfactory summer business. Picture pleased everybody. Played July 2-3.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable—Not a special, but a good program feature. Comments of patrons were favorable. Good entertainment for the whole family. Played June 25-26.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—More power to you, Mae, you have set a pace in this one that all of 'em will be shooting at. We have wished for pictures that are different and wished for them, and Mae West came right out and gave us a different picture and it proves to be a knockout. Boys, here is a picture with entertainment, one they will enjoy even on a hot night. I predict—are you listening—that the styles Mae brought back from the gay nineties will prevail again this coming fall. Keep looking; you will see. Wrote the above just after seeing tremendous opening first night. It did not hold interest every night. After opening got weaker at box office until last night it passed out.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Good, as are most of them from Paramount.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin—A good western with plenty of comedy and it pleased. When you can find a picture that they like, you've done something. Drew well on weekend dates.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane —Good Zane Grey western. Average western business. I'd hate to try to build up a Saturday kid business without cowboys. We have one four-year-old among our patrons who has to be carried out crying every time he has to leave a show with a horse in it. Played June 16-17.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

RKO

ANIMAL KINGDOM: Ann Harding, Leslie Howard —As a picture this has absolutely no merit. Harding is the only drawing card and even then the public was greatly disappointed. Running time, 79 minutes. Played June 30-July 1.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark. General patronage.

CHRISTOPHER STRONG: Katharine Hepburn—Not good for us, and I doubt anywhere.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Pretty good, with music, dancing and singing in spots. This helped put over the nonsense of the two comedians. A takeoff on the Geneva peace conference. Clean and seemed to please a majority. Box office light. This territory slowly burning up. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 25-26.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Not as good as their others; seemed to have slipped a cog somewhere, but couldn't figure out just where. We expected a big laugh, but only got a few chuckles.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

EMERGENCY CALL: Bill Boyd—A very pleasing program picture, a good story of the life of ambulance drivers and doctors and nurses in a large hospital. Gave good satisfaction and drew average business. Okay for Saturday. Running time, 63 minutes. Played July 4.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong—The best of its kind. Why the producers let the press in on all their secrets, and then allow all the whys and wherefores to be printed in all the fan magazines and reviews long before the small town gets the picture, is more than I can understand.—Harry Musgrave, Cosy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kan. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot, Robert Armstrong—While quite a few ladies refused to attend, this nevertheless grossed more than any picture we have shown since "State Fair." The patrons made no complaint, the producer got no split and the exhibitor had no kick. So a good time was had by all. Incidentally, it's a remarkable production. Played July 4-5.—Peter Bysma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot, Robert Armstrong—This picture got quite a lot of extra business, but would have gotten more if it hadn't been so hot and if the producers had kept down the publicity of how it was made. Fan magazines are doing more to wreck the show business than any other thing I know of just by telling the public what to go see. My patrons are nearly always disappointed in pictures the fan magazines recommend they see. Several of my patrons told me they didn't care to see this one as they had been reading how they made it and it would be too mechanical.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot, Robert Armstrong—As a program picture this would be just fair, but not as the special we paid for.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—This suburban location won't support a matinee every day, so we run a children's special matinee on Saturday only the year around, using a club idea. During the summer school vacation we run this child show on Wednesday also, and have to see that summer bookings are suitable for both days. Ran "Orphan Annie" for them and had SRO in the afternoon. This picture ran almost average business for the adults both nights, too. Played June 7-8.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Charles Ruggles—A mighty fine musical show. Plenty comedy by Ruggles and no draggy moments. My advice is book it and step on your advertising as it will please. Above average picture.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Phil Harris, Charles Ruggles, Greta Nissen—Swell picture that did a wonderful business on the Fourth of July. Ideal for holiday showing or any other showing for that matter. Harris not as good and does not sing as much as he did in the RKO short several months back titled "So This Is Harris." Ruggles practically the whole show and kept the house in an uproar practically every second he was on the screen. Picture not near as hot as the paper and press sheet on it would have you believe. Contains some good music and one good dance number. Step on this one heavily and give it your best days as it can easily stand a lot of pushing. Running time, 75 minutes.—H. B. Schuessler, Lafayette Theatre (Martin Theatres), Lafayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

ROADHOUSE MURDER, THE: Eric Linden, Arline Judge—Average night business with kids down 10 per cent for the matinee. Good picture. Played June 9-10.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

SPORT PARADE, THE: Joel McCrea, Marian Marsh, Skeets Gallagher, Walter Catlett—Very good action picture for week-end. Trials of college athlete hero in commercialized sport after graduation. Plenty of good comedy from Gallagher, Catlett and Robert Benchley. Pleased well. Stress sport angle. Running time, 64 minutes. Played June 28-29.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

STRANGE JUSTICE: Marian Marsh, Reginald Denny, Norman Foster—A good picture for its type, although it was a little too tense and unreal near the end. Just like all the other pictures concerning prisons.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark. General patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—Fair picture of its kind, but the wrong kind to do any business. Lost money; in fact, didn't gross rental.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Tiffany

WHISTLIN' DAN: Ken Maynard—Usual cowboy film, poor print. Usual summer gross. Played July 7-8.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

United Artists

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor—Whatever you do, don't pass this up as it is a great box office tonic. If you have not played it be sure to use the cow publicity stunt suggested in the press sheet. It is the easiest and most effective stunt I ever heard of. This was one of the biggest draws I have had this year and I am sure it pleased 100 per cent. After playing this I feel that I do not exaggerate when I say that when better entertainment is to be had Eddie Cantor will furnish it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 9-10.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

WHOOPEE: Eddie Cantor—Very, very good, color perfect and drew almost as much as "Kid from Spain." —J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

Universal

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty, Anita Page—Patrons very much enthused over this feature. Animal acts that are really big. Abounding in thrills from the moment it opens to the closing shot. Never have I seen patrons sit in such breathless attention before, and at the end of the show they stop and tell you it was good. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 23-24.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty—This is a thriller. Beatty takes 40 lions and tigers and puts them through their paces. It pleased the few that saw it. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 30-July 1. —J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING PRESIDENT, THE: Roosevelt—This is entirely too long. If cut down about two reels would have been much better as it is not so much. Running time, 60 minutes. Played July 3-4—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman and Band—This has been cut down quite a bit from original length, which speeds it up to a fast pace. Also a few new scenes added. Beautiful color. We did a very satisfactory business on this. Running time, 60 minutes. Played July 3-4.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE ARENA: Ken Maynard—A very good Maynard action picture. The cash customers seemed to like it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 5-6.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

LUCKY DOG: Charles "Chic" Sale and Dog—See no excuse for this being made. Don't think it will do you any good to play it. Running time, 55 minutes. Played June 28-29.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MUMMY, THE: Boris Karloff—Good child business at matinee. Adult attendance dropped sharply both nights. Played June 28-29.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—This team will have a hard job on their hands to keep going under pressure, they just can't take it. This picture does not register real comedy like the last one they appeared in, and they must not consent to coming out in a comedy unless they are quite sure they have some real laughs. I am convinced that there is not a better comedy team on the screen, but they must have material.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—We think better than "They Just Had to Get Married" and box office proved it. These stars are well liked here. Picture is well done. Plenty of fast ones which an audience can take two ways, but Pitts and Summerville can get away with it where more sophisticated actors would either go over our patron's heads or land in the gutter. Worth every plug you want to give it. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 25-27.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

RADIO PATROL: Robert Armstrong, June Clyde—Police picture which pleased, though sad ending detracted. Played June 27-28.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

RUSTLERS' ROUNDUP: Tom Mix—Good picture for western fans. Tom manages as usual to fight several huskies single handed and comes out victorious. Played August 1.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TERROR TRAIL, THE: Tom Mix, Naomi Judge—Good western and we were glad to show Mix again, although he is not the old Mix by far. Mix silent a far more impressive figure than when vocal. Patrons pleased. Played June 23-24.—P. G. Estes, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TERROR TRAIL, THE: Tom Mix, Tony, Jr.—Another good western. We thought westerns were through, but we find they are being appreciated again. At least they are clean, which is more than we can say of some of the so-called high-class pictures. Business fair.—Estes and Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner

EX-LADY: Bette Davis, Gene Raymond—Very sophisticated and there were a few walkouts, but the young folks liked it and they are the ones who are keeping the small theatre going. Weather too hot and dry for a good attendance. Running time, 62 minutes. Played July 1-2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GIRL MISSING: Ben Lyon, Mary Brian—Good program picture.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney—A very good picture with Cagney at his best. However, the picture is too slow and not enough action to keep up interest throughout the entire picture. Cagney does not have much drawing power here and business was about average. If the picture had been cut down some it would have been 100 per cent better. Running time, 76 minutes. Played July 8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KEYHOLE, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—A fair program picture. Running time, 69 minutes. Played June 26-27.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

LADIES THEY TALK ABOUT: Barbara Stanwyck—Very good picture of its kind. It drew very well and pleased. Excellent photography and sound. Played July 6-7.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

MYSTERY OF THE WAX MUSEUM: Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray—Drawing power only fair. Splendid picture for its kind, but few people want horror pictures any more. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 20-21.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—A very good picture with plenty action and comedy. We ran it as a double feature, but it would rate two days by itself. Played July 7-8.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Plenty of action and thoroughly pleased our audiences. Usual July 4th gross and held up pretty well for summer. Played July 4-6.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—A swell show, but people don't seem to go for this star. Business far below par.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kan. Small town patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—One of the finest pictures ever shown here, a clean entertaining story that every one liked, but they just won't turn out for an Arliss picture. The older people come, but the younger ones stay away and there are not enough of the older ones that are showgoers to make the showing of Arliss pictures profitable. Go after them with all you have when you play this, for you have a great show. This picture did $14 more second night than first, the best indication in the world that a picture is good. Running time, 73 minutes. Played July 5-6.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—A very good picture, but it's hard to sell George Arliss. The picture drew much better the second night and believe that it is good for a three-day run.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

World Wide

DYNAMITE RANCH: Ken Maynard—Very poor western and they laughed more at the serious parts of this than they did at the comedy. Played July 7-8.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BIRTH OF JAZZ: Krazy Kat—Especially good cartoon for any program. Running time, 7 minutes.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

CAMPUS CODES: Sunrise Comedy—A very good comedy and unlike most of the previous two-reelers we have played from Columbia. It is quite a relief to get away from slapstick comedy once in a while. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HEAR 'EM AND WEEP: Lambs Gambol—Starts out as a swell oldtime songfest with great talent and grand music, but degenerates into a bar-room brawl. It looks as if the people who make our product really want federal censorship. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

MUTUAL MAN, THE: Lambs Gambol—We were not ashamed of this one. Above the average for a two-reel comedy. Hal Skelly and Anne do a knockout comedy dance number. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

SEEING STARS: Krazy Kat—Excellent cartoon containing all of the popular comedians, Joe E. Brown, Marx Brothers, Durante, Laurel and Hardy, Marie Dressler, etc. It caused lots of comment.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

STEAM BOAT WILLIE: Mickey Mouse—Good cartoon for any program. Running time, 7 minutes.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

SAILING A SQUARE-RIGGER: Magic Carpet Series—Not much of interest; entire reel deals with the title.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MGM

ASLEEP IN THE FEET: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—The best comedy ever made by this popular team; at least, that is my opinion. Running time, two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

ASLEEP IN THE FEET: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Nothing very big.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BIG DITCH OF PANAMA, THE: Fitzpatrick Traveltalk—Only fair. My patrons don't care much for them.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BONE CRUSHERS: Sport Champion—Good one-reeler showing wrestling champions is a clicker.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK A WIFE: Taxi Boys—The best comedy of this series we have played. Full of laughs and every one liked it. We believe the Taxi Boys would be very good if they had better stories for their comedies. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BULLONEY: Flip the Frog—Better than average.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

CHALK UP: Willie Hoppe—Very good. Shows Willie Hoppe doing some fancy shooting at both pool and billiards.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHILI AND CHILLS: Oddity—good for turtle fight alone. First one I ever saw.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHIMP, THE: Laurel and Hardy—Good comedy.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

CUCKOO, THE MAGICIAN: Flip the Frog—Just another cartoon. Not good or bad.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DESERT REGATTA: Sport Champions—Taken on a salt lake in Death Valley, I think, and there are some good motorboat racing scenes. Plenty of speed and spills.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DUCK HUNTER'S PARADISE: Oddity—Very good. You'll get a kick out of this, if you ever went in a "blind" to shoot ducks.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FALLEN ARCHES: Charley Chase—Just now and then they laughed. I'd like to run one comedy that had some really funny sequences.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FISH HOOKEY: Our Gang—Fair. Pleased the kids. They stick with the gang and are satisfied with their antics.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FISH HOOKEY: Our Gang—Only fair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FORGOTTEN BABIES: Our Gang—Best Gang comedy for some time. These little fellows are hard to understand. Spankey handles the whole show and does a good job of it.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FREE WHEELING: Our Gang—Better than some of the others.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FUNNY FACE: Flip the Frog—Just another cartoon that pleased the children and not the adults. Flip has had some sorry cartoons this season and here's hoping he gets a better break next season. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FUNNY FACE: Flip the Frog—Just that much more pen and ink wasted. Not so much for a cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FUNNY FACE: Flip the Frog—Good cartoon.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE: Musical Revue in color—This is one of the best comedies that we have ever had the pleasure of showing in our theatre. All in color with lots of pretty girls and good music and dancing. We had quite a few patrons come back to see it the second and third time. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE: Musical Revue in color—Extra good two-reelers that please all.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

KNOCKOUT, THE: Boy Friends—Pretty good comedy.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

LUNCHROOM, THE: Flip the Frog—Just another cartoon and not so funny.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

NURSEMAID, THE: Flip the Frog—One more reel of filler.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

POOCH: Our Gang—Good comedy.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

SCHOOL DAYS: Flip the Frog—One new idea in the cartoon. I have seen all their other ideas six times before.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

SWING HIGH: Sport Champion—An aerial act by the Flying Cordonas and what an act. If you don't thrill at this, you're hopeless.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THEIR FIRST MISTAKE: Laurel and Hardy—Much better than some of their previous comedies.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

TECHNO-CRACKED: Flip the Frog—Good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WILD BABIES: Boy Friends—Comedy with considerable music.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

WRECKETY WRECKS: Taxi Boys—Not so hot. Leo just grunted when we threw this on the screen. They should have put in a few sub-titles and described the funny parts. Shame on you, Hal Roach.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

DON'T PLAY BRIDGE WITH YOUR WIFE: If this was a comedy, nobody laughed.—Mayme P. Mus-

FRESH HAM: Fable—Not up to Fable's standard. Not much to it.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Universal

BOYS WILL BE BOYS: Frank Albertson, Sally Blane—Amusing two-reeler. Sally is a cafe dancer; Frank is in love with her; Frank's pa has had an affair with her and her real boy friend shows up. From then on every one gets tangled up in her dressing room. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

FAMILY TROUBLES: Henry Armetta—Deliver us from these foreign actors who cannot speak the English language. Why they are featured is a mystery to every one except Universal. Otherwise fair. We have exhibited this producer's product since 1912 and find their weak point is comedy.—Estes and Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

OFFICER, SAVE MY CHILD: Slim Summerville—Will get by. Nothing extra.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BROADWAY BREVITIES: The best two-reelers I play. Seldom have a bad one. Good music and dancing. Have the two-reel comedies backed off the screen, as a good comedy nowadays is seldom seen. Running time, two reels.—Earle Eveland, Opera House, McConnelsville, Ohio. Small town patronage.

C'EST PARIS: Good colored musical and worth the running time. Am using these instead of the two-reel tragedies some people call comedies.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HEY, HEY WESTERNER: Broadway Brevity—Good and then some. Finest color we have seen in two years. A musical comedy "ro-day-o" in color. All it needs is Eddie Cantor and we would swear it was part of "Whoopee" and that's saying something. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

HEY, POP: Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle—Went over well, judging from the laughs and the number who stayed to see it run the second time.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LEASE BREAKERS, THE: Willie Creager's Band —A very good comedy of the musical type that is usually well liked here or in any other place. We would like to have more of this kind. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MUNICIPAL BAND WAGON: Melody Master Series—This short went over with a bang. We received much praise for this one and were asked when we would have another. We consider them an addition to any program and recommend them highly. —Estes and Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

NICKELETTE: Pepper Pot—Should be titled "Looking Back." The exhibitors today want to look forward. Can't remember the days when they were quite that bad, an old exhibitor, since 1907. Junk it and save the reputation of the company.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark. General patronage.

NORTHERN EXPOSURE: Broadway Brevity—Perfect photography, excellent recording and entirely different from anything ever made before. You can promise this as the best short ever made and come mighty near delivering the goods. Running time, 16 minutes.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

PICKING A WINNER: Broadway Brevity in color —One of the best Brevities I have run. This has more pep to it than any short subject I ever saw. Photography perfect and recording good. Running time, 16 minutes.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

PIE, PIE, BLACKBIRD: Band Act—Classy one-reel musical.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

UP ON THE FARM: Melody Master Series—Extra good one-reel musical enjoyed by all.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Universal

LOST SPECIAL: Frank Albertson—Going over nicely and is well done. Photography all right and young leads attractive. The villain merits the hisses he gets. He is good in the part.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"KEEP DOWN THE NUT"

The big news in the July 6 issue of Hollywood Herald, is the front page announcement that the Academy of Arts and Sciences, Hollywood's organization of creative workers has entered the "code sweepstakes" by directly contacting exhibitors with a questionnaire on various points of exhibition.

To us, the most intriguing is the query wherein exhibitors and managers are asked to opinionate on what type of pictures should be made in the best interests of the box office. We commend the Academy for considering the hitherto neglected exhibitor in this hour of studio stress, but we doubt the lasting value of the ultimate returns.

The prophet has not yet risen who can foretell the most profitable picture trend, and the solution of our problems, ladies and gentlemen of the Academy, is not to be found in a nationwide guessing contest.

The correct answer to 99% of all picture production ills is that hoary, immortal four word compendium of show business: "Keep Down the Nut"!

BETTER TEAMWORK

Home office advertising men are getting closer to the theatres. Paramount has inaugurated a system of planning and executing exploitation campaigns on pictures as soon as the scripts have been approved. Tieups are worked out while the picture is in production so that theatres may be benefited and in shape to go as soon as bookings are made.

Radio has also put over nationwide hookups on pictures before general release dates in order that exhibitors might avail themselves of these advance plugs. Columbia has worked along these lines on some of their latest features, and other producers have made similar plans.

Theatre managers and publicity men appreciate this help. It is a far step from the antiquated method of making a picture first and leaving the sorely pressed advertising man to shift for himself.

DIPLOMACY

In the years he has served as skipper of the Paramount, Stapleton, Staten Island, Sedge Coppock has slowly but surely made the theatre an integral part of his community's activities, so much so that one might reasonably regard it in the light of a civic institution as well as a temple of amusement.

Sedge's activities have appeared frequently in the pages of the Club section where members have acquainted themselves with his community building campaigns. Coppock's latest coup, chronicled in the Round Table, issue July 8, is put forth as a sterling example of what can be done in the simultaneous "selling" of a theatre and city.

In short, Sedge persuaded that mightiest of mighties—the Interstate Commerce Commission—to okeh permanent round trip reduced railroad fares so that potential patrons from all over the Island can travel to his town. The idea took plenty of delicate handling, and quite a few "mountains" had to be moved.

But it was done, the town as well as the theatre profiting thereby. Coppock's inspired tieup really transcends exploitation. It smacks very much of ambassadorial diplomacy.

"YOURS TO COMMAND"

A copy of Ed Kuykendall's talk before the Rotary International Convention in Boston as reported in the Herald, issue of July 8, should be placed by every manager into the hands of every Rotarian, in fact, into the hands of every worthwhile citizen of his community. The president of the MPTOA and a prominent Rotarian, said more than a mouthful.

Allow us to repeat some of his significant phrases:

"Our theatres are yours to command for anything that is for the common good whether it be a task of raising funds or carrying a message on our screen. . . . I appeal to you as a Rotarian to take a deeper interest in your theatre, to encourage the manager to run his theatre as you would have it run. . . . The motion picture is a great salesman—a visual salesman. It creates in the minds of the theatre patron the desire for better homes and better clothes, thereby creating trade relations and stimulating industry. . . . Take rather than send your children to the motion picture theatres. And in being selective-shopping, if you please, for their pictures you will find every theatre owner in America ready to help."

To the best of our knowledge, this is the first time that the importance of the motion picture theatre in community life has been so stressed at any such convention. Thousands of members from the 3600 Rotary clubs listened attentively to Kuykendall's sound selling talk.

It will be discussed at local Rotary meetings and every manager should grasp this further opportunity to build theatre prestige. It is a message to millions—a message that you should sell as you would your best box office attraction of the year.

OWNERS CLAIM REGAL IS "FINEST TALKIE HOUSE EAST OF SUEZ"

Globe Theatres, Ltd., operating under the direction of Kooka Sidwah & Co., Bombay, India, recently announced opening of the Regal Theatre, Bombay, a house said to be last word in modern theatre construction. The latest innovations in sound equipment, air-conditioning, etc., have been installed and it is the proprietor's boast that the house is the "finest talkie theatre east of Suez."

We wish the photo were clear enough to reproduce a view of the Capitol Theatre, leading talkie house in Bombay before the Regal succeeded to the honor. When this shot was taken the Capitol was celebrating the occasion of its Fifth Anniversary.

We are sure that other Club members overseas will be interested in what their fellow showmen in India are doing and this department will be glad to hear further from the men who shape the affairs of Globe Theatres.

HERMAN BAMBERGER PLANTS HOTEL DESK IN WANT AD TIEUP

Herman C. Bamberger, who skippers Taft's Paramount, Middletown, Ohio, with his local paper went into the hotel business on "International House," by installing a hotel desk in theatre lobby as illustrated above, made as realistic as possible without any expenditure other than that for beaverboard, a few feet of lumber, and artists' time. Details included cashier's cage, hotel register, mail boxes, keyboards, large clock, telegraph desk with sign and blacks, call bell, house and outside telephones (dummies with concealed buttons for ringing) and reservation signs giving names of cast of picture as having reservations in "International House" for our playdates.

A clerk, on duty all the time that the theatre was open to the public, took "registrations" at the hotel register, and frequently pressed a concealed button operating the ringing circuit on one of the dummy telephones, then answered the phone and carried on a fake conversation, answering inquiries as to reservations of prominent guests (cast of the picture), playdates, etc.

Each day twenty-five names were selected at random from the pages of the register and scattered among the classified ads. People who found their names were awarded guest tickets to see the picture. Paper kicked through with a front page box for two days, and eighty-six inches of free display space on the classified page. Space was used five days, four days in advance of opening, and ending on opening day of picture.

A specially printed "crying towel" because of its novelty was distributed door to door by ringing doorbells and handing them in. Copy was to the effect that the towel was for the downhearted, but that laughs were to be had at the picture.

The trailer run on the Magnascope screen, Peggy Hopkins window tieups, and banners on a fleet of busses, all helped to give Herman the kind of a gross his campaign deserved.

BROWN GOES GREAT IN OMAHA WITH ACE BOX OFFICE IDEAS

In only two weeks as manager of the Orpheum theatre, Omaha, Neb., Stanley Brown has embarked upon a campaign that is really selling tickets.

One of the most effective of his ideas is a tie-up with the Omaha baseball club and a popular eatery. Periodically, he authorizes issuance at the ball park of a "group fun-day ticket." The purchaser sees the ball game, has dinner at the cafe and is admitted to the theatre, all for one dollar.

On a new tooth paste plugged on the radio, Brown arranged that children would be admitted to the Orpheum upon presentation of one of the company's cartons, the theatre reimbursed by the tooth paste outfit. Not a bad gag, eh?

A chain restaurant is serving a 50-cent chicken dinner and giving each patron a ticket to the Orpheum. The house nets 25 cents on this deal. One night each week evening show-goers receive a ticket good for admission after the theatre at an outdoor dance spot at no increase over regular prices.

A facsimile of a telegraph message sent by Brown to Sylvia Sidney informing her that "Jennie Gerhardt" had been chosen to inaugurate the double feature policy at the house, was delivered by Postal Telegraph to each recipient of a telegraph message during the picture's run. The stunt cost the theatre nothing.

Another of Brown's business-getters lies in his appeal to bus-travelers. One thousand persons lay over in Omaha for a few hours each day between connections, and hotels even have an hourly room rate for such guests. In a tie-up with the bus companies, each passenger on arriving is handed a card giving directions to the Orpheum, the current program and a word about rest room facilities. On presentation at the box office with the price of admission, the cashier notifies the chief of service and the patron is directed to the rest rooms.

Brown, a former district manager under the Paramount-Publix regime, is one of the most progressive Omaha showmen.

JOHN CLEMMER PUTS OVER ACE CAMPAIGN ON "BED TIME STORY"

That enterprising showman, John Clemmer of the Fifth Avenue Theatre, Seattle, Wash., put over a good one when he opened his campaign with a classified ad for a real live baby to represent Baby LeRoy in "Bedtime Story," and selected the cutest baby.

He then tied up with a local furniture dealer, promoted an oversized bed, set it up in the mezzanine using the Mother as the uniformed nurse and the babe in the center of the huge bed. Jim tells us within twenty-four hours the gag had spread over town and he packed 'em in as a result.

The photo above shows Jim with the baby he picked and he sure can pick 'em.

Ace Campaigns From World's Fair Prize Seekers Lick July Business Blues; Contest Ends in Ten Days

By A-MIKE VOGEL

Hurry, hurry, boys and girls. Get aboard that Exploitation Special. Train can't wait. No sir, no ma'am, jest can't wait. Gettin' up steam right now, ready to choo-choo to Chi—to that big, yes we said big, World's Fair.

Ten days left! Two hundred forty hours to get in line and shoot along those campaigns that will win the seven day all-expense trips to Chicago and that "collosseal" Century of Progress Exposition. And big league baseball games, golf on sporty courses, swimming in Lake Michigan, night clubs, theatres, sightseeing—ain't it gorjus, folks, and all free to the winners.

Something worth while fighting for, isn't it? You bet, and that's the way managers in every part of the United States and Canada feel about it from the way the campaigns are coming along. And what campaigns! Never expected to get at one time so many sock ideas. Street stunts, newspaper contests, merchant tieups, lobby displays, unusual fronts and a thousand other ideas that are being used to break the stobborn back of the "once-upon-a-time" summer depression.

It sure is pleasing to read how many costless and inexpensive promotions are being put over, especially from the smaller towns. Of course, the big boys are doing their stuff, and it's mighty swell doin's.

But the lesser spots are sending in campaigns that stand up just as strongly; ideas that have definitely clicked in helping to roll up those old time grosses. Ideas that are not necessarily new or original, but that are practical and sensible—novel and interesting box office builders.

The subsequent run managers are not being counted out by any means. In fact, they are sending in stunts and gags that prove the possibilities have not been milked dry by the first runs. So take heart, you second runners, and send in your stuff. It's just as welcome, and will be given the same consideration.

And now, let's take a look at some of the prize campaigns, and see what managers are doing for that Chicago pleasure week. Folks, meet up with Kenneth Taylor, skipper of the Strand-Ritz Theatres, and guiding star of the Strand Confectionery, Uvalde, Texas, which Ken runs too.

Most of you folks are acquainted with Ken's activities through the Club columns. He's a red hot hustler and, incidentally, just 21, two and a half years in show business and likes it fine. Taylor's first prize offering kicked the daylights out of Paramount's "Song of the Eagle."

Note the bar-room front on the next page. Ken says the bar and kegs are the real stuff, obtained from a brewing company in San Antonio. The swinging doors and the shelves were made locally. The mugs and bottles were borrowed, all the painting and carpentry on a pass basis. The "bartender" is a local radio star who doubled in brass by also working on a street bally—a truck that Ken rigged up to look like an old time saloon, with piano, bar, singers, and so forth.

Ken sends along a raft of other stuff just as effective, all of which will receive the fullest consideration of the judges.

Wally Caldwell shoots along an ace campaign on MGM's "Hold Your Man," at Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, that started off with a 36-foot double faced street banner across the main street in the heart of the town, hung for the entire week. Five hundred streamers on a Harlow soap tieup were placed on grocery and drug store windows, and Harlow complexion cards were planted in beauty shop and cosmetic windows, with "Hold Your Man" sundae streamers landed wherever soda was dispensed.

Ushers distributed on busy street corners, tabloids and post card size teaser cards, and these were also given out house to house. A radio dramatization of the picture; "A" boards at all filling stations, a flood of free newspaper and readers were some of Wally's high spots on this campaign, and we're expecting the others right soon. (What say you, Wally?)

Now let's jump over to Moberly, Missouri, and look at Ted Davis' cam-

"A five-day trip to the World's Fair sounds most inviting, but apart from this we think the whole idea of the Contest a splendid one, and we assure you, despite the fact that we're away up here in "parts unknown," you have our full cooperation."

Tommy Kane

"We join the other California managers in wishing your Contest the very best. All of us here are putting in some good licks and are sending in what we hope will be given serious consideration in the judging. Heartiest good wishes to all contestants."

paign on Radio's "Diplomaniacs" at the Grand Theatre. The picture opened "Rhoden Week," put on by the division in honor of "E. C.," and Ted, aided by his assistant, Virgil Hewitt, and secretary, Hazel Wright, put over a honey as his first campaign offering.. Get a load of this one. It's sure a great gag. Ted announced from the stage that five dollars was to be given away for the following: Patrons were asked to go from house to house announcing the picture, theatre and date in thirteen words, and sooner or later, some one who answered the doorbell would say, "Yes, we have the five dollars for you"—and hand it over.

Every kid in town canvassed most every house, and as the folks took it all in fun, no harm was done, and the plug was tremendous. An attractive street stunt was flittering an umbrella and old hat with glass tinsel, and sending out a Woolsey double with the outfit. The tinsel naturally blinded onlookers and attracted loads of attention.

This gag was also used in a boys' band "Nut Parade" contest wherein all the kinds in town paraded, made up to look nutty. The event was put on twice in the business section before the opening, and Chamber of Commerce officials acted as judges. In addition, the Boy Scouts also joined in the gathering and all carried theatre signs.

A colored home talent stage show was another feature, and Ted writes that the cost of the entire prize campaign was only $18.65 above his average expenditure. Which should carry weight in the final awards.

Joe Crivello got himself a real outdoor break on "College Humor," at the Capitol Theatre, Litchfield (Ill.). It is seldom you see a 72 sheet board any place, but he planted it, as you can see it below, as well as a 48, by using his noodle in this way. Joe says that a number of billings run out toward the last of the month, and he grabs off some swell locations for a week's posting. That's how he landed the mammoth boards which had the entire county talking. A good tip for brother managers.

Crivello's 72 Board

For the Trip You Will Never Regret

The intentional misspelling of the title on the 48 sheet was a cute idea that brought phone calls from all over the neighboring territory, but incidentally sold the picture that much stronger.

A "two-way" Ford proved an ace street stunt and went over so well that other managers around have arranged to use it. Edgar Pollard and Bobby Woods, Joe's "henchmen," are the navigators of the back and forward craft. Crivello states that this campaign cost a few bucks but as it broke some house records he is well pleased. And so are we, Joe. Now send us another one.

We now hear from ever steppin' Joe Feldman, Warner exploiteer in the Pittsburgh territory, who shook the town loose with his panic campaign on "Gold Diggers" at the Stanley Theatre. You can depend on Joe to dig up something harder to put over on each of his publicity barrages, and on this picture he "anted" the pot to the limit by having none other than Mayor Herron participate in the campaign.

Feldman put the living billboard stunt on the Stanley maquee in which girls posed against giant cutout title letters (bottom of page 78). The display was widely advertised to be unveiled at a certain time, and Hizzoner cut the ribbon that revealed the flash. The papers went for it, and the event was broadcast.

Joe also had a nifty float in a big street parade in honor of Honus Wagner, the old time ball star. The newsreels covered this, and the shot was placed in the regular newsreel that went all over the state. Joe put plenty over with his outdoor billing and newspaper stuff and it had plenty to do with the grosses that this feature piled up. Thanks, Joe, and like Oliver Twist, we say, "We want some more."

Charley Bassin, the Mattapan (Mass.) Mogul picked himself a beaut to start his parade of prize campaigns. In conjunction with Fox's "Adorable," at the Oriental Theatre, Charley inaugurated a Promenade Garden where cigarettes and soft drinks were served free of charge during intermissions and between shows.

Bassin's Promenade

A regular interval is set aside, just before which a trailer is run that drinks and smokes are waiting in the garden. As the folks pass out ushers are waiting with smokes and matches, comfortable chairs are provided and at the end of ten minutes a Chinese gong is sounded as a signal that the show is about to continue. The newsreel is run first, then another trailer with merchants' credits. That, plus about $80, is all the gag cost the theatre in return for nearly $3,000 in material and labor, so Charley declares.

The garden is on theatre property, and was unused until Bassin doped out this swell idea. It looks very "acey," as you can see from the shot below, and no doubt is paying for itself for the theatre and the participating merchants.

Now, Charley, don't rest on your laurels and make sure that you send in at least two more thunderbolt campaigns before the end of the contest. We know you always did like Chicago.

We feel that these campaigns are a very good cross section of what we are receiving, and will continue to receive on this Round Table Club-Producers' contest. They not only are interesting, but practical, novel and in some instances spectacular.

However, look forward to a raft of socko stuff in the last days of the month that will be as good if not better. Remember that everyone has an equal chance for those swell prizes, first run or subsequent, small town or big city, neighborhood house or de luxer.

Send in your campaigns now! We repeat—send in those campaigns right now. Take your pick of any picture you play—the more the merrier, and we'll see you in Chicago.

IN A NUTSHELL

If by any chance you have missed the early issues with the rules of the Contest, read this carefully. The Managers' Round Table Club is sponsoring a July Exploitation Contest for seven one-week all-expense trips to the World's Fair. . . . You may send in more than one campaign. . . . Contest closes midnight, July 31. . . . SHOWMEN FIND PAY DIRT IN "DIGGERS" ACE EXPLOITATION

MORT BLUMENSTOCK, Warner Theatres Ad Chief
HERB COPELAN, Publicity
Stanley Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J.

C. for one year; Mayor and other celebs. attended opening; 80 foot banner facing boardwalk, first time ever allowed in Atlantic City.

BEN KATZ, Publicity
HERB COPELAN, Publicity
Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

Constructed special box office for advance sale of premier tickets put over as a Hollywood opening with all the trimmings, such as lobby broadcasts, special lighting, music and the attendance of many Milwaukee celebrities. Premier invitations to civic leaders printed in blue on gold. Window displays in 50 downtown drug stores. Throwaways of made over front page of paper containing "Diggers" stories and pictures.

Cards on 200 newsstands tying up with fan magazine story and postal telegraph put out 12,000 pamphlets plugging picture. Special lobby display ran three weeks in advance, and current front went heavy for girl cutouts.

LEO ROSEN, Mgr.
CHARLIE SMAKWITZ, Publicity
Troy Theatre, Troy, N. Y.

Special float bordered with bags of gold carried eight girls dressed as pirates. P. A. systems and microphone attached for announcements and records of songs. Girls sang hit numbers. Ushers in three theatres wore circular announcement badges in advance, song hits played with trailers, and phonograph in lobby played hit records.

Gold plaques in cigar stores as counter servers. Stickers on car windows, and gold coins put in packages at dept. store special sale. One hundred and fifty newsstands carried signs, and stuffed magazines with heralds; cards were placed in every Troy hotel room.

Sport goods store furnished bicycles for street bally; souvenir postcards mailed to all nearby towns, and surrounding territory heavily papered. Massive lobby display and 24 sheet cutout with peepholes showing girls. Telegraph tieup plugged picture and midnight opening.

JAMES M. TOTMAN, Mgr.
Warner, Erie, Pa.

Electric title banner across front of 42-inch mounted letters, animated by flashers and blinker lights on banner and tinted background of stills and cutouts. P. A. system on marquee with mike in lobby carried announcements six blocks away. Inside lobby display size 30 ft. wide by 15 deep, had background of gold color crepe paper in sunburst effect with cutout figures of girl set off with baby colored spots.

Title in letters, six feet high and three wide, on low main street building with theatre banner underneath ten days in advance; classified tieup three weeks in advance gave pass to everyone taking three time want ad. Paper ran daily plug ads in exchange.

Constructed float for Erie Day parade, in which thousands marched and drew spectators from surrounding territory. Girls on float wore original gowns from picture. Flash also sent to every community in county providing a real attention stopper.

Silhouette newspaper contest in one sheet, and serial ran 12 days in advance in another paper; foreign language papers ran stories and pictures; radio announcements and song plugs, window displays, and numerous other gags were used to round out smash campaign.

Few, if any, money angles have been neglected in the above spectacular and well rounded series of "Gold Diggers" campaigns in various parts of the country. Led by none other than that grand guy, Mort Blumenstock, Warner Theatres ad chief, Warnerites Ben Katz, Herb Copelan and Charlie Smakwitz have been helping live-wire managers kick grosses dizzy. Leo Rosen, in Troy, and Jimmy Totman, Erie, did a sweet job on their engagements, proving that a real picture plus a fast moving showman spell do-ray-mi.

SCHOOL TIEUP ALSO GOOD WITH LODGES AND OTHER LOCALS

EDDIE YARBROUGH, Mgr.
RKO Colonial, Dayton, Ohio

Tied up with leading Dayton paper to run stories and pictures of high school graduates, of which motion pictures also were made and shown at the theatre with the sponsorship of the School Board, Yarbrough obtained following newspaper breaks, including others that ran for a period of fourteen days: two front page stories, a four-column cut and two-column story with head, and two eight-column cuts eight inches deep, showing graduates, all publicity mentioning that pictures would be shown at theatre. Also 50-inch free tie-up ad with shoe store that plugged the pictures and theatre.

Newspaper handled everything, stressing stunt as exclusive promotion. School board okayed idea as good publicity to get school funds appropriation. Schools announced playdates in classes and on bulletin boards. Pictures were silents, paid for by theatres.

Eddie's gag is a natural for graduation classes and can be sold to most any daily editor hot for pictures of locals. Can also be put on any time with any large local group, such as lodges, clubs and national organizations. Although theatre paid for reel, cost was comparatively small in exchange for word of mouth and newspaper publicity. Very good, Eddie!

BURNETT OBTAINED GOOD RESULTS FOR "WATERFRONT" PIX

Martin C. Burnett, manager of Loew's Theatre in Dayton, Ohio, went the limit to publicizing "I Cover the Waterfront." An amateur reporter contest with one of the Dayton dailies rated the house a two-column cut and a story each day for one week previous to the opening of the picture, and the Lux tie-ups, carrying the Claudette Colbert indorsement, was used with twenty A & P stores.

Copies of the original novel by Max Miller went on display in three big Dayton book stores, while drug stores used the Phillips dental magnesia tie-up and a department store featured special waterfront window display.

The New York idea was used by Mr. Burnett on the theatre front, with blown-up stills and lines under each enlargement attracting much attention. The theme song, "I Cover the Waterfront," was featured by the local dance orchestras, and the radio station also plugged the melody.

FOREIGN EXPLOITATION

The above photo shows how they turn out window displays in far-off Calcutta, India. The activities of our friends in foreign fields are always of tremendous interest to our members and readers and so we take advantage of every opportunity to show you what they are doing to put things over out there.

TIE-UP RESULTS IN ALL-EXPENSE TRIPS TO FLA. AND CHI.

Anna Bell Ward is making it possible for a number of fortunate Kentuckians to spend costless vacations in Florida or the World's Fair. This dynamic director of the Strand and Ben Ali, Lexington, Ky., tied in with a bus line and a local paper and the result was a quickening of the box office pulse through full page free newspaper spreads.

Rules directed that patrons of both theatres save their admission stubs and when ten were obtained to enclose them with a letter to the bus line giving reasons why a Florida trip was desired. Ten seven-day all-expense awards were given.

For the World's Fair prizes, auction money is being used, given by merchants with every purchase. These "lucky bucks" are brought to the Strand on Thursday nights, when two round trip Fair prizes are auctioned weekly.

Warner Hospitality!

Ed Selzer and Mort Blumenstock played host to us when we visited the H.O. this week. Luncheon was served in the restaurant de luxe and how Mort can tear a herring is nobody's business. A tour of the Club rooms was a revelation—ping pong and billiard tables, card room, library, golf practice, etc., etc., are all available to the employees—and do they take advantage of it. No wonder Warner's come thru. Thanks for the treat, boys.

(Advt.....Ed paid the check.)

AIR STAGE WEDDING IS WOOTEN'S ANGLE ON THEATRE "SPLICE"

Looks like Bunny Bryan, the triple stage wedding king, will have to find another variation of the platform matrimonial clinch to top that of Jay Wooten, manager Fox Dodge Theatre, Dodge City, Kansas, who sent in a report on what he believes to be the first radio stage wedding.

Jay, appropriately enough, was playing "When Strangers Marry" and arranged with his local station to broadcast the wedding service by remote control after a special midnight showing of the feature. DX listeners from every state evidently enjoyed the service as many letters were received to that effect from different parts of the country.

Wooten received real cooperation on this stunt from H. E. McKinney, advertising chief of Station KGNO, from which the service was broadcast.

Baker Broke Record

Attendance records at the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, were broken as a result of the complete exploitation campaign put on by George S. Baker, manager, when he played a musical comedy film recently, and tied up the Western Union; a nationally known electric refrigerator company; local newspapers; drug stores and cosmetic shops; florists and music stores. Reams of publicity were secured in the local papers.

SPANISH SERENADE

The trailer and sound truck shown above proved an effective sales medium for J. C. Waldington of the Alabama Theatre, Dotham, Ala., on his campaign for "Kid from Spain." Cantor's latest record was run off on the sound truck. The gag created considerable comment.

Attention, Managers!

In next week's issue of BETTER THEATRES there will start a series of Advertising Typography written and illustrated for the express guidance of managers and all who prepare theatre advertising for newspapers . . . forming a theatre manual on type styles, printing mechanics, engraving, making of layouts, typographical harmonies, and all associated subjects concerning the physical structure of screen theatre advertisements.

"COVER" CAMPAIGN OPENED AT RIVOLI TO SMASH RETURNS

The importance of a good tieup title in promoting outside advertising is more than emphasized in the timeliness of the N. Y.

Sports Window

campaign at the Rivoli on United Artist's "I Cover the Waterfront," engineered by Hal Horne and Monroe Greenthal.

With the outdoor bathing season on hand, these high scoring showmen not only landed displays in four big department stores, but clicked off a record of some kind by planting four windows in Gimbel's.

Macy used a fashion window with Claudette Colbert's studio chair in the foreground, McCreery featured the title in a white goods display and also in newspaper ads, Lord and Taylor went hard for the window idea plus a big newspaper ad.

QUICK SERVICE IDEAS THAT WORKED

HARRY KNOBLAUCH, manager, Nixon Theatre, Philadelphia, recently put on a special day for boys during which Boy Scouts took over the operation of the theatre taking the places of the manager and the rest of the house staff. Patrons entered into the spirit of the event and Harry was the recipient of warm endorsements from civic leaders for his good work. . . .

C. R. STOFLET, manger, Consolidated Theatres, Harlan, Ky., landed a page of coop ads on "Big Drive" by tieing in with the candidates for a local election. Fifteen office seekers paid for space to advertise the picture, and C. R. says it sure helped. Certainly good enough, too, C. R. . . .

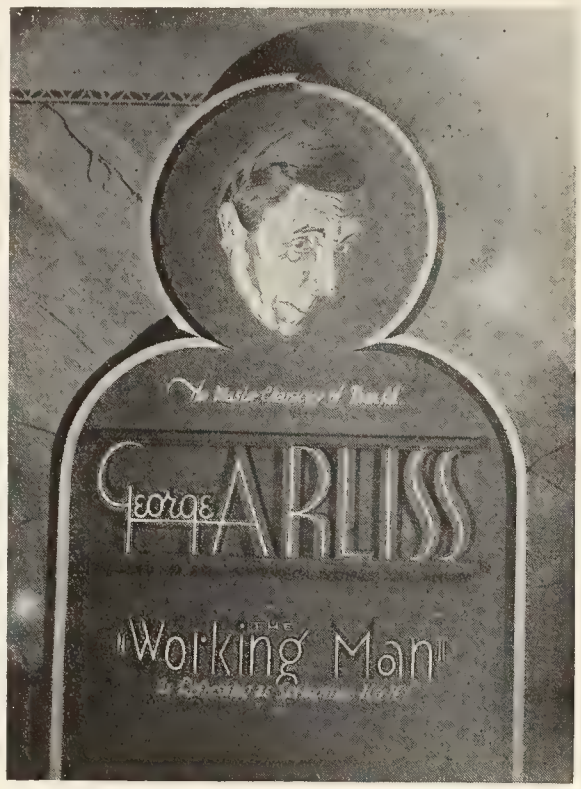
CHARLIE (Lothario) BASSIN, of the Oriental, Mattapan, Mass., startled the drys of his town by giving away thousands of beverage charts containing recipes for the mixing of every kind of a thirst killer. Charlie says they went as fast as a barrel of suds at a political picnic, and we wouldn't wonder. Now, how about a case of something to go with the recipes, you old real estater, you! . . .

RICHARD M. THOMASON, manager, Crystal Theatre, Ellis, Kan., uses a special banner arrangement on his car to advertise the big pictures. Three sheets, and 3 x 10 signs cover the entire car, and are changed to plug the theatre or individual features. On "State Fair" Dick used a trailer, the panels of which are white enamel and lettered in water color, easy to wash off. A smart idea, Dick, and recommended to other managers getting by on small budgets. . . .

A. M. MILLER, manager Fox Oakland, Oakland, Cal., had a production setting to introduce the trailer on "Today We Live." Title was projected on a scrim, behind which a girl under a red spot was posed in the same pose of Crawford taken from press book ad. Spot was killed when trailer scenes were shown. The "Crawford" leg contest was put on by the leading daily; another went for a classified co-op, and a radio station put on a contest for the most words from the name "Crawford." Other good angles show that Brother Miller is shooting from both hips. . . .

FRANK MONEYHUN and ARTHUR CATLIN, managers, Loew's State, Cleveland, put on a bang-bang campaign on "Hell Below" that included a midnight premiere, band concert by 100 pieces in the lobby, and fireworks. The highlight was the "attack" on the theatre by three army planes and the "defense" by a platoon of soldiers from the marquee. The entire event was broadcast from the sidewalk in front of the theatre. . . .

ECONOMICAL!



The above photo shows you what Charles E. Kayor of the Manos Theatre, Greensburg, Pa., does with his half sheets of beaver board. Used in a medium sized lobby he finds this type of set piece serves his purpose very well, especially since the house has several changes each week.

ED HART, the Plainfield (N. J.) Tornado is still rooking the local papers out of front page boxes to advertise his shows. Ed's latest is a classified hookup on "International House," and "Warrior's Husband" wherein readers who find their names on the want ad page receive free passes. Paper runs pictures, theatres and casts in box. . . .

J. J. ROSENFELD, Paramount, Omaha (Neb.) put on a preview for "Reunion in Vienna" and invited the press, radio staffs and local celebrities. After the showing, guests were taken to hotel ballroom and served a buffet supper. At the press tables sets of stills were placed for the picture eds. to select their art. 3500 letters to Little Theatre subscribers also sent out in advance. That supper-still gag is a new one, "J. J.," and a swell way to sell art.

A. H. POOS, north side district manager for St. Louis (Mo.) Amusement Company put out a special bally on "King Kong" that was mounted on their regular warehouse truck to which was attached a public loud speaker with trumpet horns and turn table pick up with microphone. Auto spotlights with 32-candlepower bulbs lit up the cut-out letters and flitter, the whole made up of Upson board. Art work and layout were handled by Artist L. Brown, and the bally plugged the day and date showing at four theatres. . . .

CECIL W. CURTISS, manager Liberty Theatre, Bedford, Va., sends along some shots of his front on "State Fair," "Kid from Spain" and "42nd Street." Cecil says that these displays sure helped business, and we agree that they carry a heavy wallop. Sorry we can't show them to you, but there is a little too much haze for good reproduction. Thanks anyhow, Cecil, and shoot us some more. . . .

E. J. SULLIVAN, skipper of the Fox California, San Jose, built his "Rasputin" campaign around a smart Mother's Day telegraph tieup, free flower distribution at theatre, stage fashion show, and a mechanical lobby display of large figures of the mad monk hypnotizing the girl, this being shown by light beams coming from his fingers. Good stuff all around, Sully, and keep on sending in the box office angles. . . .

C. A. TOMPKINS, manager, Majestic, Reno, Nev., personally plugged "Hell Below" over house p.a. system instead of trailer, and put on a preview followed up with ads containing names of guests, copy requesting readers who wanted to know about the picture to ask those whose names were listed. Front page made up to plug picture, 4000 distributed house to house, with merchant copy on reverse that paid for printing. Special radio announcements and plugs at fight stadium were also included. . . .

ROLLIN STONEBROOK, manager of the Alabama Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., tied up with a number of eating places in town by supplying restaurant checks for them with an advertisement of the picture, "Hell Below." This is in keeping with the policy of the Alabama to use every opportunity possible to boost their showings. . . .

FRED S. MEYER pulls a smart bit of showmanship with a big display ad announcing the adoption of a permanent theatre trade-mark at his State, Rhinelander, Wisconsin. Under the masthead is a heading reading "Facts Only—Truth Always" and copy introducing the State trade-mark to the newspaper readers. The entire ad is sound institutional copy, selling the theatre in a forceful, dignified manner. . . .

WILL MAC NAUGHTON, Hempstead New York Theatre slicker, sure hands us a laugh with a one sheet birthday announcement containing an illustrated story of his life. Although we can't reproduce it (because of lack of space and not what you think), the gag is being framed for the walls of the sanctum, so the next time you're around drop in and give yourself a load of giggles. Regards to Preston, Mac, and come see us. . . .

LUDY BOSTON

is in charge of the Uptown Theatre in Muscatine, Ia., and we're wondering if he's from that famous family of Boston Brothers Showmen, Inc.? A little light on the subject would be appreciated. We've got some good friends in Muscatine, as doubtless you know, Ludy, so when you see them say hello for us.

comes to us well recommended by the manager of his house who says Merle is a hard worker and a good showman. He assists William A. Guinan at the Fox Lyric Theatre out in Salem, Ill., and unless we miss our guess, it won't be long before we shall be sending him a certificate of membership and he'll be a full-fledged manager. Don't disappoint us, Merle.

is the assistant manager at the Cedar Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa. He is twenty years old, starts in his membership by sending for his Club pin and if determination to arrive somewhere will make him a manager, Walter is going to win out. Well, we're rooting for you, anyway; so keep up the good work and let's know what's going on out at your house.

is proposed for membership by his manager, H. W. Pettingill of the Warner Theatre in Worcester, Mass. Russ, too, joins by sending for his Club emblem pin which is always a good sign of showmanship. From what we know of your boss, Russ, you couldn't learn the business under a much better one; so you ought to go far with him as a teacher. We haven't heard from your house in a while, so if Pettingill is too busy, you get a hold of some of your campaigns and send them in to us.

MORGAN AMES

manages the Iowa Theatre in Cedar Rapids, Ia., and we've got this town tied up pretty much 100 per cent Round Table, so you'd better get aboard the bandwagon, Ames, and let's see the stuff you're made of. You were proposed by Lester Martin, and that something to live up to.

at the Egyptian Theatre in Scottsbluff, Neb., is also recommended by Lester Martin. Well, now that you're one of the gang, you're going to have to do something about it. Tell the rest of our Scottsbluff friends it's about time we heard from them, too.

manages the Princess Theatre in Eagle Grove, Iowa, and apparently Les Martin knows a million of 'em, cause he brought this showman into the Club, too. We'll be putting him on our payroll soon. Hope all these lads you propose will keep the mails humming with their doings out yonder.

is at the Grand Theatre in Eldora, Ia., and is proposed by none other than Lester Martin, of Martin, Martin and Martin. He assures us that these new members are all up and coming, so we'll sit back and wait for them to prove it. How about you, Leo?

keeps the Grand Theatre in Dubuque, Iowa, from going into the red, and we wish he'd write and tell us how he does it. In case you don't know it, John was proposed for membership in the Club by a gentleman by the name of Lester Martin.

is another new live-wire to join us and he does his stuff at the Majestic Theatre in Oakland, Neb., not Cal. "H. A." has been recommended for membership by Les Martin and that's the last time we'll tell you about any of Les's friends in this issue.

STANLEY GROSS

out at the Rio Theatre in Appleton, Wis., tells us that he has managed houses in Wisconsin for the past twelve years. He says he realizes he's a little late in joining the Club, but as long as he admits it and promises to keep sending in his stuff, we'll manage to forgive the discrepancy.

FRANK J. ORLANDO

does the advertising for the Fox Criterion Theatre in Santa Monica, Cal., and he's only twenty-one. You've undertaken a man's size job, Frank, and we'd be interested in hearing how you turn your stuff out. Any time you're ready to tell us, we're ready to print it—so go to it.

holds down the managerial chair at the Rialto in Westfield, N. J., and since some of our most active members come from New Jersey we're sure we'll have another to add to this fast-growing list when Frank starts the Westfield ball a'rolling.

J. C. STROCK

don't know why this alert and dandy showman wasn't introduced via these pages before to our members and readers, but he's the manager of the Granada Theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., which is part of the Paramount Northwest Division. "J. C." house has three changes a week and that ought to keep any man busy, but not too busy to tell us about it. Right?

comes to us from Warners Lyric Theatre in Camden, N. J., and since Camden is just a stone's throw from this office, if you can throw far enough, we're hoping that "E. M." will not only contribute to these pages, but bring his contributions in personally, so that we can say hello. How about it, Heller?

is the youngster manager of the Roosevelt Theatre in Woodhaven, N. Y., and since we are always interested in the activities of our younger members, we're hoping he'll keep us posted so that we may report his doings on our pages. Woodhaven's not so far away either, Ted; how about running in some day?

is the assistant manager at the Granada Theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., and George is only twenty-one. However, he sure shows rare good judgment and intelligence in sending in his application. You're bound to succeed in this business, George, when you get off on the right foot by joining the CLUB.

is the assistant to Harvey Fleishman, manager of the Lefferts Theatre in Richmond Hill, N. Y., and since Harvey proposes Sid for membership, he must think well of him. With the boss you have, Sid, you'll learn the business right, so we're expecting big things from you. Don't disappoint us.

PHIL AND J. F. MARCH

join the club from Crystal Theatre in Wayne, Nebraska, and we'd be interested in knowing whether they are brothers or father and son. However, no matter what they are, we'd be more than glad to pass on any of their campaigns that they might send in. We bid you welcome, gentlemen, take your seats at the Table.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 182.—(A) Is it advisable to try to refill old fuses? (B) What should be done with old fuses and why? (C) Why is it advisable to fuse projection circuits considerably above the normal current used? What should be the limit. (Note: Disregard Bluebook table in this last. It was compiled for hand-fed arcs, of which few now exist.) (D) Give us your idea of fusing where fuses are used on both primary and secondary sides of motor-generator serving projection circuits. (E) Should fuses be used on both primary and secondary side of motor-generator or transformer? Give reasons for your answer.

Answer to Question No. 175

Bluebook School Question No. 175 was: (A) Why should port fire shutters be padded at the bottom? (B) How many poles may a generator (dynamo) have? (C) What would be the difference between connecting a lamp directly across the poles of a generator and across one of your theatre circuits? (D) Why is it essential that the projectionist have a good working knowledge of generators? (E) Describe a simple wet battery cell.

The following answered acceptably: S. Evans and C. Rau; K. Dowling; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; J. Wentworth; L. Van Buskirk; W. Ostrum; B. Doe; T. Van Vaulkenburg; H. Edwards; D. R. Peters; O. L. and J. F Evans; W. and S. D Love; G. Tinlin; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; E. Harlor and H. Harrison; B. Diglah and P. Jackson; P. T. Zann and L. Grant; D. Emmerson; D. L. Sinklow; T. Lambert and T. Davis; D. T. Arlen and M. Spencer; H. True; R. D. Oberleigh; H. Rogers; D. L. Howard; B. L. Blinkendorfer; M. Spencer; D. T. Arlen and L. G. Howe; T. R. Bancroft; H. B. and D. C. Coates; D. Anderson; L. M. Croft, N. Truman, L. Summers and D. M. Banks; M. D. Oleson and J. B. Malley; B. Sappert; W. D. Brown; D. Michelson; P. L. Jensen and A. Ilks; L. H. Simmons; P. L. Day and P. L. Daniels; R. Suler and R. Wheeler; J. Williams; B. M. Cummings. J. Brewer and C. Domenico; H. R. Baldwin and G. K. Berger; B. I. Fanchann; C. Cummings and T. Kelley; M. L. George and R. Singleton; E. Conlon; O. L. Daris and M. Simms; L. Lorient and E. L. Gibbs; J. C. Peters; L. S. Zaren; B. T. Miller; T. L. Raymond and D. Neills; F. Farmann; H. Pilson and D. L. Daniels; F. and J. L. Hanson; L. Thomas and D. D. Davis; L. Hendershot; D. E. Pratt and F. H. Banning; S. Maybe and R. D. Konley; P. L. Danby; R. Geddings; D. L. Tapley; E. Rymer and B. L. Tanner; M. H. Lonberger; M. Michelesko; T. M. Vinson and D. K. Ormie; R. S. Allen and T. N. Williams; B. L. Banning; D. L. Mason; A. Breston and D. Haber; M. Dickson; D. V. Peterson; A Bailey; T. Lambert and T. Davis; R. M. Bowman; D. L. Baker and J. E. Dalman.

(A) W. Ostrum answers this briefly and as well as it could be answered, as follows:

"Port fire shutters should be well padded at the bottom so that when they are released they will drop quietly instead of with a bang. The effect of the latter would be to draw the audience's attention to the projection room, and in so doing possibly inform them of a fire therein, the prevention of this very thing being the chief purpose of the shutters."

(B) S. Evans and C. Rau say: "As regards polarity, each generator has two poles; namely, a positive pole and a negative pole. In the case of the three-wire double dynamo system, in which a double dynamo having two armature windings upon the same core and connected to two separate commutators, is used in the same manner as two separate dynamos connected in series, with the system unbalanced, this double dynamo may be said to have four poles, but if the system is perfectly balanced it may be said to have two poles only, though the other two poles are there ready for use if necessary."

K. Dowling answers Section B by saying: "A generator may have two, four, or any even number of poles, arranged alternately—positive and negative around the commutator, but there will be only two polarities—positive and negative."

(C) G. E. Doe answers thus: "First, the lamp burning across the generator poles would, theoretically and in fact, burn brighter, assuming the connections in each case to be electrically perfect, because there would be no line resistance to overcome. Second, as the question reads, the lamps connected across the generator poles would have no protection from fuses, whereas the circuit lamp would. Third, 'connected across one of your theatre circuits,' might mean a very great difference in voltage. Probably not, but possibly—if the theatre takes current through a transformer. Fourth, while it would not be permissible to connect a lamp directly across the terminals of a generator unless fused, or, I believe, even if fused, the circuit lamp complies, presumably, with all requirements."

Henry Edwards answers Section D thus: "In a very large majority of modern theatres the projectionist is in direct charge of, and must handle and care for, electrical generators. Our editor has many times told us no man can handle anything he does not thoroughly understand efficiently, which surely must be recognized as cold fact by even the biggest dumbbell among us. That is answer enough, is it not? But to go further, motor-generators cost a lost of money. The rate of deterioration and the upkeep charge will largely depend upon how intelligently they are handled—how well the projectionist understands them and how well be applies his knowledge. True, what? Then, too, ignorance—or shall I soft-pedal and say lack of knowledge?—in such matters may cause show stops, and show stops are something the manager, for some mysterious reason, objects to, except at appointed places."

(E) I think Evans and Rau have you all skinned on this one. They say: "A simple wet battery cell consists of a vessel containing a liquid in which two dissimilar metal plates are immersed. Zinc and copper are the metals most used for the plates, while the electrolyte may consists of caustic potash, or dilute sulphuric acid, or sal-ammoniac solution. The fundamental fact on which the electro-chemical generation of current depends is, that if a plate of metal be placed in a liquid there is a difference of electrical condition produced between them of such sort that the metal either takes a lower or higher electrical pressure than the liquid, according to the nature of the metal and the liquid. If two different metals be placed in one electrolytic liquid, then there is a difference of state produced between them, so that if joined by wire outside the liquid, a current of electricity will traverse the wire. This current proceeds in the liquid from the metal which is most acted upon chemically, to that which is least acted upon."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

Two Signs ...drawing 'em without blare

By Don Carle Gillette

STOPPING for a night in a down-east village while vacation touring, we noted two movie houses almost next door to each other advertising their current attractions. One displayed a conservative printed sign with only the words "Jean Harlow and Clark Gable in 'Hold Your Man'," and it was packing them in. The other had "most daring drama," "thrills," "shocking" and other sex-implying superlatives emblazoned all over its front, and the cashier was reading "True Stories."

AT LEAST a couple of good pointers can be taken from this incident. One is that when you have something which the public wants, you don't need to bombard them with adjectives in order to get their patronage.

WARNER BROS.' ANNOUNCEMENT FOR 1933-1934 WILL KNOCK YOU OVER.

Vitagraph, Inc., Distributors

with its honesty, sincerity, plainness and absence of time worn "ballyhoo". We've taken our time. We've talked to exhibitors. We've got the right thing to say about plans so big they don't need bunk. You'll get a straight-from-the-shoulder presentation from Warner Bros. in this paper next week.

MR. KENT'S MILESTONE

WHEN Sidney R. Kent went to work for the Fox Film Corporation, now something more than a year ago, it was because he saw there the most opportunity—and the most work. And this was at a time when jobs among depression-bedevilled corporations were seeking Mr. Kent.

Now with the official action of the stockholders of Friday last in approval of the Fox reorganization plan, calling for reduction of the common stock to one-sixth of the outstanding issue and a reduction of the working capital to a trifle over two millions, Mr. Kent has passed a difficult and important milestone at the top of his biggest hill. Expressed in other terms, this is something like a forty-million-dollar write-off, and therefore in dollars a very important vote of confidence in Sidney R. Kent.

In doing a job for the Fox concern and its stockholders Mr. Kent has done a job for the whole of the industry. The magnitude and the limelight position of the corporation make its well-being important to all values in the amusement industry.

PICCOLO PETE ET AL

"BLOODY MURDER!" is now the cry of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, giving voice by tract, with assorted graphs and curves and pictures, to their long continued plaint against the talking picture and the radio.

We continue to be told that "the lovely art of music and its creators are being starved to death." And we are told in red ink. Elsewhere in these pages will be found an article dealing with the very interesting statistical aspects of the musicians' story.

It is unfortunate for the musicians in picture theatre orchestras that sixteen of the nineteen thousand of them lost their jobs between 1925 and 1932 because of the sound mechanism. In the period between 1905 and today a considerably larger number of hostlers and hay balers also lost their jobs because of the intrusion of another sort of machine. Since 1912 and the rise of the feature picture a lot of stock actors and road-show people have had to find something else to do. The coming of the halftone and the news camera put a considerable army of newspaper artists out of work. Oil burners are keeping a lot of coal miners idle. The Morkrum telegraph printer has taken the place of thousands of key operators. The machine switching system has displaced thousands of telephone girls. Electric refrigerators are trimming the ice man's route.

Nothing much will be done about all this.

The consuming public has indicated that it would rather see a reasonably good motion picture than a roadshow of ham actors; that it would rather hear a good record than an indifferent orchestra, and that, broadly speaking, a first-class can opener is better than a casual cook.

There is still a market for fine horses, for hand-made shoes, for really good draftsmen, for actually competent 'phone operators or even for actually gifted piccolo players. They have to be good.

But, after all, there is nothing sacred pertaining to the art of music, nor any reason that a young man who has decided to make his career at the input end of a cornet, or the frets of a fiddle, has any special claim on society to keep him there. If he is good enough it will, even now.

Real art always automatically defends itself without gestures. The American Society of Composers, Authors and Musicians with their gory little booklet profess to be discussing an art but their real interest is in a trade—and trades are never hallowed.

THE STATUETTE

WHEN Paramount's production authority got around to making Sudermann's "Song of Songs," it seems to have decided to make it into what might be called "Statue of Statues." The statuette has become the sign and symbol of Miss Dietrich's new vehicle. It is not the loveliest bit of sculpture in the world but it is as nude as any, which appears to have been the purpose. Meanwhile the exhibitor continues to voice his demand for product addressed at the big average American taste—a taste that stands for nudity only in foreign art and the bathroom.

SHABBY BROADWAY

WE seem to recall that some months ago some civic association was going to do things to Broadway with a view to restoring it to the status of a city street. A midafternoon stroll this week indicates very little progress. Excellent architecture, expensive buildings and once reputably garbed theatres are thrown into a miserable jumble of carnival fronts and Coney Island merchandising. What with the screen, the stage and radio, Times Square is the amusement capital of the world, and in a setting that is no credit to the amusement business in any of its branches. Theatres were built as places of some institutional importance. As now conducted in Broadway they might in the main be temporary storeroom auditoriums for medicine shows.

All of the glory and respectability and good taste of the show business was not removed to Sixth Avenue by the Radio City projects. Broadway is still Broadway—to those who have not recently seen and smelled it.

HAPPY LANDING

Aviator Wiley Post's globe-circling accomplishment of a week ago netted him a handsome contract with Radio City Music Hall, where on Thursday he will initiate a series of personal appearances. The remuneration is $5,000 for the week, plus 50 per cent of the gross over $60,000. Lee Trenholm, manager of the aviator, negotiated the contract with Samuel Rothafel. They agreed that Mr. Post's best act would be to tell about his great flight. . . .

PRINCE MIKE, ACTOR

Czar Nicholas II, the late, played only a supporting role to "Prince Mike Romanoff," equally familiar, and elusive, to the Government as Harry F. Gerguson, in his first venture in motion pictures, one-reel production directed by Johnnie Walker Burlesque of the real life serial hare-and-hound chase, the two star members of the projection room audience, William B. Herlands, assistant United States attorney, and E. Fred Sweet, probation officer, betrayed not a wrinkle of smile or chuckle, saving their critic's report for Federal Judge John C. Knox. Prince Mike is on probation for three years. An item on governmental control of the industry. . . .

MAMMY!

The show not only must go on, but Al Jolson "must come down and see it," suggests Darryl Zanuck of 20th Century Pictures, which has purchased Walter Winchell's story, "Broadway Thru a Keyhole," that brought a convincing blow from the "Mammy singer" aimed more or less at the mobile jaw of the columnist at the Hollywood Stadium last Friday night. Says Jolson: The story "threw mud at me and my wife (Ruby Keeler)." Says Winchell: "A good sock in the jaw is worth the $25,000 I got for the picture," and he had neither of them in mind in the scenario of the lowdown on Broadway celebrities. Says Hollywood and the world at large: "Mammy". . . .

INJURY RACKET

It's a racket, protest Independent Theatre Owners of Greater Kansas City, against the 12 to 40 cents a seat increase in liability insurance rates. Faked were several of the claims for mishaps, charges Jay Means, president, with nine claims for alleged injuries for tripping the not light, but possibly fantastic, over carpets, since the high rate went into effect. In three cases he found one attorney represented all claimants, and complains insurance companies won't cooperate. . . .

"DID!"—"DIDN'T!"

To Walter Reade's white gaberdine Hawaiian swimming trunks, high-waisted but non-chested, hangs a tale of much excitement at the municipal beach of the Deal, N. J., Casino, involving an unnecessary trek to the police station in a police patrol, by the theatre operator, and a physician's call to calm down the 77-yeared mayor. Mr. Reade is quoted as saying eleven policemen exerted the majesty of the law in arresting him and that later in New York he was informed a warrant was awaiting him in Deal charging his English was not the King's own. Commissioner Sidney H. Rhodes speaking for the Deal Borough administration: Tops are not required on bathing suits at the beach, and the police, "one little bit of a policeman," was called because of the adjectives, not the tops. Weather note: cooler today and tomorrow. . . .

"FREEZE-OUT"

Into their own hands directors of the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association have taken the case of Roy Dunnuck, independent exhibitor of Atchison, Kan., who says distributors refuse to sell him pictures. Summoned by the association board, five exchange managers said they don't sell second-runs in the smaller towns of the state. Several others indicated willingness to negotiate with the exhibitor but declared contracts overtures had missed fire because of smoke over rental prices. Paramount and Fox said they'd stand pat against selling second-runs. Universal said a ten-year franchise prevents deals with other theatres in Fox Midland towns. Directors are said to have instructed Mr. Dunnuck to call upon exchanges for either first-run or second-run pictures. Still on is Attorney General Roland Boynton's statewide investigation of selling policies of the larger distributors toward independents. . . .

FORGOTTEN FIRE

On the smouldering fire of resentment, budding controversy between Warner Brothers and the blooming Twentieth Century production plant of Darryl Zanuck, Joseph Schenck, has been tossed quenching water, for the moment at least, apparently. Last week to the Zanuck company were loaned Dubin and Warren, ace song writing team from Burbank, to write musical numbers for Twentieth's "Moulin Rouge," Constance Bennett's first under new alliance. Music publishing rights to the results of the pair's efforts remain with Witmark, Warner affiliate. Yet, however, may the fire break out afresh. . . .

PROJECTION PROOF

With the proof of the pudding an incontestable demonstration of the accuracy of a contention, theatre owning interests of Sheboygan, Wis., last week won a signal victory from its common council. In May was passed an ordinance requiring one operator for each projection machine, shooting overhead skyward. To the council theatre owners brought concrete proof, indisputably indicating the impossibility of films catching fire, causing serious damage. Repealed was the obnoxious ordinance, sad were projectionists, happy were theatre owners. . . .

NEW MUSIC TAX TO EQUALIZE THEATRE PAYMENTS AND RECOUP MUSIC LOSSES

Talking Motion Picture and the Radio Have "Murdered" Business Life of Music, Says American Society of Composers

New Scale of "Tax" on Theatres Will Increase Assessment, With Heaviest Load on Houses Giving Music Most Importance

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The talking motion picture and the radio are charged by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, with the "murder" of the business life of music. Both will be penalized, the film industry by a substantial increase in per seat royalties which are paid by exhibitors for public performing rights, and the broadcasters by additional royalty levies.

Radio is the principal "culprit," the Society charges. Constant rendition daily of musical numbers has reduced to a negligible amount the gross sales and attendant royalties from sheet music and phonograph records. However, no increase in the rate of royalty payments may be made in the radio field at this time because of a contract with broadcasters which specifies the scale to be paid until Aug. 31, 1935.

Broadcasters now pay annually to the Society approximately $1,600,000 for public performing rights to the copyrighted music of ASCAP members. The rate is now 3 per cent of the net profit of each independent station, or chain. In 1934, this will automatically rise to 4 per cent, and in 1935 the broadcasters will pay 5 per cent. The Society will then enforce a new and considerably higher scale. The present formula, which became effective Sept. 1, 1932, allows for deduction of 15 per cent of the net receipts for advertising agent or agency commissions.

Theatres Will Be Affected Soon

Of concern to exhibitors is an increase in the royalty rate for copyrighted music renditions in their theatres. All theatres now pay yearly to ASCAP a flat fee of 10 cents per seat, regardless of the extent to which they use the music of the Society's members.

Since theatre receipts have fallen off and hundreds of properties darkened, the exhibition division now pays to the Society about $860,000 annually for performing rights. This total is based on the present low of about 8,600,000 seats. If the average capacity approximates 800, the total number of theatres actually operating is about 11,000. The difference between this number and the generally accepted figure of 13,000 represents closings because of local business conditions, receiverships, bankruptcies, abandoned properties, and, perhaps, a few hundred theatres which do not pay any tax to the Society.

Motion picture owners have paid to the Society some $12,000,000 since the royalties first were levied.

E. C. Mills, general manager of the American Society, is now working out a plan for increasing the theatre royalty payments. "As soon as the validity of economic recovery permits of an increase, the Society will enforce a new scale," said Mr. Mills. "First we will give the theatres a chance to recover before taking any action; you can't throw a stick at a dog these days without hitting a receiver."

This increase in theatre royalty rates, however, is not entirely prompted by the influence of talkers on the returns from sheet music and the like. Mr. Mills pointed out that it also will be made in order to equalize the Society's present policy of compelling all theatres, regardless of the extent to which they use music, to pay a flat fee of ten cents for each seat per year. "Substantial increases will be effected for the de luxe properties and for the large first-runs," said Mr. Mills. "All others will probably pay more, too."

Theatre Payments Started in 1914

The equalization will be based on five factors: (a) admission prices; (b) location; (c) capacity; (d) relative use of music to the program; (e) relative value of music to the theatre. Whether the small houses will get a reduction in the 10-cent rate has not been decided.

At present, a small 600-seat theatre using only a piano pays the same 10-cent rate as a 5,000-seat house which employs musical numbers during 50 to 80 per cent of its program, staging symphony orchestral entertainment, organ presentations and musical stage performances. Then, too, music at the small house, charging only 10 or 15 cents admission, is but an incidental part of the appeal of the program. But at the larger houses, which charge as much as 85 cents, and a few even more, the music part of the bill has definite selling appeal, according to Mr. Mills.

Motion picture theatre owners commenced paying royalties in 1914 for performing rights for ASCAP-controlled music. From that time until 1917 collections were made with great difficulty. Various fees were charged, ranging from 3 and 4 cents per seat annually, to 9 and 10 cents. The Society campaigned from 1920 to 1922 to bring the scale up to the 10-cent rate for all types of operations. It has remained at that level ever since, although exhibitors individually and collectively, have been protesting the "tax" for years.

Planks for abolition of the seat tax have been a part of dozens of campaign platforms of exhibitor leaders. Sydney S. Cohen, militant president of the old MPTO, probably was the most active in fighting the payments. However, in recent years, comparatively little has been said about the matter. Because of the seriousness of a violation of the copyright law, under which the royalties are levied, exhibitors generally have remitted promptly.

800 Members in U. S.

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has 800 members throughout the United States and 44,000 in 16 foreign countries. Officers are: President, Gene Buck; vice-presidents, Louis Bernstein and Jerome Kern; secretary, Joseph Young; assistant secretary, Robert Crawford; treasurer, Saul H. Bornstein; assistant treasurer, Sigmund Romberg; general counsel, Nathan Burkan; general manager, E. C. Mills. The directorate comprises all officers, except Messrs. Burkan and Mills, and E. F. Bitner, Irving Caesar, Walter Douglas, Max Dreyfus, George Fischer, Walter Fischer, Otto Harbach, Raymond Hubbel, Edgar Leslie, George Meyer, Jack Mills, E. H. Morris, Gustave Schirmer, Oley Speaks, Deems Taylor, Will Von Tilzer, Harry Young.

ASCAP collects royalties only on performing rights. Its principal sources of revenue are (1) radio; (2) motion picture theatres; (3) 4,000 dancehalls; (4) cabarets and the like. The rate for dancehalls scales from $30 to $300, returning between $120,000 and $1,200,000 yearly. No part of the score charges collected from exhibitors by

PRODUCTION RECOVERING FROM STRIKE OF 6,000 ON WEST COAST

Studio Executives Point Out That Walkouts at This Time Are Out of Sympathy with Roosevelt's Program

Motion picture production in Hollywood was recovering Wednesday from a temporary setback which followed a strike of studio cameramen, soundmen and technicians. Interference with a steady flow of product to exhibitors appeared highly improbable, nor was picketing attempted. Some 6,000 members of the Hollywood unions walked off the various lots over the week-end. Production was halted for a day or so at some places and curtailed at others. New workers were being recruited.

The usual conflicting claims on the causes and effects of the strike emanated from the headquarters of both sides. Regardless, producers emphasized the point that strikes at this time, for any reason, were entirely out of sympathy with the campaign of the President to speed business to normalcy, and especially with that part of Mr. Roosevelt's program condemning over-aggression by a minority group which threatens to jeopardize business progress or interfere with the formulation of a code of operation and fair practice under the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Hays Advises Roosevelt

The eyes of the White House were on the situation Tuesday. A wire had been sent to the President from Hollywood by Will H. Hays. The contents were not divulged.

Radio news commentators and the press brought the matter to the public during the week by special wire dispatches. Typical of several similar reactionary opinions on the justification of a strike was that voiced Tuesday night by Boake Carter, Columbia Broadcasting commentator, who said: "It is hardly the time to promote a strike, whatever the cause, which is apt to throw anywhere from 2,000 to 10,000 people out of work. President Roosevelt is doing his utmost to put this country back on its feet from every conceivable point of view. The motion picture studio workers and their bosses ought to be whipped into a more cooperative frame of mind and be forced to wait until the blanket code has had a chance, before trying to settle their disputes by such unnecessary tactics."

While the production executives in the West were combining forces, under leadership of their special union intermediary, Pat Casey, to effect emergency measures, distribution officials in New York continued uninterruptedly with final arrangements for merchandising 1933-34 product.

Studios were crowded to production capacity on the eve of the strike. Thirty-four pictures actually were shooting and 56 others were scheduled to start within a few weeks. Activities at the end of the week were at a point 20 per cent higher than the previous week.

Strike Began July 15

The Hollywood studio strike started July 15 at Harry Cohn's Columbia plant, which was darkened immediately when sound technicians walked out because a pay raise and term contracts were not forthcoming. The company's decision to make a strenuous effort to abolish all union labor from its studios was met with defiance by the union group, which is headed by Harold Smith and is known as International Sound Technicians, Local 695.

Mr. Casey was sent from New York, but refused to talk about arbitration with the Smith union, saying it did not have jurisdiction. Mr. Casey started discussions with William Elliott's International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. This brought forth a threat from Smith of a general walkout throughout the production colony unless arbitration was undertaken. Mr. Smith said his organization represented 665 sound technicians, of which only seven belong to the IBEW, "and it is obvious our union holds jurisdiction over this strike."

Mr. Casey refused to negotiate a settlement with the Smith group and, accordingly, Mr. Smith and the national IATSE issued orders to sound technicians at 11 studios to cease work at midnight last Saturday. This stopped production and threatened to throw out of employment some 30,000 actors and other workers.

Advertisements were inserted in the press by Paramount, Metro, Fox, United Artists, Warners, Universal, Educational, Radio, Hal Roach, Harold Lloyd and Bryan Foy studios, offering employment "for men capable of doing any kind of sound work." The ads brought dozens of non-union workers. When they began duties Monday morning, Richard J. Green, coast agent of the national IATSE, charged that the studios had broken their basic agreement by engaging non-union help, and for that reason he called a strike, effective Monday midnight, of all union cameramen, studio projectionists, film editors, laboratory workers, mechanics, certain electricians, "grips," property men, set dressers, special-effect and property makers and makers of miniature sets.

Preparations Made to Resume

On Tuesday morning, Columbia continued in darkness and the Roach, Radio, Fox and Paramount studios did not open. Warners and Metro were working with five companies, Universal had one shooting. However, with non-union sound men quickly filling the ranks of the strikers, the tensity of the situation lessened and preparations were made to resume activities Wednesday.

Six thousand union workers were said to be on strike, but Louis B. Mayer, speaking for the producers, said: "There is a very small percentage of the working forces involved and we expect to keep on the job every man and woman who wants to work."

Thirty thouscand other persons, earning $1,500,000 weekly, and a $200,000,000 production budget were temporarily in jeopardy. Producers' contracts contain clauses reserving the right to cancel employment of stars and players in the event of strikes which tie up production.

Handling the situation for the producers was a committee composed of B. B. Kahane, Jack Warner and Mr. Mayer.

Heads of the various unions accused Mr. Casey of "drawing a red herring across the trail" in order to "defeat the purpose of the soundmen's union to obtain decent working conditions and livable wages."

Erpi and RCA were reported concerned over the operation of their recording equipment by non-union workers who might be incompetent.

Forty independent producers were not affected by the strike.

There was no picketing, nor were there disturbances of any kind, as Mr. Casey appealed to the IATSE to end the conflict. Said Casey: "On Monday evening a telegram was sent to the International labor union, party to the basic working agreement, protesting against the strike of the IATSE and demanding that the IATSE put its men back to work. At a meeting of the International groups in New York William C. Elliott, president of the IATSE, availed himself of his right and formally withdrew from the producers' basic working agreement."

Mr. Casey said that unions which are parties to the basic agreement and are not participating in the strike include the international brotherhood of carpenters and joiners and the electrical group.

Distribution Executives Continue Merchandising Plans Without Halt; Cameramen, Soundmen and Technicians Join in Strike

Distribution Branches Making Progress on 1933-34 Plans

The distribution divisions of the large motion picture companies continued during the week, despite the Hollywood studio strike, to complete plans for selling 1933-34 product to exhibitors. All distributors, except Warners, had concluded sales conventions, and Warners was about ready to deliver to its sales staff the details of next season's program, to total about 60 releases.

Of importance, too, were the successful efforts of various managements in New York in strengthening corporate structures to permit the financing of a steady flow of product.

Principal developments at the eastern home offices were:

Columbia concluded arrangements with Walter Futter to distribute his "Laughing with Medbury" series of one-reel subjects, all travelogues, in which John P. Medbury will narrate.

While Fox was strengthening its promotional ad sales staff in the field, stockholders in New York adopted the management's plan for reconstructing the financial structure (see page 18), thereby pointing the way to complete rehabilitation of the company's corporate entity and placing it in the favorable position where Fox may now be expected to continue, without possibilities of interruption, the regular business of making and distributing motion pictures.

Fox's ad sales manager, Lee Balsey, was authorized to make the following additions and promotions: P. M. Foley was made ad sales manager at Des Moines; W. Goryl was placed in charge of poster sales in Detroit, with George F. Eads assistant; M. Grassgreen, in charge at Boston, and H. R. Buchmaster in Kansas City, with C. D. Crawford assistant; F. C. Bernard, head ad salesman at San Francisco, C. Rossiter assisting.

In Philadelphia, S. E. Diamond, formerly assistant cashier at Universal exchange, was named ad sales manager; in Milwaukee, Bert Perosch succeeds E. P. Rosenberg, formerly MGM Milwaukee booker, as head of poster sales; William Clayton, formerly of Chicago, is now at Minneapolis, with M. Cuffel assisting; William Guinan, recently with Fox West Coast, is in charge at St. Louis, and J. J. Aldrich succeeds J. Swanson at Denver.

Mayfair Going Ahead

Mayfair Pictures let it be known that the recent resignation of its general manager, George W. Weeks, who is ill, will in no way interfere with plans for 1933-34, during which 12 features will be distributed.

Majestic Pictures was preparing to open its annual sales convention in Chicago on Saturday. Sessions will be held at the Drake hotel over the weekend, and will be attended by Herman

PRODUCERS PLEDGE SUPPORT TO BLANKET CODE; PAY RAISES BEGUN

Attorney Sol A. Rosenblatt of Burkan's Staff Is Named to Preside at Hearings When Film Industry Presents Code

With acceptance of a blanket code for wage increases by American industries, President Roosevelt this week asked all employers to adopt a uniform policy of higher pay and shorter working hours stretching throughout the nation's industrial structure and to Hollywood itself. Individual action by all major companies in support of this code is expected by August 1, and further conferences between distributors and exhibitors on an industry code will be deferred until after that date. The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America this week asked Washington for interpretation of applicability of certain clauses in the President's proposal.

Sol A. Rosenblatt, attorney on the staff of Nathan Burkan, theatrical and motion picture attorney, was appointed Tuesday by General Hugh S. Johnson to preside over hearings when the motion picture industry presents its code for the approval of the authorities. In addition to attending to the film industry's problems, Mr. Rosenblatt already is handling the code now in preparation for the legitimate theatre.

Roosevelt Makes Radio Appeal

On Monday evening President Roosevelt took to the air waves and explained the reasons behind industrial and farm control. The President appealed to American employers "in the name of humanity and patriotism" to sign the blanket code and lead the country out of the "economic hell" of the last four years.

"If all employers will act together to shorten hours and raise wages, we can put people back to work," he said. "No employer will suffer, because the relative level of competitive costs will advance by the same amount for all.

"But, if any considerable group should lag or shirk, this great opportunity will pass us by and we will go into another desperate Winter. This must not happen."

Large Producers Pledge Support

President Roosevelt Tuesday received a telegram from Will H. Hays pledging support of the blanket agreement by all major producers, effective July 31.

On Tuesday, Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, telegraphed Mr. Roosevelt accepting his blanket code for industry recovery. Mr. Warner said in part:

"We pledge you our whole-hearted support of this code which you have announced for all industry to become effective as rapidly as we can put it into effect."

Following his wire to the President, Mr. Warner Wednesday ordered salaries of all Warner employees now receiving less than the minimum wage prescribed in the Administration's blanket code be increased to conform to the figure in the code, effective immediately. This means that dependent upon the size of the city where employed, the minimum salary for all employees of Warner Bros. and its subsidiaries will be $15, $14.50, and $14 a week.

The increase, effective Monday, will add approximately $25,000 to the Warner weekly payroll. Ushers, particularly, will be benefited.

The first increase in salaries in the film industry under the blanket code took place this week when Frank Moser and Paul Terry, producers of the Terry-Toon cartoons, increased the salaries of all employees 10 per cent.

Allied of New Jersey also wired its approval of the blanket code and informed Mr. Roosevelt of its intention to cooperate with NIRA.

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences this week advised its members to insist upon "fair and reasonable" competition as a basic principle in any code adopted for the film industry. In a report to members by the Academy's Industrial Recovery Code Committee a preliminary draft committed the organization to cooperate with all interested groups such as actors, labor, technicians, clerical workers and employers. In its advisory message to all members the committee said the numbers of persons employed in pictures could be increased greatly by reduction of the present number of working hours. It was suggested, however, that the maximum hours provision of the code be drawn

ROOSEVELT NAMES COLVIN BROWN AS RECOVERY COUNCIL EXECUTIVE

President Roosevelt this week announced his appointment of Colvin Brown, vice president and general manager of Quigley Publications, to the post of assistant secretary of the President's Recovery Council, of which Frank C. Walker, vice president of Comerford Theatres, Inc., and treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, is secretary.

This brings two of the motion picture industry's widely known and aggressive younger executives close into the service of President Roosevelt and his recovery campaign.

COLVIN BROWN

Mr. Walker's appointment was announced some two weeks ago and Mr. Brown has already entered into the activities of his new post, spending the first days of the week at the Recovery Council offices in Washington and the remainder at his office in Broadway with Quigley Publications.

Mr. Brown was actively associated with Mr. Walker in the affairs of the treasurer's office at the Biltmore in New York through the presidential campaign.

At Elgin in Illinois where the watches come from, Mr. Brown began his working career on the Elgin Daily News as a reporter and presently became news editor of that paper, meanwhile representing in the region a number of metropolitan dailies. He extended his newspaper experience as manager of the syndicate department of the New York Evening Mail and went thence to the publicity and advertising department of the Mutual Film Corporation, becoming the department head. He acquired experience in the export and import field in the David P. Howell's organization. His next important post was as New York representative and vice president of the Thomas H. Ince organization. Subsequently he became vice president of F.B.O. and executive vice president of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Mr. Brown joined Quigley Publications coincident with the acquisition by Martin Quigley of Motion Picture News and Exhibitors Daily Review, evolving the merged publications into Motion Picture Daily and Motion Picture Herald.

Mr. Brown has a farm near North Stamford in Connecticut, an apartment in Park Avenue, an office in Broadway and one in the Treasury Building, Washington. With him unemployment is a report not an experience. Like the Pennsylvania railroad, he goes somewhere every hour on the hour.

PAY RAISES UNDERWAY IN INDUSTRY

carefully to prevent increased costs that would result in future curtailment of labor.

More important than increasing wages and reducing maximum working hours, the committee feels, would be economical production of pictures with wider public appeal than heretofore.

If pictures which the public wish to see are produced and if income from such pictures is wisely distributed, the report adds, both producer and employee would be aided. This could be accomplished only through fair competition, the committee holds, adding:

"Under fair competition no company can be stupid, can overpay, or overbuild and remain in business. The only escape from stereotyped stagnation is the ruthless exclusion of any trade practice which gives any company, any individual or any group a competitive advantage not absolutely essential to the orderly conduct of the business."

Preliminary Draft Summarized

The preliminary draft of a code, summarized has the following clauses:

Protection of individual rights under fair competition and safeguarding of showmanship values; a maximum work week and spreading of hours to take care of the greatest number of workers; minimum wages for extra players and other low bracket employees; overtime work to carry a penalty; no centralized talent booking office; protection to small producers; elimination of unfair trade practices in production, distribution and exhibition; elimination of the practice of using temporary off-pay studio workers as extras.

An analysis of the research involved in acquiring material for the report reveals that the existing minimum contract for artists and day players' agreement can be amended to take care of a majority of pay and working conditions proposed. These cover all working conditions for artists, but the only work limit safeguard for minor bit players is the 12 hours' rest period.

This preliminary draft will be presented to the Academy board and will then be passed on to to the membership with the entire text.

In conclusion, the report stated that "no sane person contemplates unreasonable interference with the rights and privileges of management. All that is contemplated is a sane balance between slow strangulation from monopolistic practices and sudden death from cut-throat competition."

Any member of the Writers' Guild who does not live up to the spirit and letter of his contract may be brought to the attention of the Guild by producers, it was decided Tuesday in Hollywood. Penalties include private reprimand, public reprimand, suspension from the Guild, expulsion from the Guild, or a fine of from $54 to $1,000. Joseph L. Mankiewicz, Guild secretary, in a letter to producers, said the "ethical conduct of writers is a matter of concern to all companies and their executives." Members who fail to abide by the penalties imposed by the Guild can be sued for sums up to $10,000 under terms of the membership contract.

Bearing on Receipts

President Roosevelt's plan to promote a nationwide campaign for increased wages and shorter working hours, to be completed by the end of this month, will, if accomplished, have a definite bearing upon motion picture theatre receipts, insofar as there will be a greater number of persons with more leisure time on their hands and a still greater number with more money to spend on entertainment.

General Hugh S. Johnson, federal administrator of NIRA, last week outlined the campaign as being comparable to the Liberty Loan drives of the pre-war and war days in 1917 and 1918. Employers subscribing to wage increases and shortened working hours will receive posters to be displayed publicly, testifying to their participation in the President's program.

This week General Johnson received assurances from Allied States' national headquarters in Washington pledging support of Mr. Roosevelt's plan. In a bulletin to members, issued late last week, Allied urged its exhibitors to comply with the President's wishes on labor relations, first as a matter of "patriotism" and, secondly, because of "self-preservation, since the publicity and propaganda to be released will constitute a thinly-veiled blacklisting of all employers who do not get in step with the program," the bulletin said. The bulletin also pointed out that the program includes such classifications of theatre employees as ticket sellers, doormen, ushers, bookers, elevator conductors and managers receiving less than $35 a week.

Allied To Act, Says Myers

"Various proposed codes for the motion picture industry have been made public," said Abram F. Myers, national president of Allied. "Allied has received the well considered comments of a few leaders on these and now urges all leaders to get in their objections, if any, to these drafts. The time is now approaching when Allied must formulate a final policy for exhibitors based on these comments, on information sent in as a result of the regional meetings held and to be held, and on the various proposals and agreements made to and with representatives of the distributors in the past."

The President has divided all workers into two classes: white collar workers and mechanical workers. Under the nationwide campaign for increased wages and shorter hours, which, if the plans are completed by the end of this month, will last from August until the end of the year, hours for the first class, or white collar worker, must not be more than 40 hours in any one week, and for mechanical workers, not more than 35 hours a week. Wages for the white collar class are on a sliding scale according to the population of the districts wherein they live, with a minimum of $12 a week for those living in communities of 2,500 population or less. For the mechanical class, wages are to be 40 cents per hour, unless the hourly rate for the same type of work on July 15, 1929 was less than 40 cents, in which case the rate shall be not less than the hourly rate on that date, but in no event less than 30 cents per hour.

FUNNYMEN OF JAPAN; CHAPLIN KEPT HIS HEAD

Forgetting that Charles Spencer Chaplin is a British subject, several young Japanese naval officers last year planned an attempt on the comedian's life in the hope of precipitating a war between Japan and the United States. This startling testimony recently was brought out, and verified, in the trial of ten naval officers for the assassination of Premier Tsuyoshi Inukai, May 15, 1932. Charlie was to have been the next on the list, but somehow the boys never got around to it—probably because the reception at which the Chaplin debacle was to have occurred never took place. Anyhow, it's probably just as well, for dear old Charlie would have been caught with his legs crossed, drinking tea, as is the Japanese custom.

Supply Dealers Plan Code

The third annal convention of the independent theatre supply dealer's association, which opens at the Stevens hotel in Chicago, Friday, will prepare a code of ethics and fair practices for this branch. Views are now being solicited from all members as to what shall, or shall not, be included.

A tentative draft of a code for the laboratory branch of the industry was completed Tuesday by the code committee of the Motion Picture Laboratories Association of America in New York. The proposal will be submitted to the entire membership late this week.

In New England this week exhibitors are making practically united opposition to clauses in the MPTOA exhibition codes to ban double featuring. Probably no section would be so hard hit by such action as New England, for with very few exceptions, double feature bills are given in all the better grade theatres throughout the territory.

In Jackson, Miss., this week, the suggested codes for exhibition and distribution were read to a meeting of the MPTO of Mississippi by Ed Kuykendall, state and national president. The code was adopted two weeks ago in Chicago after a lengthy conference between producers and exhibitors and is now said to be ready for submission to Washington.

Wehrenberg Calls Meeting

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, has called a general meeting of the members for Thursday in St. Louis for the purpose of considering and acting upon the official code for the exhibition end of the industry adopted in Chicago.

Hailing the industrial code as the teeth of decentralization, John R. Freuler, president of Monarch, sees an end to "paternalistic" tendencies in exhibition before the end of the year.

"Exhibition, freed of its controlling influence, would offer both major and independent production its most valuable stimulus," he said. "This would result in substantial rewards, unhampered by unprofitable and far-flung exhibition interests. Among other highly important probabilities is the reopening of hundreds of closed houses on equal contractual footing."

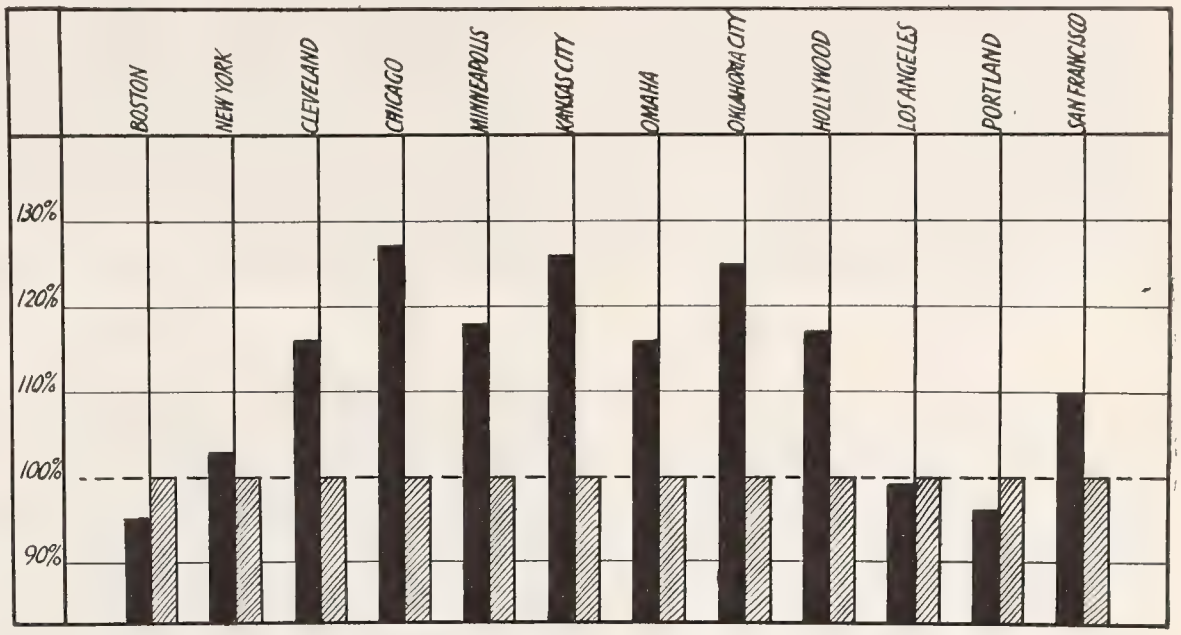
Following a meeting in New York late last week of advertising and industrial film producers of the New York district to consider the advisability of organizing a national association of non-theatrical producers and also to formulate a code, other non-theatricals throughout the country are being notified of steps and asked for expressions of opinion.

Throughout the nation a spirit of optimism prevails. Thousands of merchants and manufacturers already have pledged to President Roosevelt that they will place the emergency reemployment plan in effect without waiting to receive pledge forms.

Meanwhile many more industrial codes have been submitted to General Johnson, including oil and woolen textiles, rayon weaving, men's clothing, steel, lace and cast iron soil pipe, with hearings coming within a week.

GROSSES IN JULY AHEAD OF 1932; DOLLAR DECLINE ADDS $12,000,000

A Steady Improvement Since Spring Noted by Wall Street Journal; Also 40 Per Cent Increase to Foreign Income



General improvement of theatre business in the four-week period from June 17 to July 8 is shown in a comparison with the previous four weeks, May 20 to June 10, from Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of box office grosses. Nine of the twelve cities showed gains. The solid black column represents the more recent period, the shaded column the previous four weeks. The 100 per cent line in each case represents the average for the earlier period.

Wall Street last week noted official recognition of the fact that the trend in motion picture business is upward, submitting documentary evidence to prove it.

Financial editors and analysts the country over, pointing out ever increasing signs of the forward swing, with charts of cotton and steel, car-loadings and so on, now have turned to the surest sign to the buyers and sellers of motion picture entertainment: better box-office grosses. Then the Wall Street Journal, reflecting reports which had reached the canyons of the nation's financial center, came forth with a pagewide heading which read:

"Movie Business Turns Upward."

Not only did the conservative Dow, Jones Wall Street publishing authorities reveal an increase in grosses in July, for the first time in several years, but they also recorded a steady improvement since last spring, when theatre receipts were running 30 per cent behind 1932.

40 Per Cent More Foreign Income

The decline of the dollar abroad already has added 40 per cent to the foreign income of American distributors, with cash benefits estimated by Wall Street Journal at $12,000,000.

"Income of American moving picture companies so far this year has been materially increased by the decline in the dollar and the advance in foreign securities, particularly sterling and South American exchanges," said Wall Street Journal. "Foreign business has always formed an important part of the revenues of film companies and profits have held up well from this source while domestic business has been unprofitable.

"With the pound around $4.75, against $3.50 last year, there is a difference of nearly 40% in dollar income brought from abroad. Many of the important film companies are making sure of these profits by selling foreign exchange futures. Leaders in the industry estimate that the exchange situation may make a difference in favor of the American film companies of $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 this year, or from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000 a company, according to volume of foreign sales. Foreign revenues are now running nearly 10 per cent ahead of last year.

"About 50% of the foreign income of American producers comes from the British Empire and a large part of the remainder from South America, where the improvement has been even greater," said the Dow, Jones Journal.

"The industry is looking forward to a material improvement in income in the next few months in line with the increased public buying power.

"It is, of course, too early to predict earnings per share on the amusement stocks. However, there are indications that the downward trend in income has been halted and that with expenses heavily cut, and leases and mortgage interest rates reduced, the important companies may be in the black in the final quarter.

"Improvement in income would facilitate the reorganization plans for Radio-Keith-Orpheum and Paramount-Publix Corp., now in receivership. Recapitalization plans for Fox have been . . . acted on by stockholders. . . . No other reorganizations in the industry now seem likely."

Further reflections of the sentiment prevailing throughout the nation against any proposed increase in admission scales at this time as set forth in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, are seen in additional reports:

The most important development in the field in the past week was the action of Governor White, of Ohio, who refused to affix his signature to the state senate's sales tax program, thus allowing it to become a law without signing. The tax includes, among other things, a 10 per cent impost on admissions of 40 cents and over, and went into effect immediately. Suburban and neighborhood exhibitors throughout Ohio look upon this as a serious move, reasoning that first-run houses now charging more than 40 cents will reduce prices, thereby increasing competition.

While Ohio theatre owners were said to be considering admission raises, it is expected no action will be taken before September 1.

A highlight of the 34-point code adopted in Iowa last week by the Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa, as well as unaffiliated exhibitors in that territory, is a clause for a minimum admission scale of 15 cents. The code provides that distributors shall refuse to enter contracts licensing the exhibition of their film by exhibitors who "refuse to maintain the minimum price provided for in the contract."
